HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 18, 1909.

[Continuation of legislative day of Monday, February 15, 1909.]

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 11 o'clock a. m. by the Speaker.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits a report from the Commitee on Rules, which the Clerk will read.

House resolution 573.

Resolved, That the conference report on the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, be, and hereby is, disagreed to; that the House insists on its disagreement to the Senate amendments to the said bill and asks a further conference with the Senate.

House concurrent resolution 67.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the conferees on the disagreements of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, be, and hereby are, authorized to take into consideration as if in disagreement the portion of the said bill relating to the salary of the Secretary of State, and also to report on any provision in relation to the law affecting said salary.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask the previous question.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if there will be any time for discussion?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, there will be twenty minutes on a side for discussion after the previous question is ordered.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 51, noes 30.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I will have to call the attention of the Chair to the fact there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is evident that a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members; as many as favor ordering the previous question will, as their names are called, answer "aye," those who are opposed will answer "no," those who do not vote will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Did not the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] carry this matter over until to-morrow? Was not that the language of it, that it should be called up immediately after the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. But, without deciding as to whether it carried it over to the calendar or legislative day, the Committee on Rules, which has the privilege of reporting at any time for the consideration of the House, report this resolution, and if the House should adopt this proposed order of business that is the subsequent action of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The query, Mr. Speaker, was, Was not the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to take this matter up to-day immediately after the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. It was not. Aside from that, a majority of the House can at any time change its order of business and consider any bill or any matter that is pending under the rule.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this to-day or yesterday?

The SPEAKER. It is the calendar day of to-day; it is the legislative day of last Monday. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 107, answered "present" 6, not voting 115, as follows:

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 157, the noes 107, answered "present" 6. The ayes have it, and the previous question is ordered. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is entitled to twenty minutes. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, there is not, in my judgment, any necessity for spending very much time in a discussion of this proposition. This resolution becomes necessary in order to relieve the House and the Senate from a legislative tangle in which they have become involved by reason of taking inconsistent action with respect to the salary of the Secretary of State at two separate times. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill passed the House on the 11th of December, and passed the Senate on the 22d of January. On the 26th of January it was sent to conference. At the time that the bill went to conference, under existing law, the salary of the Secretary of State was $12,000 per annum; and that bill made an appropriation, in accordance with the law, for the payment of $12,000 for the ensuing fiscal year. On the 11th day of February the Senate passed a bill, and on the 15th the House passed the same bill providing that the salary of the Secretary of State should be reduced from $12,000 to $8,000, and that it should take effect so as to reduce the salary to $8,000 from the 4th of March and for the ensuing fiscal year. The situation, then, was this: The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill had been passed pursuant to law and made provision for the salary that was then required by law. When this subsequent action was taken reducing the salary, this bill was in conference, and the question, therefore, as to the inconsistency of the two provisions was not presented to the House or the Senate until the report of the committee of conference was presented yesterday. It becomes necessary now, therefore, to reconcile the action of the House and Senate on these two different occasions, and the purpose of this rule is to effect this reconciliation.

The rule proposes to disagree to the Senate amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, to further insist on the House disagreement, and ask for a further conference. Second, the rule further proposes a concurrent resolution conferring upon the conferees the right to take into consideration as if in disagreement the portion of the bill relating to the salary of the Secretary of State, and authorizing the committee to report on any provision in relation to the law affecting said salary, so that the House and Senate may have an opportunity upon the coming in of the conference report to relieve itself from this legislative difficulty. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will my colleague allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. As I understand, the difficulty is this: That the pending appropriation bill, carrying $12,000 salary for the Secretary of State, having passed the House and also having passed the Senate without any amendment, that salary is not within the province of the committee of conference to consider at the present time, and it can not take action in this matter; hence the necessity of passing this resolution giving the conferees that power.

Mr. DALZELL. That is what I said. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a friend of mine this morning said he was very proud indeed that he was a Member of this House, it being the only House of Representatives that had ever been called into consultation in forming a President's Cabinet. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is right; the object of this resolution is to untie a legislative knot, to "get out of a legislative tangle." Men who undertake to do indirectly that which they are forbidden by constitutional law to do directly are very apt to find themselves in a legislative tangle before they are through with it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Beating the devil around the stump is always a tortuous and sometimes an embarrassing procedure to all men.

I do not feel like saying any more about this question. Everybody understands the situation. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very remarkable performance, a spectacular performance. On last Monday, when the bill to reduce the salary of Secretary of State, reported by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES], was up for action, numerous appeals were made from this side of the floor for one hour of debate, but acting, as I have a right to infer, under the direction of those in immediate authority in this House, time for discussion was denied. There was too much business to attend to. The session was fast drawing to a close, and no time could be given for debate. At that time the usual, the ordinary rules of this House, cursed and denounced by everybody, were in force. Under those rules a two-thirds vote of this body was required to pass the bill. It failed to receive the requisite two-thirds vote. Now, let me say if this had been a measure pertaining to the welfare of 20,000,000 farmers of our country, if it had related to the heroic and valiant old soldiers of our country, if it had pertained to the interest of 200,000 working people of this country, the Chair would have ruled, as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES] stated, that we have too much legislative work demanding attention to stop now to seek some device, some subterfuge, by which to pass such legislation. But I desire to call attention to the fact that under the peculiar circumstances and conditions the Speaker vacated his chair, convened his Committee on Rules, and within about twenty minutes of time that committee brought in a special rule here by which the first legislative knot was untied, by which the will as expressed under the ordinary rules which govern this House was perverted and the House was compelled, under the rule brought in by the Committee on Rules, to permit this legislation to pass. It went from us, and I presume to the President, and I suppose has received his approval.

But to-day we have another legislative knot which this House, in the closing hours of this session, is called upon to unravel and untie. Let me say to the gentlemen that the old Constitution which you are to-day further seeking to evade, annul, and repeal by your action is still in force in this country. And let me suggest that another old volume, a book seldom ever reflected upon or remembered by those in the majority here, but a book held sacred by the fathers of our country, declares somewhere—I am not sure that I quote it exactly; but if I fail, I put the responsibility on my distinguished colleague from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], because he told me it was right—this book says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you Republicans, the way of the transgressor is hard." [Laughter.] I want to say to you that you may unravel in your way this legislative knot; you may again unshackle the fetters of the Constitution which bar the gentleman whom you seek to qualify for a place, but, like Banquo's ghost, the Constitution of the United States, which still survives in the memory of patriots, will arise to confront you and will not down at your bidding.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to consume time, because I realize that we have no time for debate. Twenty minutes on a side is wholly insufficient to permit a discussion of this question. I yield back to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] the remainder of the time allotted to me. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the most monstrous legislative or parliamentary situation that has ever existed. The Committee on Rules have done many extraordinary things, but certainly it is wonderful to find them reporting a resolution in a form prohibited by the Revised Statutes of the United States. I doubt if in any legislative body there ever was such a combination as is found in this resolution.

There is, first, a simple House resolution providing that the conference report be disagreed to, that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and that the House ask a conference with the Senate. Then in the next paragraph there purports to be a concurrent resolution, it reading "Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the conferees," and so forth, be authorized to do certain things. Section 9 of the Revised Statutes provides:

No enacting or resolving words shall be used in any section of an act or resolution of Congress except the first.

Of course the Committee on Rules should not be expected to be familiar with the provisions of the Revised Statutes regulating the form of resolutions. [Laughter.] But this committee have attempted to do what I have stated; they have endeavored to do this extraordinary thing of combining a simple and a concurrent resolution. Perhaps the Speaker, or the Committee on Rules, or the Clerk of the House, or that distinguished gentleman so necessary to the proper procedure of this House may be able to tell in just what particular form the House will send this resolution to the Senate, as House or as a concurrent resolution. One part of the resolution necessarily must be sent to the Senate. Who will have authority to decide whether to cut off that part which is concurrent from that part which is simple?

Perhaps another rule will be brought in authorizing the Clerk of the House to retain the part purporting to be the House resolution and to send over that part which purports to be a concurrent resolution. However, Mr. Speaker, this illustrates the difficulties that are likely to embarrass great men when they attempt to trifle in a dignified manner with important matters. It might have been proper to have permitted the House, in an orderly way, to have disagreed to the conference report, to have permitted the Senate to ask that the bill be returned to them, and then have the Senate vacate its proceedings and take the bill up properly and regularly and propose an amendment to the particular item involved; but the insistence of certain distinguished gentlemen to hasten to its completion this act compels the commission of a parliamentary atrocity. I know of no other way to describe it. I doubt if the future historian of parliamentary business will be able to understand how this particular combination was ever possible in the House of Representatives, controlled by the party of that great parliamentarian, the late Thomas B. Reed. [Laughter.]

I present my congratulations to the Speaker and to that able committee over which he presides with so much skill and good nature. [Laughter.] Of course it was not to be expected that even if this objection had been suggested to his committee, they would have paid the slightest attention to it, accustomed as they are to overriding the minority, ignoring them, and depriving the representatives of the people of their simple rights. Who could expect they would either respect the rights of their own members or the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that they would stop at overriding the law after overriding the Constitution?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not agree with many of my colleagues that what was done the other day was an evasion of the Constitution. But I realize now that there was at least a secret suspicion in the minds of the majority of this House that there was such an evasion, because, if that were not so, they would have hesitated before they would have violated the ninth section of the Revised Statutes. Sometimes I have felt some excuse for not being familiar with the five thousandth or the six thousandth section of the Revised Statutes of the United States; but as a Member of Congress, with some slight pretensions as a lawyer, I certainly should not wish to confess that I had not read the ninth section of the Revised Statutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; if the gentleman will be quick, for I have only a few minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to inquire whether the gentleman thinks an act of a former Congress can bind a subsequent Congress in its own rules and procedure?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it can, but not a Republican House of Representatives, considering what has been done. I had in mind, Mr. Speaker, and if I be permitted, I shall ask the Speaker to rule whether this resolution can be voted on in its present shape, even under the operation of this special rule. Certainly it would be more in conformity with order if the Speaker should make his own committee retire and conform to the laws of the United States rather than to persist in having the House under his leadership violate the law. I shall at the proper time submit the question. I expect, however, to be treated as I have always been, but I have at least called the attention of the country to the terrible straits the Republican majority is at times brought in its attempts to enact legislation. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is never so much in his glory as he is when out in search of mare's nests. He succeeded in finding one this morning. There is no trouble about the resolution. The first part of it is notice to the Senate of what action has been taken by the House with respect to the conference report. The second part is an independent House resolution, which I presume the Senate, without the aid of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], will find the means of passing upon.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman need not be offended with me because he did not know of the ninth section of the Revised Statutes. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] stated the facts and the sequence of events with such accuracy and clearness that I simply wish to add a word as to one item, and that is that when this conference report was agreed upon by the conferees of the two Houses, although at that time the question of the eligibility of Mr. KNOX had been raised, it had not been suggested to either House to remedy it by repealing the salary law. Consequently that point was not before the minds of the conferees. If it had been, of course we would have had no power to change it at all, inasmuch as it was not in conference; but I think we might have been more liable to have thought of the fact that this appropriation law does conflict with the law which it was then contemplated to pass, though I am sure none of the conferees and apparently none of the individuals in either House or Senate who were particularly interested in managing the removal of that ineligibility thought of the fact that this bill did again increase the salary to $12,000. Apparently nobody thought of it until yesterday, when it occurred to one of the Republicans upon the Committee on Appropriations; and instead of suggesting the fact to his colleagues on the committee who had the bill in charge, so that they might consider the proper remedy, or instead of trying to discover himself some way to remedy it [laughter], he brought the fact in upon the floor of the House, and great confusion resulted. [Laughter.]

Yesterday we did not conceive at the moment just how the anomalous situation was to be remedied; consequently it was postponed until to-day, and this rule comes in to give the conferees jurisdiction which they otherwise would not have. I wish to say, also, one word in response to what was suggested yesterday by the gentleman from Ohio, that undoubtedly next year the salary of the Secretary of State would be again raised to $12,000. I do not know whether that is contemplated, but I want to say that for myself I do not believe it is contemplated, and I do not think it ought to be done, and if I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations at that time I certainly shall oppose it. I think in good faith the repealing of the salary was intended to cover the entire time of service during which the eligibility was in question, and I think the salary of the Secretary of State ought to continue at $8,000 during that period, and that is for two years from the next 4th of March.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, in order to emphasize the remarks made by my associate manager of the bill, the House should know that the bill was reported to the House December 10, 1908, was passed by the House December 11, 1908, reported to the Senate January 14, 1909, and passed by the Senate January 22, 1909. The report of the committee of conference was made to the House February 10. It then went to the table of the Speaker and, under the rule, was published for the information of the House. On the 15th the House took up the question of the eligibility of the reported-to-be-appointed Secretary of State. The report of your managers was on the Speaker's table, and the first opportunity that the committee of conference had in respect to the matter was when it brought the bill to the House yesterday for the approval of the House. There was no power, unless by specific action of the House, that could transfer that bill to the managers on the part of the House. It came before the House. On the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] the antagonism of the two acts of legislation, the one recommended in the report of the managers on the 10th and the other by the action of the House on the 15th, was brought to the attention of the House. It was the fault, if it may be so called, of such conditions that antagonized the rules of the House. Such being the case, there was only one authority to adjust the difficulty and that was the action of the House that referred the whole question to the Committee on Rules and approved my motion that the question go over until to-day.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Nine minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, in a nutshell, so far as the conferees are concerned, this is the condition of this matter: When the bill passed the Senate and the House and went to conference, we kept in the bill the legal salary of the Secretary of State. The conferees reported that bill, with its disagreements, to this House five days before the question of the eligibility of the anticipated Secretary of State was raised by a bill in the House. The House had possession of the conference report. We could not get it. It was not our business to ask for it. It was the mistake of this House in passing that bill relieving Mr. KNOX of his ineligibility without at the same time looking to the clause in the appropriation bill that was then on the table of the Speaker.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, the fault was not ours, because we voted against the whole thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he proposes to use the balance of his time in one speech?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have only to say, in connection with the last three speeches, that the explanations and apologies are abundant, if not satisfactory. [Laughter.]

I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who opposed the proposal to qualify by suspension of the ordinary law one man for appointment as Secretary of State. I think that opposition has been justified by all the experience of the House since the passage of that special legislation. Its effect, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] very well pointed out, was that after Congress had increased the salaries of cabinet officers for the avowed purpose of obtaining the best service it proceeded to reduce the salary of the chief cabinet officer in order to obtain the very best service [laughter], a performance which may be consistent with the present exigencies of the Republican party, but is scarcely consistent with the procedure of an orderly government according to the standards of any civilized community.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a legitimate and inevitable consequence of such a departure from uniformity in the laws is this rule so admirably described by the gentleman from New York, my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD], and which proposes to do what? Not to adjust differences between the two Houses, because there are none on this question, but to create a difference for the very purpose of adjusting it. [Laughter.] Has anything so absurd ever been witnessed outside of opera bouffe? You are actually appointing a conference to agree on a disagreement that does not exist. [Laughter]. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, how far this Committee on Rules can go in the perpetration of absurdities. The gentleman from New York, my colleague, has given us some faint suggestion of what they may do with laws that happen to be inconvenient, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests that they have already shown what they can do with the Constitution. [Laughter.]

It remains for them to show what liberties they can take with common sense. [Laughter and applause.] Now, I do not believe there is the slightest disposition on the part of Members here who tried to save Congress from perpetrating the absurdity which is causing so much trouble to obstruct or defeat attempts at reconciling that preposterous performance with some conception of orderly procedure. We have no desire to throw the business of the country into confusion or to bring discredit upon this legislative body merely to emphasize the ridiculous character of the proposals we condemned. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the majority under the lead of the Committee on Rules has succeeded in bringing Congress down to the level of opera bouffe. Let us see if the minority can offer a suggestion for bringing it back to something like dignity and orderly procedure.

To effect the purpose the majority has in view, I do not think it necessary to adopt this absurd rule. I do not think it necessary for us to appoint a conference to reconcile differences where there are no differences. It seems to me this difficulty will be removed if we pass an entirely new appropriation bill now. With the aid of your Committee on Rules, that can be done in about three and a half minutes, I think. [Laughter.]

If we pass an entirely new appropriation bill identical in every respect with the one now before us, except in making the salary of the Secretary of State $8,000 instead of $12,000 a year, and send that bill to the Senate, the existing bill can lie upon the table here and the Senate will take upon the new bill precisely the same action it has already taken. We will then have given force and effect to the intention of both Houses while acting all the time in strict accordance with the rules governing this body and the laws of the land. I make that suggestion to the Committee on Rules and to the majority with no other motive than a desire to maintain the dignity and promote the effectiveness of this House. Being consistent with common sense, it has nothing to commend itself to the favor of the Committee on Rules [laughter] except, perhaps, the necessities of the situation. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two and a half minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield them to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have made so many speeches about this matter that I do not believe I care to make any more, except I want to emphasize the outrageous and, it seems to me, almost idiotic manner in which the business of this House is conducted. We fooled away almost the entire time before Christmas. We might just as well have been debating these appropriation bills and gotten things straightened out as to have fooled away that entire time, and every two years regularly——

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow me to say that we passed this very appropriation bill before Christmas?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, what was the Senate doing all that time?

Mr. TAWNEY. What can the Senate do in respect to appropriation bills until the House acts?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But the gentleman from Massachusetts said we passed this bill before Christmas and the Senate had all that time and it has fooled away the time, if the Speaker will not call me to order for making that remark——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to go to the Senate and make that statement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to go to the Senate very much. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman would be a great addition to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think so, too. [Great laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Why not ask unanimous consent?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would if I thought I could get it. [Renewed laughter.] But every two years at this season of the year just exactly this kind of disorderly proceeding takes place for several days. Everything is rushed through. Is my time out?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad of it. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] complains that we lose time in various ways in the House of Representatives, and has gone so far as to criticise the Senate. I was under the impression that the rules that usually come from the Committee on Rules are sufficiently drastic in hastening the House to a conclusion upon any question on which they bring in a rule; and I am surprised at the criticism now. The distinguished gentleman from

New York [Mr. COCKRAN] criticises the present proposed rule because, he says, we are seeking by it to create a difference between the Senate and the House. We are not seeking to do that, but we are seeking to do that which I know the Senate, I believe unanimously, desires to have done; and that is to fix the salary of the Secretary of State at $8,000 per annum in harmony with a bill very recently passed by both Houses of Congress. Their recent votes on this subject tell us that, at least.

Now, I think we are all willing, having heard from each member of the conference committee, to exonerate that committee from any blame attaching to this matter, which seems to be considered as a dilemma. That conference committee, whether Republicans or Democrats, of either the Senate or House, seem not to have had their attention called to the fact that the bill as it was originally introduced in the House, passed through the House, and passed through the Senate fixed the salary of the Secretary of State at $12,000 for the ensuing fiscal year, which was proper to be done at the time the bill passed each House.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, with some gentlemen on the other side when they speak of the inconsistency that will exist as coming from this matter of having the chief, or head, of the Cabinet of the United States performing his duties at a salary of $4,000 less than that of each of the other members of the Cabinet and $2,000 less than his own assistant.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman is mistaken. The conferees on the part of the House and the Senate not only had their attention brought to the fact that that particular bill carried $12,000 for the salary of the Secretary of State, but we passed it and we approved it. What we did not know was that you would so override the Constitution that it would absolutely require a change.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to enter the conflict between the distinguished gentleman from Georgia and that other member of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], who has just spoken on this subject, and who has just told us that they did not have their attention called to it; and, in a somewhat critical way, he complained in his speech just made that I did not relieve the conferees of their difficulty here on the floor by not discovering earlier the trouble and by not rushing up to them at an earlier time than I did and telling them all about it so that it might have been remedied in some other and less notorious way.

Mr. GILLETT. I made no complaint; I just stated the facts.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, the inference was very clear. The fact about it is that I was a little late in getting to the House yesterday and had to look at the bill after my arrival to be sure that they had not dealt with it or castrated it in some way so as to relieve it of the inconsistency. [Great laughter.] Mr. Speaker, while I was doing that, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was upon the floor making a speech, and I thought that was a good time to interrupt his learned remarks and call attention to this matter, which was the earliest opportunity I had, and I had no chance to take the gentleman from Massachusetts out and tell him of the trouble. They say I ought to have made the discovery earlier and not, as I did, disclosed it to the world. [Laughter.] I am sorry I was not more thoughtful or more industrious in investigating the great legislative, executive, and judicial bill; but my duties were not greater than those of others, certainly not greater than those of the conferees having charge of the bill.

Now, another complaint of the gentleman from Massachusetts is that I offered no remedy. In that he fell into a mistake, for I offered as promptly as I could, through that marvelous basket we have down there at the Clerk's desk, a House concurrent resolution that was not subject to any objection on account of its being in conflict with section 9 of the Revised Statutes——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would assume that the gentleman from Ohio was familiar with the Revised Statutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, of course I do not think I would have introduced concurrent resolution No. 66 if I had not been, and it was not subject to any possible criticism. But, Mr. Speaker, the present report and resolution from the Committee on Rules is perfectly plain, perfectly clear, and will relieve the situation completely in all respects. The Senate will receive the first resolution that we will pass, disagreeing to all the amendments of the Senate, and with it the concurrent resolution, the second one, giving to the conferees the right to regard the matter of the compensation of the Secretary of State as in dispute and within their jurisdiction to report upon. This great legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill will again be in conference in every respect, and the conferees can treat the salary of the Secretary of State as also in conference, and they can settle it very promptly.

It seems to me clear that if Mr. KNOX becomes eligible to hold the office of Secretary of State March next Congress can then restore the salary of that office to $12,000 per annum and not violate the Constitution of the United States.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that this report be recommitted to the Committee on Rules in order to bring it in in conformity with the statute.

Mr. DALZELL. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What are we to vote on?

The SPEAKER. On the adoption of the rule which requires a majority of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are we voting on the rule or the resolution?

The SPEAKER. On the resolution. If the resolution is adopted——

Mr. FITZGERALD. What kind of a resolution are we voting on, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The whole resolution that is pending.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Speaker is aware that we can not vote on a simple resolution and a concurrent resolution at the same time, even under the rules of this House.

The SPEAKER. Well, the vote now comes upon the resolution as it is presented to the Chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make that point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. What point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That the House can not vote at one time upon a simple and a concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman puts it in that shape, the Chair would overrule the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assumed that the Chair would be compelled to do that under the exigencies of the occasion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 184, noes 140.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 184, nays 125, answered "present" 5, not voting 71, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For the session:

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GOULDEN.

Until further notice:

Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. Upon this vote the ayes are 184 and the noes are 125; present 5. The resolution is agreed to, and the Chair will appoint the following conferees——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the following instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. GILLETT, and Mr. LIVINGSTON.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is in order to move to instruct the conferees, and I rise for that purpose.

Mr. MILLER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the question as to whether it is a privileged motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The House has just voted to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference, and under the universal practice of the House it is then in order for the House, if it desires, to instruct the conferees. The motion, it is true, must be made before the conferees are appointed, but I submit that I was on my feet asking for recognition for the purpose of asking that the instructions be given. The resolution adopted simply asks for a further conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 575.

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House be instructed to insist on their disagreement to the Senate amendments 64, 65, 66, and 67.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These are the amendments providing for increase in the office of Secretary of State, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DALZELL. I was not here when the resolution was offered, but it seems to me that the resolution covers no more than is covered in the rule already adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to ascertain. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk again reported the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendments, so that the House may understand what they are.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 45, line 10, after the word "dollars," insert: "Undersecretary of State, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall perform such duties as the Secretary of State may designate and as may be provided by law, $10,000."

Page 45, line 16, after the word "each," insert: "Fourth Assistant Secretary of State, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall perform such duties as the Secretary of State may designate and as may be provided by law, $4,500."

Page 46, line 11, after the word "dollars," insert: "Said private secretary and clerk to the Secretary of State to be appointed by the Secretary of State; private secretary to the Undersecretary of State, $2,500; clerk to the Undersecretary of State, $1,500, to be appointed by the Secretary of State."

Page 46, line 21, after the word "each," insert: "Private messenger to the Secretary of State, $1,000."

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes to control the time the gentlemen on the committee in charge of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I was recognized and made a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has offered his resolution of instructions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I debated it, and no question was raised as to my right to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman has debated it or was recognized for debate. The Chair's recollection of the rule is that while in the opinion of the Chair this resolution is in order, the practice, as the Chair recollects, has been unvarying to recognize the gentlemen on the committee in charge of the bill to control the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I submit that that is not this case. This bill has been disposed of by the resolution just adopted. I made a motion in time, and the Chair could not take me from the floor and recognize somebody else to debate my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair's ruling is along the line of practice extending over a long time; and the unvarying practice has been in the settlement of matters touching conference reports to recognize a motion that is in order, namely, in this case to instruct the conferees on the part of the House to recognize to control the time the man in charge of the bill, whether it be a friend or an enemy. The practice is very well settled, and therefore the Chair must recognize the gentleman having charge of the bill, in this instance the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I submit that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] must be recognized under these circumstances, as he is in charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Very well, but the other gentleman is on the conference committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I had been recognized, I should have made that motion, and we would have saved all of this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair accepts the gentleman's apology. [Laughter.] The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 110, noes 130.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 144, answered "present" 4, not voting 87, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 16551. An act to pay C. F. Sugg, of Hales Point, Lauderdale County, Tenn., $79.95, for damages inflicted upon gasoline steamer Clyde by light-house tender Oleander;

H. R. 9617. An act for the relief of Joseph Swisher;

H. R. 27342. An act to amend the military record of David H. Dickinson;

H. R. 25064. An act for the relief of Angeline C. Burgert;

H. R. 6903. An act for the relief of Willis A. Joy;

H. R. 28164. An act for the investigation, treatment, and prevention of trachoma among the Indians; and

H. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver a condemned cannon to the Grand Army of the Republic.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8554. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell part or all of the surplus lands of members of the Kaw or Kansas and Osage tribes of Indians in Oklahoma.

S. 9182. An act to increase the limit of cost for the acquisition of additional land for the site of the new post-office and court-house at Duluth, Minn.;

S. R. 83. Joint resolution for the relief of the firm of Fearon, Daniel & Co., of New York and Shanghai;

S. R. 129. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to donate two condemned cannon to the State of Florida; and

Senate concurrent resolution 99.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (H. R. 10752) to complete the military record of Adolphus Erwin Wells be, and hereby is, rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill the following amendment be made so as to comply with the form adopted by the Secretary of War:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

"That in the administration of the pension laws Adolphus Erwin Wells, of North Carolina, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered into the military service of the United States as a private of Company E, Ninth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, on the 16th day of June, 1864, to have served continuously as such to the date of the muster out of said company and regiment, and to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the date of the muster out of said company and regiment."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 26394. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13851. An act providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a new immigration station thereon at the city of Boston, Mass.;

H. R. 20247. An act to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906;

H. R. 28164. An act for the investigation, treatment, and prevention of trachoma among the Indians;

H. R. 9617. An act for the relief of Joseph Swisher;

H. R. 16551. An act to pay to C. F. Sugg, of Hales Point, Lauderdale County, Tenn., $79.95 for damages inflicted upon gasoline steamer Clyde by light-house tender Oleander;

H. R. 6903. An act for the relief of Willis A. Joy;

H. R. 27342. An act to amend the military record of David H. Dickinson; and

H. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver a condemned cannon to the Grand Army of the Republic.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 8708. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate two condemned cannon to Moores Creek Battle Ground Association.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 8554. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell part or all of the surplus lands of members of the Kaw or Kansas and Osage tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 9182. An act to increase the limit of cost for the acquisition of additional land for the site of the new post-office and court-house at Duluth, Minn.—to the Committe on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. R. 83. Joint resolution for the relief of the firm of Fearon, Daniel & Co., of New York and Shanghai—to the Committee on Claims.

S. R. 129. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to donate two condemned cannon to the State of Florida—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have reprinted as a House document (H. Doc. No. 1462) a letter from Brig. Gen. W. L. Marshall, Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, transmitting a memorandum of revised estimates for maintenance of certain works of river and harbor improvement during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, with certain corrections.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether this will interfere with the order of business under which we are now operating?

The SPEAKER. This is a request for a reprint of a letter as a House document.

Mr. MANN. And it will not interfere with the Order of Business No. 5.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed if consent is given. If not, it will not be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker, as to whether this will take us off the order of business in which we are now engaged?

The SPEAKER. How can it interfere with the order of business if it is printed as a House document by unanimous consent?

Mr. MANN. The fact that unanimous consent is asked and given is the reason I make the inquiry—as to whether that takes us out of the Order of Business No. 5?

The SPEAKER. It does not. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SUBSTITUTE FOR WOOD PULP.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have reprinted House Report 2142, with certain corrections, touching the bill (H. R. 24328), to provide a substitute for wood in the manufacture of paper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PENAL CODE.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11701) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the penal code, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11701, the penal code bill. When the committee rose on yesterday, an amendment was pending offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], and on agreeing to that amendment a division had been called for. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Strike out section 327.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also all other sections and parts of sections of the Revised Statutes and acts and parts of acts of Congress, in so far as they are embraced within and superseded by this act, are hereby repealed; the remaining portions thereof to be and remain in force with the same effect and to the same extent as if this act had not been passed.

During the reading of section 338 the following occurred:

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania suspend until the reading of the section is completed?

Mr. SABATH. The section has been completed.

The CHAIRMAN. Only the paragraph; the Clerk is reading by sections.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. This is all in one section.

Mr. SABATH. Repealing all these laws and parts of acts, is that all in one section?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is all in one section.

The CHAIRMAN. Almost the entire chapter seems to be one section.

Mr. SABATH. That is all one section?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; amendments will be in order, as soon as the reading of the section is completed, to any part of the section.

The Clerk resumed, and concluded the reading of the section.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer a committee amendment to section 338, which includes the repealing provisions. This amendment is made necessary by the fact that during the pendency of this bill and after it was reported to the House two different laws were enacted, one regulating the transportation of explosives in interstate commerce, and the other, which was passed in May last, in regard to presenting false claims to some of the departments of the Government. Those new laws passed by the House were substituted by this committee for the report that they had made, and therefore it becomes necessary to perfect that repealing clause, to repeal the existing sections of the law that they take the place of, and this is merely a formal amendment for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

At the bottom of page 187 insert the following:

"An act entitled 'An act to promote the safe transportation in interstate commerce of explosives and other dangerous articles, and to provide penalties for its violation,' approved May 30, 1908.

"An act entitled 'An act to amend section 5438 of the Revised Statutes,' approved May 30, 1908."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in at the bottom of page 187.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

At the bottom of page 187 insert that part of the act of March 1, 1875, which reads:

"No citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid shall be fined not more than $5,000."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I propose in this repealing section to include that portion of the act of 1875, March 1, known as the "enforcement and reconstruction act."

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Right now; yes.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That section which the gentleman asks to have repealed is not in the criminal code at all.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It is in this bill; yes. It can be found in section 22 in this bill upon which we are now acting. In fact, this amendment is this section taken from this bill.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I could not understand it from the reading.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I know that, because I cut it out of a section of this bill which we have adopted, on which we are now acting, and sent it up to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I simply asked for information, because I could not tell from the reading.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am surprised at the gentleman from Pennsylvania asking the question, because he is so familiar with this bill I thought he would have recognized it at once.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Permit me to say to the gentleman from Georgia I could not hear——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I will take that back, then.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania (continuing). And understand what the gentleman proposed to offer, from the reading from the desk.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It is on page 14 of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I merely want to call the gentleman's attention to section 23, page 14, of this bill we are considering.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care so much about the section that provides the qualification of jurors in the federal courts, but the point I make upon this statute, and why I ask to have it repealed, is this: The Supreme Court in a number of cases have decided that the right to determine the qualification of jurors in the state courts is a matter entirely for the determination of the legislatures of those States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Division!

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in taking the floor at this time is to say a few words on a topic of much moment—good roads. I am now, always have been, and always expect to be in favor of good road building. There is no subject at the present time of more importance to all the people than the proposition to construct good roads by governmental aid along economic and constitutional lines.

The plain people of the land are familiar with the truths of history. They know the past. They realize that often the difference between good roads and bad roads is the difference between profit and loss. Good roads have a money value far beyond our ordinary conception. Bad roads constitute our greatest drawback to internal development and material progress. Good roads mean prosperous farmers; bad roads mean abandoned farms, sparsely settled country districts, and congested populated cities, where the poor are destined to become poorer. Good roads mean more cultivated farms and cheaper food products for the toilers in the towns; bad roads mean poor transportation, lack of communication, high prices for the necessaries of life, the loss of untold millions of wealth, and idle workmen seeking employment. Good roads will help those who cultivate the soil and feed the multitude, and whatever aids the producers of our country will increase our wealth and our greatness and benefit all the people. We can not destroy our farms without final decay. They are to-day the heart of our national life and the chief source of our material greatness. Tear down every edifice in our cities and labor will rebuild them, but abandon the farms and our cities will disappear forever.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say again that I take an abiding interest in this all-absorbing question for better highways by some plan of governmental assistance. I know it can be done honestly, economically, and constitutionally. I am not committed to any pet scheme. I have no vanity in the matter. I care not who gets the glory so long as the people get the results.

I am for the cause, and in the fight to stay. Good roads mean progress and prosperity, a benefit to the people who live in the cities, an advantage to the people who live in the country, and they will help every section of our vast domain. Good roads, like good streets, make habitation along them most desirable; they enhance the value of farm lands, facilitate transportation, and add untold wealth to the producers and consumers of the country; they are the milestones marking the advance of civilization; they economize time, give labor a lift, and make millions in money; they save wear and tear and worry and waste; they beautify the country, bring it in touch with the city; they aid the social and the religious and the educational and the industrial progress of the people; they make better homes and happier hearth sides; they are the avenues of trade, the highways of commerce, the mail routes of information, and the agencies of speedy communication; they mean the economical transportation of marketable products—the maximum burden at the minimum cost; they are the ligaments that bind the country together in thrift and industry and intelligence and patriotism; they promote social intercourse, prevent intellectual stagnation, and increase the happiness and the prosperity of our producing masses; they contribute to the glory of the country, give employment to our idle workmen, distribute the necessaries of life—the products of the fields and the forests and the factories—encourage energy and husbandry, inculcate love for our scenic wonders, and make mankind better and greater and grander and broader.

Good roads, sir, are the arteries of the industrial life of a great and powerful people. Good roads make a good country. In a government such as ours all sorts and conditions of men and women are more or less absolutely dependent upon the best and speediest means of communication and transportation. If you say that good roads will only help the farmers, I deny it. The farmers who produce the necessaries of life are less dependent than the millions and millions of people who live in our cities. The very lives of the latter depend on the farmers—the producers of the necessaries of life. The most superficial investigation of this subject will clearly prove that good roads are more important to the consumers than they are to the producers of the country.

But the burdens of life fall thickest and hardest on the farmer; and he gets less for the taxes he pays than any other class of people in the land. The least the Government can do for him is to help him get decent highways. I am with the farmers in this fight for good roads. I am with the rural districts of our land in their struggle for better transportation facilities, and in Congress, or out of Congress, I shall do all in my power to hasten the consummation they desire—the ability to go and to come along good roads without exhausting the time and the effort and the utility of man and beast.

The fathers of the Republic wisely recognized the importance of this question. Washington and Jefferson advocated good roads and projected the construction of a great highway from the Capital to the Mississippi Valley. The far-seeing statesmen of the early days of our national existence championed and passed measures to better the means of transportation. They knew that of all human agencies the one which has done most for civilization has been the building of good roads—the abridgment of distance, the shortening of time—in the facility of communication. They realized the necessity of good roads, how important they were to the country, to its growth and its development; and to mankind, morally, physically, intellectually, and industrially; removing national and provincial antipathies, and binding together all sorts and conditions of people in the brotherhood of man.

The farsighted wisdom of Julius Cæsar built from the imperial exchequer the magnificent roads that led in all directions to eternal Rome. The great Napoleon—Cæsar like—built the roads of France that center in Paris from the general funds of the Government; and these French roads have done more than any other single agency to encourage the thrift and increase the industry and insure the contentment of the people of France. Cæsar and Napoleon were the great road builders of ancient and modern times, and their foresight and their judgment demonstrated the beneficial results that follow, like the night the day, the building of great governmental highways.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some addresses and letters in connection with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and the request is granted.

The matter referred to follows:

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT READ AT THE NATIONAL GOOD ROADS CONGRESS, CHICAGO, JUNE 15, 1908.

When we wish to use descriptive terms fit to characterize great empires and the men who made those empires great, invariably one of the terms used is to signify that that empire built good roads. When we speak of the Romans, we speak of them as rulers, as conquerors, as administrators, as road builders. There were empires that rose over night and fell over night, empires whose influence was absolutely evanescent, which have passed away without leaving a trace of their former existence; but wherever the Roman established his rule, the traces of that rule remain deep to-day, stamped on the language and customs of the people, or stamped in tangible form on the soil itself. And so passing through Britain fifteen centuries and over after the dominion of Rome passed away, the Roman roads, as features, still remain; going through Italy, where power after power has risen and flourished and vanished since the days when the temporal dominion of the Roman emperors transferred its seat from Rome to Byzantium—going through Italy after the Lombard, the Goth, the Byzantine, and all the people of the middle ages that have ruled that country—it is the imperishable Roman roads that reappears.

The faculty, the art, the habit of road building marks in a nation those solid, stable qualities which tell for permanent greatness. Merely from the standpoint of historic analogy we should have a right to ask that this people which has tamed a continent, which has built up a country with a continent for its base, which boasts itself, with truth, as the mightiest republic that the world has ever seen, which I firmly believe will in the century now opening rise to a position of headship and leadership such as no other nation has ever yet attained—merely for historic analogy, I say we should have a right to demand that such a nation build good roads. Much more have we the right to demand it from the practical standpoint. The great difference between the semibarbarism of the middle ages and the civilization which succeeded it was the difference between poor and good means of communication. And we to whom space is less of an obstacle than ever it was in the history of any other nation, we who have spanned a continent, who have thrust our border westward in the course of a century and a quarter until it has gone from the Atlantic to the Alleghenies, from the Alleghenies down into the valley of the Mississippi, across the Great Plains, over the Rockies to where the Golden Gate lets through the long, heaving waters of the Pacific, and finally to Alaska, to the arctic regions, to the tropic islands of the sea—we who take so little account of mere space must see to it that the best means of nullifying the existence of space are at our command.

Of course, during the last century there has been an altogether phenomenal growth of one kind of road wholly unknown to the people of an earlier period—the iron road. The railroad is, of course, something purely modern. A great many excellent people have proceeded upon the assumption that somehow or other having good railroads should be a substitute for having good highways, good ordinary roads. A more untenable position can not be imagined. What the railroad does is to develop the country, and of course its development implies that the developed country will need more and better roads.

A few years ago it was a matter of humiliation that there should be so little attention paid to our roads; that there should be a willingness not merely to refrain from making good roads, but to let the roads that were in existence become worse. I can not too heartily congratulate our people upon the existence of a body such as this, ramifying into every section of the country, having its connections in every State of the country, and bent upon that eminently proper work of making the conditions of life easier and better for the people whom, of all others, we can least afford to see grow discontented with their lot in life—the people who live in the country districts. The extraordinary, the wholly unheard-of, rate of our industrial development during the past seventy-five years, together with the good sides has had some evil sides. It is a fine thing to see our cities built up, but not at the expense of the country districts. The healthy thing to see is the building up of both the country and city go hand in hand. But we can not expect the ablest, the most eager, the most ambitious young men to stay in the country, to stay on the farm, unless they have certain advantages. If the farm life is a life of isolation, a life in which it is a matter of great and real difficulty for one man to communicate with his neighbor, you can rest assured that there will be a tendency to leave it on the part of those very people whom we should most wish to see stay in it. It is a good thing to encourage in every way any tendency which will tend to check an unhealthy flow from the country to the city.

There are several such tendencies in evidence at present. The growth of electricity as a means of transportation tends to a certain degree to exercise a centrifugal force to offset the centripetal force of steam. Exactly as steam and electricity have tended to gather men in masses, so now electricity, as applied to the purposes which steam has so long claimed as exclusively its own, tends again to scatter masses. The trolley lines that go out in the country are doing a great deal to render it more possible to live in the country and not to lose wholly the advantages of the town. The telephone is not to be minimized as an instrument with a tendency in the same direction; and rural free delivery is playing its part along the same lines. But no one thing can do more to offset the tendency toward an unhealthy growth from the country into the city than the making and keeping of good roads. They are needed for the sake of their effect upon the industrial conditions of the country districts; and I am almost tempted to say they are needed for the sake of social conditions in the country districts. If winter means to the average farmer the existence of a long line of liquid morasses, through which he is to haul his goods, if bent on business, or to wade and swim if bent on pleasure; if winter means that after an ordinary rain the farmer boy or girl can not use his or her bicycle; if a little heavy weather means a stoppage of all communication not only with industrial centers, but with the neighbors, you must expect that there will be a great many young people of both sexes who will not find farm life attractive. It is for this reason that I feel the work you are doing is so preeminently one in the interest of the Nation as a whole. I congratulate you upon the fact that you are doing it. In our American life it would be hard to overestimate the amount of good that has been accomplished by associations of individuals who have gathered together to work for a common object which was to be of benefit to the community as a whole; and among all the excellent objects for which men and women combine to work to-day, there are few indeed which have a better right to command the energies of those engaged in the movement, and the hearty sympathy and support of those outside, than this movement in which you are engaged.

ADDRESS OF WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN, READ AT THE NATIONAL GOOD ROADS CONGRESS, DENVER, JULY 6, 1908.

I have become exceedingly interested in this subject, as I have studied it. In fact, I have been thinking how many questions there are that enlist the thought and arouse the interest of those who seek to do something for their fellow men. If we attend a meeting of home missionaries we are surprised to find how much need there is in this country for home missionary work; and after we have listened to the speeches made at such meetings we make up our mind that the work of the home missionary is an exceedingly important work. If we attend a meeting of the foreign missionary society, we are amazed to find what a large world this is, how much sacrifice has been made by foreign missionaries, and how extended is their field of labor. If we attend an educational meeting and hear great educators speak, we wonder that we could have been so ignorant of the great forces at work for the uplifting of our people, and we are astonished to find how many people there are with all our schools, public and private, who are yet illiterate. And then, if we go to a prison congress and hear people talk about the various means of reforming people, why, we find that there is another wide field for energy. And so with many other kinds of work, not to speak of political work. And as I have gone from one of these meetings to another I have been more and more impressed with the largeness of the vineyard in which people can work if they really want to work. And then, when I read in the paper that some one has committed suicide because there was nothing for him in the world, I can not help thinking that if one has a proper conception of life and measures it by its outflow and not by its income, he will find so much to do that he will never despair.

The expenditure of money for the permanent improvement of the common roads can be defended, first, as a matter of justice to the people who live in the country; second, as a matter of advantage to the people who do not live in the country; and third, on the ground that the welfare of the Nation demands that the comfort of country life shall, as far as possible, keep pace with the comforts of city life.

It is a well-known fact, or a fact easily ascertained, that the people in the country, while paying their full share of county, state, and federal taxes, receive, as a rule, only the general benefits of government, while the people in the cities have, in addition to the protection afforded by the Government, the advantage arising from the expenditure of public moneys in their midst. The county seat, as a rule, enjoys the refreshing influence of an expenditure of county money out of proportion to its population. The capital of a State and the cities where the state institutions are located, likewise receive the benefit of an expenditure of public money out of proportion to their population. When we come to consider the distribution of the moneys collected by the Federal Government, we find that the cities, even in a larger measure, monopolize the incidental benefits that arise from the expenditure of public moneys.

An analysis of the expenditures of the Federal Government will show that an exceedingly small proportion of the money raised from all the people gets back to the farmers directly; how much returns indirectly it is impossible to say, but certain it is that the people who live in the cities receive by far the major part of the special benefits that come from the showering of public money upon the community. The advantage obtained locally from government expenditures is so great that the contests for county seats and state capitals usually exceed in interest, if not in bitterness, the contests over political principles and policies. So great is the desire to secure an appropriation of money for local purposes that many will excuse a Congressman's vote on either side of any question if he can but secure the expenditure of a large amount of public money in his district.

I mention this because it is a fact that I have not referred to. The point is, that the farmer not only pays his share of the taxes, but more than his share, yet very little of what he pays gets back to the farmer.

People in the city pay not only less than their share, as a rule, but get back practically all of the benefits that come from the expenditure of the people's money. Let me show you what I mean when I say that the farmer pays more than his share. The farmer has visible property, and in every form of direct taxation visible property pays more than its share. Why? Because the man with visible property always pays. If he has an acre of land the assessor can find it; if he has horses, they can be counted; his cattle can be enumerated. If he has pigs, they begin to squeal when the assessor approaches; he can not hide them. The farmer has nothing that escapes taxation; and in all direct taxation, he not only pays on all he has, but the farmer who has visible property has to pay a large part of the taxes that ought to be paid by the owners of invisible property, who escape taxation.

And when we come to indirect taxation, the farmer's share is even more, because when you collect taxes on consumption, you make people pay, not in proportion to what they have, but in proportion to what they need. And God has so made us that the farmer needs as much as anybody else, even though he may not have as much as other people with which to supply his needs. In our indirect taxation, therefore, for the support of the Federal Government, the farmer pays even more out of proportion to his wealth. And then, when we remember that when we collect taxes on consumption, we make the farmer pay not only that which is imported, but upon much of that which is produced at home, we find that the farmer's burden is not measured by what the Treasury receives, but is frequently many times what the Treasury receives. While in indirect taxation the burden upon the farmer is far greater than it ought to be, yet when you trace the expenditure of public moneys distributed by the Federal Government you find that even in a large measure special benefits are to the great cities and not to the rural communities. This point I desire to emphasize and make clear.

The improvement of the country roads can be justified also on the ground that the farmer, the first and most important of the producers of wealth, ought to be in position to hold his crop and market it at the most favorable opportunity, whereas at present he is virtually under compulsion to sell it as soon as it matures, because the roads may become impassable at any time during the fall, winter, or spring. Instead of being his own warehouseman, the farmer is compelled to employ middlemen and share with them the profits upon his labor.

I believe, as a matter of justice, the farmer ought to have roads that will enable him to keep his crop and take it to the market at the best time, and not place him, as he is placed to-day, in a position where they can run down the price of what he has to sell just when he must sell, and then, when he has disposed of it, run the price up and give the speculator what the farmer ought to have.

The farmer has a right to insist upon roads that will enable him to go to town, to church, to the schoolhouse, and to the homes of his neighbors, as occasion may require, and, with the extension of rural delivery, he has an additional need for good roads, in order that he may be kept in communication with the outside world.

A great deal has been said, and properly so, in regard to the influence of good roads upon education. In the meeting held at Raleigh, N. C., the speeches which I had the pleasure of reading placed great emphasis upon the fact that it is impossible to have a school system such as we ought to have unless the roads are in condition for the children to go to school.

I was thinking this morning that while we are building great libraries in the cities, we do not have libraries in the country, and there ought to be a library in every community. Instead of laying upon the farmer the burden of buying his own books, we ought to make it possible for the farmer to have the same opportunity as the people in the cities to use the same books, and thus economize on the expense of a library. Have you ever thought what an advantage the child in a city has over the child in the country? Our country schools teach the lower grades, with only a few students, except at great expense. In cities when a child gets through the graded school, still living at home and without expense to himself or his parents, he is able to go through the high school; but if the country boy or girl desires to go from the graded school to the high school, as a rule it is necessary to go to the county seat and there board with some one. So the expense to the country child is much greater than to the child in the city.

As you study this subject you find it reaches out in every direction, that it touches us at every vital point. What can be of more interest to every parent than bringing instruction within the reach of every child? It does not matter whether a man has children himself or not; he may have a small family, like the graduates of Yale and Harvard are said to have—they average about three—or he may have a family large enough to excite the admiration of the President. No matter whether he has few children or many, every citizen of a community is interested in the intellectual life of that community. Sometimes I have heard people complain because, having few children, they thought themselves overburdened with taxes for the education of other people's children. My friends, the man who has no children can not afford to live in a community where there are children growing up in ignorance, and the man with none has the same interest as the man with many, barring the personal pride of the parent.

Anything, therefore, that contributes to the general diffusion of knowledge, anything that makes more educated boys and girls throughout our country, is a matter of intense interest to every citizen, whether he be a father of a family or not; whether he lives in the country or in the town.

And ought not the people to have an apportunity to attend church? Why, my friends, I am coming to believe that what we need in this country, even more than the training of the intellect, is the development of the moral side of our natures. I believe with Jefferson that the church and the state should be separate. I believe in religious freedom, and I would not have any man's conscience fettered by act of law. But I do believe that the welfare of this Nation demands that man's moral nature shall be educated in keeping with his brain and his body. In fact, I have come to define civilization as the harmonious development of the body, the mind, and the heart. And we make a mistake if we believe that this Nation can fulfill its high destiny and mission, either with mere athletes or even with scholars. We need the education of the moral sense. And if these good roads will enable men, women, and children to go more frequently to church and there receive the inspiration that comes from the holding up of the life of the Man of Galilee, that alone is reason enough for good roads.

Then, too, I am satisfied that the people of the country do not have enough social life. It is one of the things that we all should regret, that the extremes of society have been pushed so far apart, that some who think themselves at the top know nothing but society, while those who are declared to be at the bottom know nothing of society.

Again, the people of the towns, especially the rural towns, are interested in making it possible for the people in the country to reach their local market or trading place during all times of the year, for, throughout the agricultural portion of the country at least, the villages and the cities rest upon and derive their support from the farms.

I think I ought to make this plain. I once said in a speech (1896), "Burn your cities and leave our farms, and your cities will spring up again as if by magic. But destroy our farms and grass will grow in the streets of every city in the country." I thought I was stating a truth; I never supposed it could be distorted, but when the election was over I received a dodger which had been circulated just before the election saying in big letters: "Burn the cities," without anything else, and it was declared to be the utterance of "Anarchist Bryan." So I think it is necessary to qualify the statement a little and assure you that I do not want to destroy the cities; I simply want to remind you of a very patent fact, and that is, that the cities rest upon the country; that the farm is the life of the cities, and that, especially in the agricultural communities, the people in the cities are intensely and vitally interested in enabling the people of the country to get into the towns to do their trading. Sometimes I have heard country merchants express dissatisfaction because the people of the country sometimes buy of the mail-order houses. If the country merchant wants to keep the trade at home, let him help to make roads good between the patron and his store. That is the best way. He can not expect that people who are prevented from going to town will refuse to utilize the best means of supplying their needs. I repeat that people in the town are interested in making it possible for the people of the country to get into town.

There is a broader view of this question, however, that deserves consideration. The farm is, and always has been, conspicuous because of the physical development it produces, the intellectual strength it furnishes, and the morality it encourages. The young people in the country find health and vigor in the open air and in the exercise which farm life gives; they acquire habits of industry and economy; their work gives them opportunity for thought and reflection; their contact with nature teaches them reverence, and their environment promotes good habits. The farms supply our colleges with their best students, and they also supply our cities with leaders in business and professional life. In the country there is neither great wealth nor abject poverty—"the rich and the poor meet together" and recognize that "the Lord is the Father of them all." There is a fellowship and, to use the word in its broadest sense, a "democracy" in the country that is much needed to-day to temper public opinion and protect the foundations of free government. A larger percentage of the people in the country than in the city study public questions, and a smaller percentage either corrupt or corrupted. It is important, therefore, for the welfare of our Government and for the advancement of our civilization that we make life upon the farm as attractive as possible. Statistics have shown the constant increase in the urban population and the relative decrease in the rural population from decade to decade. Without treading upon controversial ground or considering whether this trend has been increased by legislation hostile to the farm, I may suggest that the Government is in duty bound to jealously guard the interest of the rural population and, as far as it can, make life inviting. And it may be added, comfort is a relative rather than a positive term. Transportation by wagons did not seem slow until the steam engine made more rapid travel possible. The tallow candle seemed bright until it was dimmed by oil, gas, and electricity; the flint and the steel were convenient enough until the friction match displaced them. In the employment of modern conveniences the city has considerably outstripped the country; and naturally so, for, in a densely populated community the people can by cooperation supply themselves with water, light, and rapid transit at much smaller cost than they can in a sparsely settled country; but it is evident that during the last few years much has been done to increase the comforts of the farm.

In the first place, the rural delivery has placed millions of farmers in daily communication with the world. It has brought not only the letter, but the newspaper, to the door. Its promised enlargement and extension will make it possible for the wife to order from the village store and have her purchase delivered by the mail carrier.

The telephone is also a great boon to the farmer. It lessens by one-half the time required to secure a physician in case of accident or illness—an invention which every mother can appreciate. In a hundred ways it saves time and steps.

The improvements in the methods of manufacturing gas, and the invention of machines suitable for family use, must not be overlooked. It is now possible for every farmer to install, at a small expense, a gas plant sufficient for the production of the light necessary for his house. While the extension of the system of private water plants has not been quite so rapid, it is still very marked. Probably no one modern convenience enjoyed in the cities is more missed in the country than the water system that supplies the kitchen and the bathroom. No woman who lives, or visits a while, in the city can return to the country without noticing the difference between the faucet and the pump.

The extension of the electric car line also deserves notice. It is destined to enlarge the limits of the city and to increase the number of 1, 2, 5, and 10 acre farms at the expense of flats and tenement houses. The suburban home will bring light and hope to millions of children.

But after all that has been done and is being done by the improvements above referred to there still remains a pressing need for better country roads, a need emphasized and made more apparent by the pavement of city streets. As long as mud placed an embargo upon city traffic the farmer could bear his mud-made isolation with less complaint, but with the improvement of city streets and with the establishment of parks and boulevards the farmers' just demand for better roads finds increasing expression.

Just to what extent action should be taken by the Federal Government, the state government, the county, and the precinct, or in what proportion the burden should be borne is a quesion for discussion, but that country roads should be constructed with a view to permanent and continuous use is scarcely open to debate.

There must be recognition of disease before there can be an intelligent discussion of a remedy; but when the disease is once located, the people may be depended upon to find not only a remedy, but the right remedy. The people are beginning to realize that bad roads are indefensible and are prepared to consider the remedy. I have discussed simply the disease, and have tried to point out that we are not helping the farmer to keep up with the progress of the town people. I have tried to show that from every standpoint, from the farmers' standpoint, from the standpoint of the citizen of the town, and from the broader standpoint of the patriot the farmer's interest must be looked after. And when this disease of bad roads is once understood, then you can trust the intelligence of the American people to do whatever is necessary. Meetings like this will not only emphasize the fact that bad roads are intolerable, but will bring out men who are interested in these questions, who have studied them and can present remedies for your consideration. And I have such confidence in the patriotism and intelligence of the American people that I believe that in the clash of ideas and conflict of views the best will always be triumphant, the people having the benefit of the combined wisdom of all the people.

In some countries the people have not the right to suggest, not even the right to pass upon a suggestion; but under our form of government the people not only have a right to sit in judgment upon every suggestion made, but have the right of suggestion, and in this "multitude of counsel there is safety."

ADDRESS BY EX-GOVERNOR N. J. BACHELDER, MASTER NATIONAL GRANGE, AT THE NATIONAL GOOD ROADS CONGRESS, DENVER, COLO., JULY 6, 1908.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen:

As master of the National Grange I am pleased to have this opportunity for presenting some considerations of this important question from the farmer's standpoint. The farmers have a common interest with all other advocates of road improvement; and although there may be differences of opinion as to methods, we are all working for the same ultimate purpose—the establishment of a complete system of properly constructed roads in all sections of the country. How such a road system can be secured is a problem that more directly concerns the farmers than any other class, and it may be safely said that the question of better roads is essentially a farmers' question.

It is true that all industrial interests are affected by the nature and conditions of the roads over which the products of our farms are transported to market, but it is the farmers who suffer most from the inferior roads which constitute so large a percentage of the road system of the United States. And I am confident that it is to the farmers that we must look as the active force and influence that will secure the enactment of the legislation needed to bring about that improvement in road conditions that we all desire.

And here I wish to refer briefly to the seeming conflict of interests between the farmers and the owners of motor vehicles, which has in some districts given rise to pronounced antagonism and hostile legislation. That since the introduction and general use of the automobile there have been many instances of gross disregard by the drivers of motor vehicles of the public's right to the use of our highways can not be denied. The coming of the automobile has brought with it the victims of speed mania who, in their mad desire to beat records, drive their high-powered machines along country roads at a speed dangerous to all others using these roads. It is only natural that the farmers, on whom in most sections of the country the chief burden of constructing and maintaining public roads has fallen, should resent the violation of their right to use these roads in safety and should have sought to have severe penalties imposed on the offending parties. For myself I may say that I believe that the attitude of the farmers toward the automobile was to a large extent justified by the outrageous conduct of drivers of these vehicles. It is doubtless true, as is often asserted, that the "speed maniacs" constitute a very small percentage of the total number of automobile users. I am pleased to know that the abuses complained of in the earlier years of the automobile have to a large extent disappeared, and trust that through the influence of the automobile clubs and associations there may be brought about a willingness to respect the rights of all the people to the use of the highways that will give no occasion for hostility toward the orderly reasonable use of the automobile.

I realize that the motor vehicle is here to stay and that it is a factor that must be taken into consideration in discussing the improvement of our roads. The question as to how far it creates new problems of road maintenance and repair I must leave to the expert roadmakers, and would only suggest that it is important that all the facts relating to the effects of automobile traffic on improved roads should be ascertained before raising needless alarm over the alleged destructive tendencies of the inflated rubber tire.

One phase of the development of the motor vehicle that is of special interest to the farmers is the possibilities of the commercial truck or power-operated farm wagon. It would seem that here is a very large field for an industry that will be profitable to both the farmers and the manufacturers of such vehicles. With improved roads the use of motor trucks for the conveyance of farm products to market should become general in all sections of the country, thus enabling the farmer to market his crops more quickly and at less expense. I believe that no injury is caused to macadam roads by these commercial vehicles, but, on the contrary, their solid rubber tires operate practically as rollers and serve to keep such roads in good condition.

In this connection I wish to emphasize the fact that the road question in the United States is not only a farmers' question, but, first of all, a question of the commercial use of the highways. To the farmer the roads are the means of transporting his products to market, and it is from this point of view that the farmers will insist that all plans for road improvement must be considered. Over our country roads there are annually hauled nearly 200,000,000 tons of staple farm products, and if to this we add the smaller products, such as fruit, milk, eggs, etc., and the fertilizers, feed, coal, lumber, etc., taken from the town to the farm, we will have an aggregate of at least 250,000,000 tons carried for long or short distances over our highways. These figures show the enormous importance to the farmers of a system of improved roads that would enable them to reduce the cost of hauling this volume of freight from one-half to two-thirds of what it now costs them. It is estimated by competent authorities that over the ordinary country road the farmer draws an average load of 2,000 pounds an average distance of 12 miles, at a cost of $3, and it has been shown that with improved roads the cost of moving the same load that distance would be but little more than $1. Making allowance for exceptional cases, it is certain that the cost of transporting a ton of farm products over improved roads is not one-half the cost over earth roads. Under a general system of improved roads the cost of hauling these 250,000,000 tons would be cut in two, thus effecting a direct saving to the farmers of the country of at least $125,000,000 annually.

Nor is this the only saving to the farmers that would be effected through improved roads. Because of bad roads the farmers or their hired men must now spend twice as much time on the road as would be required under a proper road system. In bad weather the roads are often impassable, so that time must be taken from farm work in fine weather to get the crops to market. With a system of good roads over which farm products could be hauled in one-half of the time now necessary, the farmers would have just so much additional time for other work and could therefore greatly increase the productivity of their farms.

It is not needful that I should occupy your time with any extended statement of the benefits of good roads. The direct saving in dollars and cents is only one of the many advantages to the farmers that would result from improved roads. There can be no question but that the deplorable condition of our roads is to a large extent responsible for the dissatisfaction with country life, which drives so many of our people into the towns and cities. Bad roads make farming unprofitable and undesirable. They increase the solitude of life on the farm by making more difficult and less frequent visits to the neighbors, and to the villages and towns. They limit opportunity by forcing the farmer to spend twice as much time in going to and from his markets as he would with a good road system. In short, the greatest drawback to farm life to-day is the condition of the average country road, and the improvement of our roads is of greater importance to the farmers than any other suggested legislative reform.

Nor is it necessary to dwell upon the inferior character of our existing roads. The fact that out of a total road mileage in the United States of 2,151,570 only a fraction over 7 per cent can be called improved speaks for itself.

The facts as to present conditions have long been known to the thoughtful farmers of the country, and they have been the first to realize the urgent need for radical reforms in methods of road construction and improvement. It is true that the farmer is naturally conservative, and perhaps has not taken up the subject of better roads as quickly as the residents of towns and cities would act in a matter vitally affecting their interests, but from my wide acquaintance with the farmers of all sections of the country I am prepared to affirm that they are as a whole awake to the importance of this subject, and ready to do all in their power to further the work of road improvement.

The farmers recognize the need for better roads, and realize how largely such roads would contribute to their comfort and prosperity. They are anxious that well-considered plans for road improvement should be submited to the state and national legislatures, and will do all in their power to aid in securing the adoption of such plans.

It may be asked why, if the farmer favors good roads, the work of road improvement has not made greater progress. The chief reason is to be found in the lack of the money required for the construction and maintenance of improved roads. Many farming sections of the country are still sparsely populated, and the economic condition of the farmers in general is such that they regard it as impossible for them to contribute in taxes the funds necessary for the construction of a permanent road system. While it is true that it would pay even the poorest communities to increase their expenditures for road improvement, it may be said that as a general proposition the means of the farming districts are wholly inadequate to provide for a proper road system.

In view of these conditions the farmers have in recent years come to realize that the road problem is not merely a question for the communities through which the roads run, but one that concerns the people of the States and of the Nation as a whole. They are convinced that as the workers of the towns and cities, the manufacturers, merchants, and indeed all classes and interests, are affected by present road conditions, the people of the entire country should aid in establishing a better system. Believing that appropriations for this purpose should be made from other sources than local taxation, they have aided the movement for state aid for highway improvement which has been in progress for some years past, and their votes have aided in securing action on this matter in various States.

In many States, however, the same conditions which prevent the construction of the needed mileage of improved roads make it impracticable to secure the desired appropriations by the State. The necessity for better roads is admitted, but it is not believed that the States are justified in increasing their tax rate to the extent needful for this purpose.

The general recognition of these conditions has in recent years given rise to a growing demand for national aid for public road improvement. It is urged by the farmers that they do not receive a fair share of the benefits of the money raised by taxes upon the people of the whole country, and that the improvement of the public highways is as equally deserving of federal assistance as is the improvement of our waterways, for which large amounts are annually appropriated by Congress.

The expenditures for river and harbor improvements are justified on the grounds of their importance to the trade and commerce of the country as a whole. The advocates of national aid for better roads believe that the improvement of the public highways is of even greater importance to the people of the entire country, since this is a matter that affects every industrial interest, and will benefit the trade and commerce of every section of the United States.

I have recently had brought to my attention in a striking form the facts as to the relatively small proportion of the Nation's revenue that is devoted to purposes affecting the great agricultural interests of the country. Statistics of the exports from the United States for the ten years ending with 1906 show that nearly 60 per cent (59.13, to be exact) of the exports during that period were the products of our farms, the total value of these products amounting to more than $8,000,000,000. Yet, for the benefit of the industry producing these enormous values, there was expended during the same period less than 1 per cent of the total federal expenditures, met chiefly by indirect taxes paid largely by the farmers of the entire country. During that period Congress appropriated $180,537,000 for the improvement of our waterways and harbors, but not one dollar (unless the few thousands annually appropriated for the Office of Public Roads, United States Department of Agriculture, are so regarded) for the improvement of our highways.

The farmers are determined that this state of affairs shall not continue. They have made up their minds that Congress must devote a share of the annual appropriations to the construction and maintenance of our roads. They are not committed to any special policy as to how these appropriations shall be expended so long as care is taken that the money is wisely devoted to the purpose for which it is intended. Some of us believe that the creation of a national highways commission, with power to organize a sufficient corps of trained road engineers, who, in cooperation with the state and local highway authorities, would supervise the disbursement of the federal grants, would be a satisfactory solution of the problem. This is, however, a matter to be worked out by the committees of the House and Senate which will pass on legislation to establish the general policy of national aid, and I am confident that a plan will be devised that will be satisfactory to Congress, the state and local road officials, and the people of the country as a whole.

National aid will not, as some persons have suggested, lessen the interests of the States, counties, and townships in road improvement. On the contrary, the roads constructed with federal assistance will serve to stimulate everywhere the desire for better roads, and will be the means of ultimately giving the entire country a uniform system of scientifically constructed public highways.

ADDRESS BY JOSEPH KORNS, OF DIXON, ILL., AT THE NATIONAL GOOD ROADS CONGRESS, CHICAGO, JUNE 15, 1908.

I am particularly interested in improving our American roads to an equal excellence with those of European countries.

Why should we be behind any country in this much-needed improvement, when we have every facility at hand except sufficient circulating medium? We all know that we can not build hard roads without a vast expenditure of money, and if we raise the money by taxing the people it will be more than they will be able to stand.

Let the United States Government issue $100,000,000 of legal-tender currency, to be divided equally among all the counties of the United States according to their population, after reducing the population of the cities of each county.

This money to be put into circulation by building hard roads as fast as laborers can be hired for the purpose. This would give employment at living wages for all who are idle.

There are probably over 3,000 counties in the United States, each equipped with its county officials to carry on the building of these roads, and this money should be made payable to the county treasurer of each county as fast as it is earned.

But this money should not draw interest; not until it is paid out for labor, for that is the only thing that gives it value. It will then be wealth created by labor. It will then go out through the world drawing the same interest that any gold or silver dollar will draw and have the same value as a purchasing power.

Let this issue be continued from time to time until the amount of money in circulation reaches $40 per capita. We now have about thirty in circulation, and it is not enough to carry on the business of this busy land of ours and pay as we go.

"Self protection is the first law of nature," therefore let us be as free and independent American citizens in establishing a sound system of finance; one that will meet the needs of the public, as we were in the establishment of our republican form of Government.

This system of financing will be the most feasible of any yet planned, for it will be furnishing the money directly from the Government to the people, and it will be secured by the prosperity of the people.

Constant employment of labor at good wages produces in a country like ours general prosperity and contentment.

The Congress of the United States can make no mistake in giving us an immediate issue of $100,000,000 of legal-tender currency to be paid out for labor in building permanent public highways.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 3, 1908.

Mr. ARTHUR C. JACKSON,
President National Good Roads Congress, Denver, Colo.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just received your letter requesting a word from me to the Good Roads Congress, which meets in Denver on the 6th instant. I must first of all express my regret at my inability to be there and participate in the deliberations of the congress, as I had hoped to do. But I must also congratulate the congress on account of the auspicious circumstances under which they meet. After many years of service in the good-roads cause I see many encouraging circumstances, all pointing to the final triumph of the cause. The greatest element in our assured success is found in the fact that all classes of people and all sections of our country are giving an increasing support to this cause. For many years (two or three generations) the slightest attention was paid to this subject, but during the last ten or fifteen years an agitation has been continually going on for the purpose of stimulating support of every kind to the cause of permanent road improvement. At first appeals to the farming communities were met with a stubborn resistance. This was not unnatural when we consider that according to the original theory and practice of road building in this country, the entire burden of cost rested upon the farmers or the owners of agricultural lands in the vicinity where the road was required. The farmers therefore naturally expected that increasing cost for road improvement would be accompanied by greatly increased burdens of expense upon them; but according to the new theory and practice, as advocated by the leading students of this question and adopted by most of the leading States in the Union, the meager funds of those living in the agricultural regions are to be supplemented out of a general fund provided by the State and therefore coming from all kinds of people and property in the entire State, including, of course, the concentrated wealth and population in the great cities. According to the prevailing rule under the new theory, at least one-half the cost of constructing new and permanent roads is paid out of this general fund supplied by the State.

When this new theory and practice was put into operation in many of the leading States of the Union the population in the rural districts soon discovered that they had greatly overestimated the burden of expense which would fall upon them and greatly underestimated the almost immeasurable benefits which resulted from the permanent improvement of the highways. Therefore, the opposition of which I spoke has substantially passed away, and we find the representatives of the great wealth concentrated in cities, in corporations, in railroad companies, and the vast industrial institutions joining hands with the farmers, and all working in harmony in this connection. It is a notable fact that the National Grange, having a membership of more than a million persons, are pledged to the support of the new theory as now set forth and advocated in State and Nation. Meanwhile all the various sections of the country—North, South, East, and West—have expressed increasing favor for the new plan, and what is perhaps most surprising of all is the fact that many southern statesmen, who have followed the traditions of the elders for at least two generations past in opposing national aid in road building, have come forward in late years with high expressions of approval not only for the substantial change of lifting the burden so far as possible from the agriculturist, but of calling on the Government of the United States to aid in the performance of this necessary service. There are probably more Democratic Members of Congress than Republican Members who favor the new proposed policy of national aid in road building. Patrick Henry, the famous governor of Virginia, once said in speaking of the preliminary steps to the Revolution, "Our brethren of the North are already in the field; why stand we here idle?" Paraphrasing this statement, we may well say as to the cause of national aid in road building that our brethren of the South are already in the field; why stand we here idle?

It is by no accident nor by any superinduced or unreasonable expectation that so many of our people in city and in country in the East and in the West, in the North and in the South, have come to adopt this new theory and recommend this new practice by which the abutting owner of land shall be relieved more and more of the burden of building and maintaining public highways and that this burden should be taken up and carried more and more by the general public, because nothing is more certain than that the public highways belong to the entire body of the people, and are fully, finally, and forever dedicated to their every use, every citizen in every part of this country having an equal right to use every highway in every part of this great country. It was the Yankee poet, Sam Walter Foss, who brought out the thought in beautiful verse that the greatest street in Boston goes by every farmhouse door. An appreciation of this fact has led to a greater and increasing liberality in the treatment of the whole subject; and all students of the matter now understand that the sentiment for the new theory and practice is based not only upon necessity, but also upon equity. Necessity is found in the fact that you can not successfully put the entire burden of cost upon some of the people to maintain a system of highways that belong to and are used by all of the people. Historical investigation also shows that no state or country in the world ever succeeded in building and maintaining a permanent system of highways without the aid of the general government of that state or country. Extensive observation in our own country shows that in the oldest of our States and in the greatest and most progressive, such as Maryland, Virginia, Massachusetts, and New York, no substantial improvement was made in the construction of a permanent system of highways during a period of more than two hundred and fifty years, and until the old theory and practice was changed for the new theory and practice. Therefore, we are driven by necessity to look for a more excellent way than the original policy which placed the burden wholly upon the abutting owner.

Now, as to the equity in the case, we readily find that the concentration of wealth and population in this country, and especially in those States east of the Mississippi River and north of the Ohio, is such that more than one-half of the people and from three-fourths to seven-eighths of the wealth is concentrated in cities, and that under the original theory and practice all this concentrated wealth and population was exempt by law from making any contribution whatever to the system of public highways so necessary to our greater needs and advancing civilization. What, therefore, could be more equitable than a readjustment of the law so as to call upon this great proportion of our people and wealth to contribute its equitable proportion? I am glad to say that the equitable side of the case has been recognized by the progressive element in all the great cities, and that their representatives, not only in the state legislatures but in Congress, have been among the foremost to espouse and support the new plan and so advance the great cause.

I have long contended that the general principle of diminishing the burden of highway construction and maintenance as it has heretofore rested on the owners of agricultural land and placing it more and more on the public at large should be extended beyond the principle of state aid and take in the principle of national aid. Many who acknowledge the equitable principles as applied to state aid deny that these same principles can be wisely extended to the matter of national aid. My contention is that they can be so extended and should be so extended, and that no injustice or lack of equitable principles would appear in the process. I desire to call attention in this connection to the fact that the state governments, as a rule, do not appropriate more than $1 per capita per annum for all of the public uses and public institutions of the State. I also desire to call attention to the more important fact that the Congress of the United States appropriates annually about $10 per capita for every man, woman, and child in the United States—or, in other words, the General Government appropriates for public uses more than ten times as much per capita as the combined aggregate of all of the appropriations of all of the States of the Union. Everyone will readily recall that the first session of the Congress just adjourned appropriated more than a billion dollars for the current year. If our population equaled a hundred million, that would be $10 per capita, but, in reality, it is about $12.50 per capita per annum. I speak of this great aggregate to show that the General Government has and uses the purse strings of the Nation for public purposes. Her revenues are great and ample. Men have differed as to whether the foreigner pays the tariff tax, but I think all agree that so far as the internal revenue is concerned the consumer pays the tax. I estimate that at least half of this revenue comes from the people who live in the rural districts. A million people in the rural districts may consume slightly less of the revenue-producing articles than a million people in a great and prosperous city, but this difference, if it exists, is fairly offset by the fact that a considerable more than half of our population still live in the rural districts, so it is perfectly safe to say that half of the internal revenue received and appropriated by the Government of the United States comes from the people living in the rural districts. Now, I contend that in the very equity of the case they are entitled to an appropriation of a part of this great sum for the necessary improvement of the public highway system. I therefore propose, as a matter of equity, justice, and necessity, that 10 per cent of the internal revenue of the United States should be annually appropriated as a permanent fund, out of which Congress should make appropriations to aid in building and maintaining a permanent system of highways. This appropriation would be available only on the condition that any State or civil subdivision thereof should appropriate at least an equal amount, and probably twice the amount, for the purpose of carrying on this cooperative improvement.

Respectfully submitted.

MARTIN DODGE.

CONSTITUTION OF THE NATIONAL GOOD ROADS ASSOCIATION.

Adopted at Chicago, Ill., November 21, 1900, and amended at Portland, Oreg., June 24, 1905; at St. Louis, Mo., November 15, 1905; at Muskogee, Ind. T., December 6, 1906; and at Chicago, Ill., November 18, 1908.

ARTICLE 1. The name of this organization shall be the National Good Roads Association.

ART. 2. The object of this association shall be to secure good roads and streets in the States, Territories, and possessions of the United States, and promote in every possible way a public interest in them.

ART. 3. The official headquarters of this association shall be in Chicago, Ill. Offices may also be opened and maintained in such other place or places as may be determined by the executive board.

ART. 4. Any person interested in the good roads movement may become a member of the National Good Roads Association upon payment to the association of an annual fee of $1 for each calendar year, or $10 for life membership. Upon acceptance of honorary membership in the association the President and Vice-President of the United States and former occupants of these offices shall be honorary presidents; Cabinet officers, governors of all States and Territories, and former occupants of these offices, honorary vice-presidents; Members of Congress, presidents of educational institutions, mayors of cities, and editors of all regular publications, honorary members. Upon becoming annual or life members of the association the director of public roads, state highway commissioners, and presidents of good roads organizations shall be vice-presidents; and the secretaries of all good roads organizations, assistant secretaries of the association. Life membership for firms, associations, and corporations shall be $25.

ART. 5. The elective officers of this association shall be a president, a first vice-president, a secretary, a treasurer, and seven others, who, with the foregoing president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, shall constitute the executive board. They shall be elected by the association at its annual meeting, by ballot, and shall hold their respective offices for one year, or until their successors are duly elected and qualified. All vacancies may be filled by the executive board.

ART. 6. The executive board of this association shall control and direct its work. Three members shall constitute a quorum. The president shall be the executive head of the association, and ex officio member of all committees. He shall preside at all meetings of the association and the executive board. He shall appoint the members of the advisory board and all other committees, unless otherwise directed by the association. He shall countersign all warrants drawn by the secretary upon the treasurer. He shall sign all commissions. In the absence or inability of the president to act, the vice-president shall act; in the absence or inability of the president and vice-president, the executive board shall choose one of its number to act during such absence or inability.

ART. 7. The national advisory board shall be appointed by the president, and shall consist of representative men and women in each State and Territory of the United States who are interested in the objects of this association, whose duty shall be to give the association such aid, information, or suggestions as their time and inclination permit.

ART. 8. The association shall meet annually, on the third Wednesday of November, in the city of Chicago, Ill., for the purpose of electing officers, and for the transaction of any other business in the interest of the association. All classes of members, honorary, life, or annual, may vote upon all questions, at all meetings of the association, in person or by proxy. The president may call special meetings at any time and place.

ART. 9. The president and executive board shall have full power to organize town, city, county, state, national, and international conventions and associations, and arrange for meetings thereof.

ART. 10. These articles shall be in full force and effect from and after their adoption, and they may be amended only at the annual meeting herein provided for the election of officers. If a proposed amendment be published by the secretary in the official call for the annual meeting, a majority vote shall adopt; but any amendment not mentioned in such call may be adopted by a three-fourths vote of the votes cast.

[From address of President Roosevelt at the National Good Roads Association Convention at St. Louis.]

Merely from the standpoint of historical analogy we should have a right to ask that this people which has tamed a continent, which has built up a country with a continent for its base, which boasts itself with truth as the mightiest Republic that the world has ever seen, which we firmly believe will in the century now opening rise to a position of headship and leadership such as no other nation has ever yet attained—merely from historical analogy, I say, we should have a right to demand that such a nation build good roads. Much more have we a right to demand it from the practical standpoint. The difference between the semibarbarism of the middle ages and the civilization which succeeded it was the difference between poor and good means of communication. And we, to whom space is less of an obstacle than ever before in the history of any nation; we who have spanned a continent, who have thrust our border westward in the course of a century and a quarter until it has gone from the Atlantic over the Alleghenies, down into the valley of the Mississippi, across the great plains, over the Rockies, to where the Golden Gate lets through the long-heaving waters of the Pacific, and, finally, to Alaska and the Arctic regions; to the islands of the Orient, the tropic isles of the sea; we, who take so little account of mere space, must see to it that the best means of nullifying the existence of space are at our command. A few years ago it was a matter, I am tempted to say, of national humiliation that there should be so little attention paid to our roads, that there should be a willingness not merely to refrain from making good roads, but to let the roads that were in existence become worse, and I can not too heartily congratulate our people upon the existence of a body such as this. In our American life it would be hard to overestimate the amount of good that has been accomplished by associations of individuals who have gathered together to work for a common object which was to be of benefit to the community as a whole. And among all the excellent objects for which men and women combine to work to-day there are few, indeed, who have a better right to command the energies of those engaged in the movement and the hearty sympathy and support of those outside than this movement in which you are engaged.

I have become exceedingly interested in this subject. * * * The expenditure of money for the permanent improvement of the common roads can be defended, first, as a matter of justice to the people who live in the country; second, as a matter of advantage to the people who do not live in the country; and, third, on the ground that the welfare of the Nation demands that the comforts of country life shall, as far as possible, keep pace with the comforts of city life.

It is a well-known fact, or a fact easily ascertained, that the people in the country, while paying their full share of the federal taxes, receive, as a rule, only the general benefits of government, while the people in the cities have, in addition to the protection of the Government, the advantages arising from the expenditure of public moneys in their midst. The farmer not only pays his share of the taxes, but more than his share; yet very little of what he pays gets back to him. * * * The farmer has nothing that escapes taxation. The improvement of the country roads can be justified also on the ground that the farmer, the first and most important producer of wealth, ought to be in position to hold his crop and market it at the most favorable opportunity, whereas at present he is virtually under compulsion to sell it as soon as it is matured, because the roads may become impassable at any time during the fall, winter, or spring. The farmer has a right to insist upon roads that will enable him to go to town, church, schoolhouse, and to the homes of his neighbors, as occasion may require; and with extension of the rural delivery he has an additional need for good roads in order that he may be kept in communication with the outside world.

Speaking on the subject of good roads and national greatness, at the National Good Roads Association Convention, Gen. Nelson A. Miles said:

"I know of no one element of civilization in our country that has been more neglected than the improvement of our roads, yet this is the element that marks the line between barbarism and civilization in any country. The founders of our Government strongly advocated the necessity of opening up and improving the means of internal communication. The immortal Washington retired from the pomp and circumstance of glorious war to occupy the honorable position of a sovereign citizen, and while conducting the affairs of his plantation was president of a transportation company. The author of the Declaration of Independence, the founder of one of our great universities, and the eminent statesman who gave to us this vast empire west of the Mississippi, was right when he said in a letter addressed to Humboldt:

"'It is more remunerative, splendid, and noble for the people to spend money on canals and roads that will build and promote social intercourse and commercial facilities than to expend it on armies and navies.' He was right again when he said, in a letter to James Ross: 'I experience great satisfaction in seeing my country proceed to facilitate intercommunication of several parts by opening rivers, canals, and roads. How much more rational is this disposition of public money than that of waging war.'

"How true are the words of immortal Jefferson regarding the disposition of public money. We appropriate millions and millions of dollars every year for war—not a dollar for peace. We spend millions and millions of dollars annually for the improvement of our rivers, and not a dollar for the improvement of our roads. We have neglected this important work too long. It is all to our shame. Let us begin; let us follow in the footsteps of the builders of the Republic, and commence now to do something to improve our national roadways."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 28, 1908.

ARTHUR C. JACKSON,
President National Good Roads Congress, Chicago, Ill.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 22d, containing a quotation from a letter which you have received from Congressman SULZER, and also a copy of a letter dated December 15, 1908, inclosing two letters, one from Governor Crothers and the other from Mayor Mahool, relative to the holding of the next Good Roads Congress in Baltimore. I heartily concur with Mr. SULZER in his opinion that Baltimore is the most suitable place for the next Good Roads Congress, and you may rely upon me to do everything in my power to aid you in making it a success. The close proximity of Baltimore to Washington will assure you not only of the attention of a number of representative men, but will certainly assure you an attendance of a large number of representative men. I enlisted early, as you know, in the movement for good roads, and you need not hesitate to call upon me at any time for any assistance that I may be able to give in this behalf.

Trusting that you are well and happy, and hoping that I may see you soon, and wishing you a very happy New Year, I am,

Very truly, yours,

GEO. A. PEARRE.

BEAUMONT AND JEFFERSON COUNTY
GOOD ROADS ASSOCIATION,
Beaumont, Tex., January 20, 1909.

DEAR MR. JACKSON: The good roads movement is pretty well under way down here just now; in fact, have interested practically all the counties and parishes which would be traversed by the proposed highway between New Orleans and San Antonio, via Beaumont, and already considerable building of new roads and repairing is being done, and indications are the work will continue on a larger scale in the future.

Recently my attention was directed to an article outlining a plan to connect up by boulevard Atlanta, Ga., and Washington, D. C., and if this is ultimately done no doubt the work will be pushed farther, and perhaps when this New Orleans-San Antonio road is complete there will be one continuous good roadway from the Nation's capital right down into this section.

I find, though, that our local organization is not far-reaching enough, and as I notice article 5 of your constitution and by-laws provides that while your main office shall be in Chicago, such other offices may be maintained for promoting the objects of the congress as the board of directors may determine, the thought occurred to me, as we are so sadly uneducated on good roads, that you could do no better than to establish an office here in Beaumont. I would like very much for you to consider this matter; and if you agree to this, advise me fully.

Hoping to have an early reply, and thanking you in anticipation of your usual prompt attention, I remain, Yours, very truly, SAM PARK, President.

Mr. ARTHUR C. JACKSON,
National Good Roads Congress, Chicago, Ill.

DODGE PARK, MD., VIA LANDOVER,
January 21, 1909.

Mr. ARTHUR C. JACKSON,
President National Good Roads Association,
Opera House Building, Chicago, Ill.

My DEAR SIR: On Monday last I went to Baltimore and had an interview with Mayor Mahool and another with Governor Crothers. They both gave me a very cordial reception and offered to assist in our plan for the National Good Roads Congress in April. The mayor agreed to furnish a hall free for two days and two nights.

When I called on the governor I asked him to issue a proclamation setting forth the nature of the congress, and indorsing the cause which we represent. This, though a new idea to him, he agreed to do, and seemed well pleased with the suggestion. I shall urge the governor to request the attendance of the people of the State. He also agreed to appoint a committee of 100, as a preliminary step, much in the same way that I did as a preliminary to the Ohio state convention. The mayor of Baltimore agreed to appoint 100 delegates from the city of Baltimore, and the governor will appoint probably an equal number at large from the State. Then the mayors of all other cities outside of Baltimore will be requested to appoint five delegates, and each board of county commissioners a like number. Also the farmers' clubs and the local conventions will appoint a like number. This, I figure, will amount to a thousand delegates from the State of Maryland, and I assured the governor that the national association will undertake to secure a like number from the other States and the District of Columbia, including many Members of Congress.

On Wednesday morning I went to Washington and met Mr. Bartholf, whom I introduced to Senator BANKHEAD, Senator DICK, and many other Members of Congress. I explained to Mr. Bartholf what I had done in Baltimore and urged him to go forward to-day and supplement the work. I am expecting that you will come on immediately after the Illinois convention and take up the work more fully. My plan is to ask the governor of every State to appoint a number of delegates to attend the convention. The proceedings should be published in full and circulated among the people as a means of instruction. Senator BANKHEAD and Senator DICK and Congressmen PEARRE and SULZER assured me that they would attend the convention and make speeches in favor of national aid.

Yours, truly, MARTIN DODGE.

The National Good Roads Association Convention and Illinois State Good Roads Convention, Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, Lincoln's Birthday, February 12, 1909.

GOOD ROADS AS LINCOLN HONOR—NATIONAL ASSOCIATION WILL MEET ON CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY TO URGE GREAT MEMORIAL HIGHWAYS.

The National Good Roads Association, which was organized in Chicago in 1900, will hold a national good roads convention at the Auditorium Hotel the centennial anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birth, February 12.

Arthur C. Jackson, the president of the association, is urging as a national recognition of the centennial the beginning of a system of national highways to connect Washington with the capital of every State and Territory.

The governors of all States and mayors of all large cities are being invited to name delegates. (Chicago Tribune.)

CITY PLANS BIG "LINCOLN DAY."

National highways to connect Washington, D. C., with every State capital in the country may be the outcome of one of the many meetings to be held in Chicago in celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, on February 12.

The National Good Roads Association will meet at the Auditorium Hotel and the plan will be presented by President Arthur C. Jackson to the members of the association and the governors and prominent men of many States. The association has already declared itself in favor of the issuance of state and county bonds and the employment of convict labor in the construction of highways.

It is estimated that more than 200,000 Chicagoans will take active part in the celebration of Lincoln Day, and that more than 200 meetings will be held in various parts of the city. All school buildings having assembly halls will be used for meetings during the afternoon, and in the evening three monster mass meetings at national guard armories and one at the Auditorium have been arranged. (Chicago American.)

February 12 next, will be the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. Following the custom of making the centennial celebration of great events more than usually impressive, Governor Deneen has issued a proclamation urging the observance of the day with appropriate exercises by the schools of the State and by all municipal, civic, social, and religious societies and organizations. We hope to see our village schools and all other organizations unite in a service on that day that will do honor to the memory of the man who did so much for the uplifting of the downtrodden and oppressed.

The National Good Roads Association, whose object is to hasten practical legislation for the construction and maintenance of public highways, will hold a convention on February 12, Lincoln's one hundredth anniversary birthday. This is certainly a fitting observance of the event. This association has the indorsement of President Roosevelt, Hon. William Jennings Bryan, Gen. Nelson A. Miles, and hundreds of prominent men of the Nation. Arthur C. Jackson, who is a well-known and practical advocate of good roads, is president of the association. The convention will be held at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago. (The McLean Lens.)

GOOD ROADS THE SLOGAN—CONVENTION TO BE HELD HERE ON THE LINCOLN ANNIVERSARY—STATE AND NATION WIDE INTEREST IS BEING CENTERED IN THE MEETING AND EXCELLENT RESULTS ARE LOOKED FOR.

That there can be no more fitting observance of the centennial of Lincoln's birth by his home State than the beginning of a system of permanent public highways is to be the slogan of the Illinois state good roads convention to be held in Chicago on February 12, the Lincoln anniversary.

State-wide and nation-wide interest is being centered in this important convention, the object of which is to hasten practical legislation in Illinois for the construction and maintenance of public roads.

LOOK FORWARD TO RESULTS.

A large number of delegates from the National Good Roads Association, which is chartered in Illinois, are to participate, and it is expected the convention will be productive of results. Efforts will be made to obtain speedy action by the state legislature in the formulation of a policy that will provide thoroughfares that neither resemble bogs in damp weather nor present under the best conditions a surface about as easy to ride over as a corduroy road.

It is urged, first of all, that state and county bonds should be authorized for the construction of good roads. This, it is held, would prove an investment that would bring most satisfactory returns. Another recommendation is that convict labor be employed in the construction of public roads.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD GIVE AID.

In the construction and maintenance of post-roads, a consideration that has become of increased importance with the extension of the rural delivery mail system, it is believed the National Government should assume part of the responsibility, giving financial aid for the purpose.

Another article of faith of the good roads advocate is that an adequate system of permanent public roads is a public necessity, the development of which will give employment to all unemployed and be of benefit to all classes and conditions of people.

The call to the Illinois state convention has been sent to many and it is the expectation that the meeting will be one of the most successful the good roads spirit has inspired. The headquarters will be in the Chicago Opera House Building. (Chicago Evening Post.)

WHAT GOOD ROADS COULD DO.

While there is talk of deep waterways in Illinois and the expenditure of money on them, too little attention is given to the subject of good roads. People became hysterical over the proposition to deepen the waterways of the State, but no one pays much attention to a subject that is very much closer to them—that of providing good roads. The tonnage of farm products and other goods hauled over the country roads of the State, through bottomless quagmires in most places when weather is bad, is immeasurably greater than the whole tonnage of all the rivers in and around the State of Illinois. The loss to the public through bad roads is too great to compute in figures. The loss in advantages to the people in the country through having bad roads is another heavy item. The boys won't stay on the farm because when the roads are bad they are separated from city pleasures by miles of bottomless mud. The State of Illinois has unsurpassed resources at her command to build good roads. She is allowing her chances to go unused.

On Lincoln's birthday the good-roads association will hold a convention in Chicago, in which all interested in the subject of good roads should manifest their interest. The object of this convention is to hasten practical legislation in Illinois for the construction and maintenance of public hard roads.

The National Goods Roads Congress, chartered under the laws of Illinois, with which there are associated the governors of 40 States and the mayors of more than 100 cities, and the National Good Roads Association, believe:

1. That there can be by Illinois no more fitting observance of the centennial of Lincoln's birth than the beginning of a system of permanent public highways for the benefit of all the people of the State.
2. That state and county bonds should be authorized for the construction of good roads.
3. In the employment of convict labor on public roads.
4. In additional aid for the construction and maintenance of post roads.
5. That an adequate system of permanent public roads is a public necessity, the development of which would give employment to all unemployed and benefit all classes and conditions of people. (The Girard Anchor.)

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Have you yet secured the insertion of the convention addresses in the RECORD?

Would it not be a point to make in a good roads speech the fact of definite declaration in favor of good roads by the platform of both political parties?

Could you not also make mention of my plan for a national recognition of the Lincoln Centennial, by the beginning of a system of national highways to connect Washington with the capital of every State and Territory?

And could you not write me something for presentation at our national convention here on the 12th instant?

Sincerely, yours,

ARTHUR C. JACKSON,
President.

CONCORD, N. H.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON HIGHWAYS OF THE NATIONAL GRANGE, AND RESOLUTIONS UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED AT ANNUAL MEETING, NOVEMBER 11–21, 1908.

Your committee on public highways is pleased to be able to report that an increased interest in the subject of road improvement is manifest in all sections of the country. The long-continued agitation by the members of the grange for better roads has served to direct public attention to the subject. so that it can be safely asserted that no other single topic receives so much consideration in the discussion of present-day issues. Evidence of the widespread interest taken in the movement for improved highways is found in the great number of articles on the subject published in the newspapers, magazines, and farm journals; in the increase in number and activity of good roads associations; and in the increased annual appropriations by many States for road improvement. It is a source of gratification to our order that the principle which the state and local granges have long advocated—that the expense of improving our roads should be more largely met out of the public funds, and less by taxes assessed on the property owners of the community through which the roads run—is now generally recognized.

While the enactment of legislation in harmony with this principle has so far been limited to the more prosperous and progressive States, it is certain that ultimately every State will fall in line and take upon itself a large part of the burden of road construction and maintenance. The logical development of the movement for state cooperation with the local road authorities in highway improvement is federal cooperation with the States for the same purpose. The proposition for national aid for our public roads, initiated by the grange and persistently advocated by it, has now attained the status of a great national issue, and it is only a question of time when Congress will enact legislation making suitable appropriations for assisting in the work of road improvement and maintenance.

The nature and extent of the campaign of education in favor of federal aid carried on by the legislative committee of the order during the past year, in accordance with the resolution adopted at our last annual session, will be described in the report of that committee.

We recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Whereas the National Grange is conducting a widespread educational campaign for the purpose of creating a public sentiment favorable to the enactment of legislation by Congress making liberal appropriations for assisting the state and local road authorities in the improvement of the public highways; and

Whereas the proposition that a part of the federal revenues, collected in taxes from the people of the whole country, should be devoted to aiding in the construction of improved roads, is just and reasonable, and should be adopted by Congress at the earliest possible date; and

Whereas appropriations out of the national revenues are an essential feature of the movement by the grange to secure the adoption of a general policy of road improvement by the States, counties, and municipalities: Therefore

Resolved, That we reaffirm the resolutions on this subject adopted at the forty-first annual session of the National Grange, and urge the individual members of the order to bring all possible influence to bear on their Senators and Representatives in Congress to the end that the desired legislation may be speedily enacted.

F. N. GODFREY, Chairman.

At the annual meeting of the National Good Roads Congress, held at the Chicago Opera House Building, February 12, 1909, as provided in article 3 of the constitution, the following 9 directors were reelected for the ensuing year: Arthur C. Jackson, president; Martin Dodge, first vice-president; James C. Bartholf, secretary; F. C. Donald, Frank G. Soule, Austin L. Crothers, N. J. Bachelder, GEORGE A. PEARRE, and WILLIAM SULZER.

Article 3 of the constitution was amended to provide for a board of 15 instead of 9 directors, at any meeting of which 3 shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

"There are questions sometimes arising which range above all party, and all the considerations and interests of party."—Daniel Webster.

It is a matter of tremendous import that in the United States bad roads are directly responsible for the loss of over a billion dollars a year. The saving of this stupendous sum constitutes an economic question of vast importance.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman whether the new section that is amended has been put in here relating to this section, which is found in line 24? I desire to know whether there is a provision in this bill somewhere enacting this law, or whether you are repealing them?

Mr. SHERLEY. We are repealing no law that is not codified herein.

Mr. SABATH. What I refer to is the act to protect persons of foreign birth against forcible constraint or involuntary servitude, approved June 23, 1874.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand the gentleman, and that section is reembodied in the codification; otherwise we would not have repealed it.

Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman give me the number of the section?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not now, without referring to a table. The best answer that I can make to the gentleman, both as to this inquiry and any similar ones, is this: That we endeavored in this repealing section to only repeal those laws that we carried into the revision. It is a section that required, perhaps, more labor than almost anything else, because it naturally required an entire review of all our work, and the committee spent many weeks not only in going over it, but had an expert employed for many months on it; and we then took his work and verified it. We believe it is accurate. It is an exceedingly difficult thing to be sure about. Now, if there is any instance where an error has been made, we would be glad to know of it.

Mr. SABATH. There are several sections where you say it is reenacted and in some way amended.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Not necessarily amended.

Mr. FLOYD. You speak of repealing laws not carried in this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of repealing those laws that are carried in the bill.

Mr. FLOYD. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. In other words, the gentleman will understand that there is no sense in a revision if you leave the old law you have revised in force; and so always in every revision act you have at the close of the act a repealing section that undertakes to repeal each section of the old law that has been carried into the revision, and that is all this section purports to do.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. And everything that we have not repealed by this bill which is now upon the statute books remains in force?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably, and the purport of that is this, I will say in reply to the gentleman from Georgia, that it is not desired that there shall be a repeal by implication, because that would raise a great many difficult questions. We have undertaken to specify every law that is repealed, and having so undertaken, we then declare that those laws which are not stated as being repealed are to remain in force.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. They would continue in force without being in the bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think they would. But the gentleman is aware in every revision there are questions that have come up subsequently as to whether there was not an implied repeal. Now, after trying to make this work as accurate as possible, we have made an elaborate report as to the laws repealed, having set out in detail every section that we provide for in the codification, and then we say that sections not so repealed shall continue in force.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Well, that is the very thing I am taking the position I do on this bill for, that these sections not only remain, but are approved. So far as I am concerned, I do not intend to vote for the bill. There are many provisions in this bill enacted as a result of the civil war that ought not in this enlightened age to remain on the statute books; and for one I will not vote for the bill, no matter how many good provisions it may contain with those left in.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, in reply to that suggestion——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I move to strike out the last word, and take the time in my own right.

If I was confronted with the proposition as to whether we should enact certain legislation or not, the gentleman would find me with him as to those particular provisions——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I know that; I have no question about that.

Mr. SHERLEY. But this is the situation which not only confronts me, but confronts every other Member of the House.

There are certain laws now on the statute books. The enactment of this code, or the failure to enact it, will not change those laws that are the relics of the reconstruction acts; so that the only proposition is this: That not having those laws changed one way or the other by the passage of the penal code, are we not warranted in gathering together, into one code, all of the various penal sections that are scattered through many books, so that the law may be known? It seems to me that the fundamental error of the gentleman's position is in assuming that the enactment of this code is the creation of new law. The very purpose of the code is to codify the law and not to make new law, and with the exception of one or two matters that have been put on in committee, there is no change in existing law; and in regard to the sections that gentlemen have in mind, there is absolutely no change. Now, to defeat this bill does not relieve the country of these statutes. It does not help the gentleman's section or my section in getting rid of these statutes. If it did, I might agree with him, but inasmuch as the only result in defeating the code is to leave these sections just as they are, and to leave all the rest of the law in the confusion that it is in as the result of many enactments running over thirty years, it seems to me that the act of wisdom in this case (and I say it with all respect) is to enact this code.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I suggest to the gentleman that he can not say that this bill is confined solely to codifying the law. The very title of this bill, that has been time and time called attention to, is "to codify, revise, and amend;" and the gentleman has on a number of occasions voted to repeal some of these laws.

Mr. SHERLEY. In response to that suggestion I simply say to the gentleman that while there are a few amendments, speaking generally, the bill is simply a codification, and that in regard to those sections that the gentleman is complaining of, there has not been a bit of change made by the bill or by the Committee on Revision of the Laws; and the reconstruction act, so far as it exists to-day on the statute book, is not changed a particle in this revision except in this particular, that section 5507, for instance, which was declared by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional, is dropped out. If a change exists at all, it is a change in the direction that the gentleman desires to go.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I concede very candidly the strength of the position occupied by the gentleman. I do not controvert that, or that these provisions which are obnoxious to us, and which ought no longer to remain upon the statute book, will remain there, no matter whether we pass this bill or whether we do not. But so far as I am concerned, others may do as they feel inclined to do, but I will not give my vote in sanctioning a proposition that declares that the remaining portions of those sections that we have endeavored to get rid of and are not evidence of good law, but of sectional animosity and feeling, in a day when sectional animosity and feeling have to a great degree disappeared—I will not by my vote consent that they shall remain in the law, when some of them are of doubtful constitutionality, and when the Supreme Court have divided almost evenly once or twice on the question of their constitutionality. I do not propose to vote for this bill so long as these vicious obnoxious reconstruction laws are a part of it.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last three words. I am one of those who on the final passage of this bill will be found voting against it. I will be found voting against it because we are not only called upon to codify, but we are also called upon to revise and amend, and by virtue of the fact that in this section we are repealing the original laws upon which the codification is based, we are called upon to reenact legislation that I believe to be injurious to the welfare not only of the people of the South, but of the people of the entire country.

Take section 19, of this codification. It provides that—

> If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same, or if two or more persons go in disguise on the highway, or on the premises of another, with intent to prevent or hinder his free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege so secured, they shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years; and shall, moreover, be thereafter ineligible to any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

We have there a section of law that is entirely too ambiguous for any man thoroughly to understand it. Who is going to be able to determine what a constitutional right is? Certainly no layman can; and I make the assertion here, before a House that is composed of a majority of lawyers, that even the lawyers of the House can not tell what their constitutional rights as citizens are. Our Supreme Court, the best informed body of men in the world on our Constitution, are unable to determine what the constitutional rights of our citizens are. It is frequently the case that our Supreme Court divides on the question of the constitutional rights of citizens, and I take it that there is not a member of the Supreme Court who has not at some time or other, on some question coming before that body, been in the minority, thereby declaring that he did not know what the constitutional rights of our citizens are. And yet the laymen are threatened with severe penalties if they infringe upon the constitutional rights of citizens.

There are other clauses in this revision along the same lines, and, so far as I am concerned, until these things are amended in a codification and a revision of the law I shall be opposed to the adoption of it. If it had simply been a codification, if it had been along that line only, I would accept the report of the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The section to which the gentleman refers is word for word the same as section 5508 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I am aware of that fact. I am not contending that it is different from the law as it stands to-day, but I am contending that as a result of our repealing these clauses that we are asked to repeal, we are asked to reenact this clause, and I shall not be a party to it.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out the last three words. I differ with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his contention when he insists that we ought to vote down this entire penal code rather than sanction anything that is contained within its pages by our vote at this time.

Mr. Chairman, in the State that I have the honor in part to represent we have upon our statutes what is commonly known as the "civil rights law." Our laws have been digested practically every ten years since the enactment of that law through a digester, and he has had to carry this particular law forward from one digest to another along with the other provisions of the law of the State because it had not been repealed by the legislature. But when he redigested the statutes of the State he gave that particular law no additional force and no additional life. The section that the gentleman complains of in this codification has just as much life now as it ever had, and is just as much of a law as it will be if we codify and vote upon this particular penal code a thousand times. We give it no additional force and no additional life whatever. We are simply acting as digesters, nothing more and nothing less.

The digester of my State digests the laws under a special act. The Congress has undertaken to digest the penal laws through committees of the House and Senate by authority of an act of Congress, and we are now passing upon their work. I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Georgia will not deny that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has the right to revise the digest of the criminal laws that the committee has brought into the House for its membership to pass upon.

I can not understand, to save my life, how a man who is capable of representing an intelligent constituency can insist that because there is some particular line or provision in this code that does not meet with his favor, therefore he ought to vote against the whole code, containing as it does so many valuable laws.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACON. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the laws already exist and the only advantage of this is that you are able to find out what the law is and that it is particularly for the attorneys in trying cases?

Mr. MACON. The gentleman's suggestion in the beginning of his question furnishes a reason for me to insist that what he proposes to do is absolute folly—to vote against a thing that already exists and that his vote can in no wise impair. If this bill is defeated, it will be more difficult to find out what the criminal law is, and I am sure the gentleman does not want to do anything to hinder the people or the lawyers in finding out what the law is. The gentleman will understand, further, that in many States laymen have the right to appear in the courts in their own behalf. If they have the laws codified, they may be able to defend themselves in many cases against unwarranted charges; but if the laws are not codified, they may be forced to employ lawyers and pay them large fees to find the law for them or to represent them in the courts. I insist that, in the interest of the laymen, in the interest of the courts of the country, in the interest of the lawyers, and in the interest of every other conceivable lawful interest, we ought to have a digest of our laws. [Applause.]

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the adoption of this codification as it will be reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole. I congratulate the committee upon the fact that the end of their labors is in sight and that we shall have an intelligent systematic revision of the criminal laws published in such form as to be handy in the criminal practice. There are some things in it that ought not to be, some things left out that should be inserted, and I want to call the attention of the House to one section which was discussed on this floor last January, but discussed under unfavorable circumstances, because it was just preceding a presidential election. I refer to what is known as "section 84" in the Senate bill.

SEC. 84. It shall be unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a money contribution in connection with any election to any political office. It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to make a money contribution in connection with any election at which presidential and vice-presidential electors or a Representative in Congress is to be voted for, or any election by any state legislature of a United States Senator. Every corporation which shall make any contribution in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be fined not more than $5,000, and every officer or director of any corporation who shall consent to any contribution by the corporation in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

I made the motion to amend that section by adding to it the words "or any other thing of value." As that section stands to-day a corporation can contribute a million dollars to a political campaign fund if the million dollars is not in money, but represented in other property. This law was put upon the statute books in the Fifty-ninth Congress. It is a wise law, and it must have been an oversight that this loophole was left in it. If we are in earnest and in favor of the law, I think we ought to be willing to let it be amended as this amendment suggests, so as to make it effective and efficient to the end and purposes for which it was intended. The election is over, and it looks like our Republican friends do not need contributions from corporations to win the elections, and I hope now that they will consent to let this be changed.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Does the gentleman make that statement with knowledge of how much they used in the campaign just finished?

Mr. KIMBALL. No; I am not in their confidence. They are too wise to let either my colleague or myself know what is going on around their campaign headquarters. I do not blame them for this. I now ask unanimous consent of the committee that we recur to this section and add this amendment to it, so as to make the law effective.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to recur to the section of the bill to which he has referred, and that the section be amended by unanimous consent in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. PARSONS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 339. The repeal of existing laws or modifications thereof embraced in this title shall not affect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil cause prior to said repeal or modifications, but all liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made.

MONUMENT TO POCAHONTAS.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a petition which I now hold in my hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print a petition. Is there objection?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. What is the petition about?

Mr. OLCOTT. The petition is in regard to some application that has been made by a Pocahontas memorial association to erect a proper monument to Pocahontas.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I inquire why that petition is of so much more importance than the ones we receive every day that it should be printed in the RECORD instead of placed in the basket? I do not want to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

NATIONAL POCAHONTAS MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION,
New York City, February 8, 1909.

To the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, officers and members of the National Pocahontas Memorial Association, do hereby emphatically protest against the passage of the bill S. 4453 entitled "An act to aid in the erection of a monument to Pocahontas at Jamestown, Va.," on the following grounds:

1. Priority of organization.

The National Pocahontas Memorial Association was organized and actively working to erect a memorial to Pocahontas at least two years before the people who compose the committee which is asking for the passage of the above-mentioned bill thought of such project, and we hereby affirm that it was the publication of the work that our association was doing that first gave those most interested in the passage of the said bill the idea of the work.

2. Their formal surrender of all claims to their project.

When the National Pocahontas Memorial Association learned that another and smaller committee was being formed in Washington to erect a monument to Pocahontas, we immediately wrote to the persons in that city who were forming the committee, apprising them of our larger and broader organization, which already had been formed under the name of the National Pocahontas Memorial Association, its members residing in many different States, and of the work we had done and were doing, and stating that we thought the people would only support one association, and asking them, the Washington people, to become members of our organization.

To this communication Miss Mary Desha, who was and is the person most interested in the Washington movement, replied, stating their committee was glad to hear of the movement and that the National Pocahontas Memorial Association had accomplished so much, and stated "we will cooperate with you in any manner you may suggest, either as a subcommittee or as a coordinate branch," and asking that they be permitted to direct the work in some of the Southern States, and ended the letter by saying: "We are glad that the memorial is to be a national tribute, and we will be glad to give our influence to your organization. The money that is sent to us will be placed in the hands of Mr. Glover and the terms of transfer arranged later. Awaiting your further instructions, we remain, yours, respectfully." This letter was signed by Miss Desha, as secretary.

To this the National Pocahontas Memorial Association replied that the tone of her letter and the action of her committee pleased us very much; that we accepted the cooperation of the committee which she represented, with pleasure; and that the committee of which she was secretary had been properly incorporated into and made part of the National Pocahontas Memorial Association. We also requested the names and addresses of the persons to whom she would like to have us send our association literature. We never received a reply to this letter and wrote again, and still no reply, and were much surprised to learn, a short time after, that Miss Desha had made a contract with a sculptor to construct the monument.

3. That the National Pocahontas Monument Association will bring the remains of Pocahontas to her own land.

The National Pocahontas Memorial Association has spent much time, labor, and money in trying to locate the exact place where the remains of Pocahontas now are. In this work they have enlisted the active sympathy and cooperation of many prominent men and women residing in England, and are now in a position to say that we will be successful in this effort and that we will have no difficulty in getting the consent of the British Government to bring the remains to this country.

4. The greater merit of the monument we propose erecting.

The monument which the National Pocahontas Memorial Association proposes to erect will be placed in the city of Washington, the capital of the Nation toward whose birth Pocahontas contributed so much, and will cost $50,000, and will be one of the finest monuments, artistically and architecturally, in this country, and worthy the support of our Government and people and the brave young princess in whose honor it will be erected. A replica of the figure of Pocahontas on this monument will be placed on a pedestal of fine proportions and erected on Jamestown Island. Whereas the movement which this bill supports is a small, inartistic, and really insignificant affair, all done in unseemly haste and unworthy the support of the Government and of the person and events it is supposed to commemorate.

For these reasons and others The National Pocahontas Memorial Association does hereby, rightfully and emphatically, protest against the passage of the aforementioned bill.

Respectfully submitted.

George Tucker Harrison, president, 132 West Seventieth street; Euna C. Atwood, secretary, National Arts Club; William H. Hancock, 244 Riverside drive, New York City; Petro W. Jones, treasurer, 555 Broadway; Harriette M. Johnston-Wood, 6 Wall street; James A. Donegan, 7 Beekman street, New York; Belle de Rivera, 404 West One hundred and fifteenth street, New York City; Thomas W. Pittman, 257 West One hundred and twenty-second street, New York City; Imogene King, 117 West One hundred and fifteenth street, New York City; Elizabeth St. John Matthews, 73 West Ninety-fourth street, New York City; Josephine Pittman Hamilton, 337 West Fourteenth street, New York City.

PENAL CODE.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I send up to the desk a committee amendment, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 189, line 5, strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "nine."

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is made necessary by the fact that the bill was reported last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Clerk be instructed to renumber the sections, to correct clerical errors, to correct the headnotes to the chapters, to correct the references in one section to other sections, to strike out the brackets, and to correct the punctuation as indicated by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the order? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The question was taken, and the order was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to section 236 b and 236 c for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to have an amendment made. The amendment is this: To strike out of those two sections the words "or imprisoned not more than two years, or both." I will make this statement and explanation. That is the punishment provided in the first section of the amendment that I offered yesterday regulating the interstate shipments of liquors, and by inadvertence the same punishment was provided in section 236 b and 236 c. I want now to strike out the words "or imprisoned not more than two years, or both," so as to leave the punishment "by fine of not more than $5,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request to recur to the section?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I would like to know whether or not the gentleman would consent to add the word "knowingly" to the second section and the third section of his amendment, the same as is contained in the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the amendment proposes to do.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Strike out "or imprisonment not more than two years, or both." That is all.

Mr. SABATH. Instead of fine and imprisonment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the added sections 236 b and 236 c strike out the words "or imprisonment not more than two years, or both."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose.

The Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11701, the penal-code bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and to discharge the Committee on the Revision of the Laws from the further consideration of the act (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, and that said Senate act (S. 2982), without reading, be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof, and without reading, the text of the bill (H. R. 11701) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, as amended by the amendments agreed to in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and to pass the said act (S. 2982) as thus amended, and ask for a conference with the Senate on said act (S. 2982).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to suspend the rules and agree to the following motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Moves to suspend the rules and to discharge the Committee on the Revision of the Laws from the further consideration of the act (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, and that said Senate act S. 2982, without reading, be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof, without reading, the text of the bill (H. R. 11701) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, as amended by the amendments agreed to in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and to pass the said act S. 2982, as thus amended, and to ask a conference with the Senate on said act S. 2982.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? If not, a second is considered as ordered.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. Temporarily the Chair will refrain from announcing the committee on conference.

Subsequently the Chair announced as conferees on the penal code bill Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, Mr. PARSONS, and Mr. SHERLEY.

AMENDING RULE XXXVI.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report (H. Rept. No. 2191) from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 576.

Resolved, That section 2 of Rule XXXVI be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"2. Stenographers and reporters other than the official reporters of the House wishing to take down the debates and proceedings may be admitted by the Speaker to the reporters' gallery, over the Speaker's chair, under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe; and he may assign one seat on the floor to the Associated Press reporters, one to the Sun Press Association, one to the United Press Associations, one to the New York Herald Syndicate, and one to the Hearst News Service, and regulate the occupation of the same. And the Speaker may admit to the floor, under such regulations as he may prescribe, one additional representative of each press association."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules, and it does simply this: It modifies the rule which authorizes the Speaker to admit to the floor of the House representatives of certain newspaper associations, by adding thereto the association known as the "New York Herald Association" and the "Hearst News Service." It does one other thing. The present rule describes the New York Sun service as the "Scripps-McRae League." Since that rule was adopted the association has changed its name, and the modified rule as now presented makes that change of Rule XXXVI.

Mr. MANN. Is it designed to have any more desks on the floor of the House if this resolution passes?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is designed to authorize the Speaker to permit the representatives of these additional two associations to have such space on the floor as the Speaker assigns to them.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the form of the resolution, is there room for desks without great inconvenience to Members of the House?

Mr. SHERMAN. This authorizes the Speaker to permit them to occupy the space on the floor that he assigns.

Mr. MANN. But I assume the Committee on Rules in reporting the resolution to this House contemplated an eventual reality and disposed of the question in their own minds and the possibility of having more desks on the floor or of leaving these representatives to do as they best could.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course it was understood the Speaker would authorize them to have space on the floor, although the Committee on Rules did not discuss at what particular spot on the floor space would be found for these representatives without inconvenience to Members of the House. That was not discussed in the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WALDO. I will ask my colleague what this resolution provides for?

Mr. SHERMAN. It provides for the representatives of two additional associations. Now, the associations entitled to the floor have two representatives each, so that while they require two additional desks, there would be two additional representatives for each desk.

Mr. WALDO. Only adding four more?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. "The gentleman" took the floor in his own right.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the gentleman retained the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I still have the floor.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I understood the gentleman to have yielded the floor, and the Chair began to put the question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I still retain the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, where no Member desires to go on——

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman desires me to yield him some time?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. Certainly not.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. That will settle the business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question; but the Chair will hear the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The parliamentary inquiry which I wish to make, in view of the fact that the gentleman from New York had not moved the previous question, but had so far yielded the floor that the Speaker had started to put the motion, whether or not any other gentleman wishing to take the floor in opposition was not entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would answer that parliamentary inquiry by stating that for the convenience of the House, in the transaction of business where matters are not controverted, the Chair, if there seems to be no difference of opinion voicing itself, on his own motion is in the habit of putting the question. Now, then, the Chair was an interloper, and in one sense he is proceeding by unanimous consent in that respect. The gentleman from New York did not yield the floor; and this is one way that the gentleman from Massachusetts voices his objection to the Speaker putting the question to the House. The gentleman from New York is still entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now demand the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 140, noes 57.

So the previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 6155.

The conference report and statement were read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 6155, "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to House amendments numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, and agree to same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to House amendment numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert:

"Provided, That no lands shall be subject to entry under the provisions of this act until such lands shall have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as not being, in his opinion, susceptible of successful irrigation at a reasonable cost from any known source of water supply."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 9, and agree to the same with amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 6. That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land in the State of Utah, subject to entry under this act, do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land, not to exceed in the aggregate two millions acres, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him successfully to farm the same as required by this section."

And that the House agree to the same.

F. W. MONDELL,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
JOS. T. ROBINSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
REED SMOOT,
C. D. CLARK,
A. J. MCLAURIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The act as it passed the House provided for a 320-acre homestead on nonmineral, nonirrigable, nontimbered, unreserved public lands in the States of Colorado, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, and the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico.

The conference report takes the States of California and Idaho out of the list of those to which the law is applicable. The conference report also contains a provision not contained in the House bill restrictive in character and as follows:

"Provided, That no lands shall be subject to entry under the provisions of this act until such lands shall have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as not being, in his opinion, susceptible of successful irrigation at a reasonable cost from any known source of water supply."

Section 6 of the Senate bill provided for a 320-acre homestead, upon which continuous residence was not required, limited to lands which might be designated by the Secretary of the Interior as not having water fit for domestic purposes. In lieu of these provisions of section 6 the conferees agreed upon provisions, confined to not to exceed 2,000,000 acres in the State of Utah, as follows:

"That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land in the State of Utah, subject to entry under this act, do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land, not to exceed in the aggregate 2,000,000 acres, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him successfully to farm the same as required by this section."

As agreed to by the conferees, the act is as follows:

"That any person who is a qualified entryman under the homestead laws of the United States may enter, by legal subdivisions, under the provisions of this act, in the States of Colorado, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, and the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, 320 acres, or less, of nonmineral, nonirrigable, unreserved, and unappropriated surveyed public lands which do not contain merchantable timber, located in a reasonable compact body, and not over 1½ miles in extreme length: Provided, That no lands shall be subject to entry under the provisions of this act until such lands shall have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as not being, in his opinion, susceptible of successful irrigation at a reasonable cost from any known source of water supply.

"SEC. 2. That any person applying to enter land under the provisions of this act shall make and subscribe before the proper officer an affidavit as required by section 2290 of the Revised Statutes, and in addition thereto shall make affidavit that the land sought to be entered is of the character described in section 1 of this act, and shall pay the fees now required to be paid under the homestead laws.

"SEC. 3. That any homestead entryman of lands of the character herein described, upon which final proof has not been made, shall have the right to enter public lands, subject to the provisions of this act, contiguous to his former entry which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres, and residence upon and cultivation of the original entry shall be deemed as residence upon and cultivation of the additional entry.

"SEC. 4. That at the time of making final proofs as provided in section 2291 of the Revised Statutes the entryman under this act shall, in addition to the proofs and affidavits required under the said section, prove by two credible witnesses that at least one-eighth of the area embraced in his entry was continuously cultivated to agricultural crops other than native grasses beginning with the second year of the entry, and that at least one-fourth of the area embraced in the entry was so continuously cultivated beginning with the third year of the entry.

"SEC. 5. That nothing herein contained shall be held to affect the right of a qualified entryman to make homestead entry in the States named in section 1 of this act under the provisions of section 2289 of the Revised Statutes, but no person who has made entry under this act shall be entitled to make homestead entry under the provisions of said section, and no entry under this act shall be commuted.

"SEC. 6. That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land in the State of Utah subject to entry under this act do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land, not to exceed in the aggregate 2,000,000 acres, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him successfully to farm the same as required by this section."

FRANK W. MONDELL,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
JOS. T. ROBINSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The conference report was agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill (H. R. 27054); and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to four hours—two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and two hours by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill; pending which he asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed on this bill in four hours—one-half of the time to be controlled by himself, and one-half by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 27054) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, with Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to make more than a very simple statement. This bill provides for the appropriation of $7,920,111, an amount $1,396,634 less than last year and $9,343,140 less than the estimates.

Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] now desire to use any of his time personally?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not desire to use any time for myself.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Then I will yield some of my time. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HUBBARD].

Mr. HUBBARD of Iowa. This House finds itself in a singular position in its relations to the people whom it represents. The popular branch of the greatest legislative body in history, it is removed from the sympathy of the very people whose mouthpiece and agent it is. Coming directly from the people, intended to represent their sentiments, held in close touch with them by the shortness of our term and the frequency of election, it might reasonably be expected that we should have their favor and support; yet, just recently, in an assertion of the dignity and proper place of the House of Representatives, we found ourselves appealing to deaf ears; we were met with either ridicule, indifference, or open hostility almost everywhere. The Senate, whatever may be its popular place, illustrates, in every conflict which occurs between it and the House, an effectiveness as a legislative instrument and a force in the assertion of its own views such as we can not equal.

In the country at large and in the minds of many Members of the House there has been a growing feeling, whether just or unjust, that the House does not occupy the place which it should. By a process of evolution a few Members of the House (one Member in particular) have been invested with inordinate power. We have surrendered our trusteeship and turned ourselves over for legislative guidance to these few; what they favor succeeds; what they oppose fails; their voice is the voice of the House. I recognize both the inevitableness and necessity of leadership in any body of men, but the leadership should be one, in a body like ours, arising naturally from wisdom in council and strength in action, not from a scheme and system of parliamentary rule and law whereby leadership and control become the rightful appurtenances of an office.

In right and in law every Member of this House, within due limits or orderly procedure, is the equal of every other Member. The House itself has no authority to disturb by rule or law that equality. The one who may be chosen as Speaker, by virtue of that position, is invested with the duties and powers of a presiding officer for the maintenance of order in debate, in accordance with the rules of the House, justly and impartially, without distinction of party or person. As Speaker it should not be his function to choose measures, to press forward this one or to hold that one back, to control the exercise of their functions by committees, to exercise the power of recognition at his mere will and pleasure; to require, in practical effect, every Member who may have a bill or a resolution to urge before the House to gain his consent before the matter can even be called to the attention of the body in any place or at any time when effective action can be had.

We are told, first, that such power is not given to the Speaker under the rules of this body, and, second, that the powers exercised under the rules are essential to the effective conduct of the business of the House. I have heard and read with great interest the able defense of the rules made by our parliamentarian and by the gentlemen from Pennsylvania and Illinois. We are assured, in effect, by all of these that any man who is wise enough and has behind him a majority strong and persistent enough can, in time, force through the House any measure which he may see fit to present in spite of the opposition of the Speaker, the Committee on Rules, or any minority of the House. It is repeatedly said that the Speaker is the servant of the majority and can always be controlled by a majority. I suppose that, technically, these statements are correct, but practically they are wholly misleading and untrue. For instance, last year I believe that a large majority of this House was in favor of free wood pulp. Many skillful men, well acquainted with the rules of procedure of the House, were anxious to bring forward that measure for discussion and action, yet no path could be found before which the Speaker and the committee under his control did not stand as an insuperable obstacle.

The Speaker is given the absolute and uncontrolled power of recognition; from his refusal to recognize there is no appeal; no man, therefore, can even get upon his feet in the House to present any measure to the House, to debate it, to suggest it, to ask for a vote upon it, unless the matter be privileged, without the concurrence and consent of the Speaker.

By his power of appointment his is the hand that deals out place and preferment in the House, and men upon whom he confers such place and preferment, under the existing order, are bound in ties of gratitude to this fellow-Member. Members having measures which are of vital importance to their constituents are dependent, in large part, upon his will and favor, so other ties of gratitude, either in lively expectation or favor conferred, are thus created.

He is the leader, politically, of the majority; the framer and director, in a sense, of its legislative policies. We read in the daily papers of assurances upon the part of the Speaker that certain legislation shall be put through. As such leader of the majority, a position wholly incongruous with that of Speaker, the man who turns against him or refuses to follow the lines of policy marked out by him is irregular, an insurgent, a bolter, met with the frowning looks of his fellows on all sides. Can the exercise of such power as this be left unchecked in the hands of any man, however able and however wise, and we still claim to be a deliberative and representative body? The question is not one of the wisdom of the particular exercise of such power by a Speaker. The power itself, however well administered, is destructive of the principles upon which this House was created. Deny it, who will, as vehemently as may be, we know and feel, and the country knows and feels, with ever-increasing emphasis, that the Speaker sits in such place of unchecked power that his little finger weighs more to create and destroy than all other influences in the House combined.

My own opinion has been, but in this I find myself without support, that there is no necessity for the election of a Speaker from the membership of the House. Many of the abuses which are current would be removed if an able and impartial parliamentarian—for example, Mr. Hinds—were to occupy the place of Speaker unhampered by his obligations as a Member and a partisan. We are, for instance, very frequently told that the Speaker, in refusing recognition to measures for which unanimous consent is asked, exercises merely his right as a Member, but I submit that the exercise upon the floor of the right to refuse unanimous consent upon the part of a Member and the exercise of the presiding officer of such right, in his office or whispered consultation, are two entirely different things. The position of presiding officer in a deliberative assembly and the necessary functions which such an officer must perform are entirely at variance with the place of a partisan leader and the duties of a Member requiring him to take sides for or against measures which may be presented. But if the Speaker of the House is to be a Member, then his power and authority should be circumscribed by even narrower bounds.

It is said that the exercise of these powers on the part of the Speaker is necessary for the conduct of business; that the membership of the House is large; that the number of bills introduced in a session is great; that it is necessary that there should be certain choice of measures to be considered. All of these, it will be noticed, are arguments of convenience, not at all relating to any question of principle. All such arguments discredit the good sense and self-control of the House in the exercise of its proper functions.

In the defense of the power of recognition the picture is drawn of the 400 Members of this House all wildly rising to their feet with one unanimous howl of "Mr. Speaker!" and waving bill or resolution in air, an uncontrolled and uncontrollable mob. From our childhood we have been accustomed to public meetings and deliberative assemblies of all kinds, and it is an unusual thing to find the most unchecked voluntary assembly of American citizens so void of self-control. Every day in the House, in the Committee of the Whole, precisely this opportunity is presented, and debate goes on free, yet with the utmost order. There are but few men that at any one time, in an assemblage such as this, will rise for recognition, and upon the few occasions when confusion might result the House is entirely capable of controlling the situation. In our state legislatures we find entire openness of debate and impartiality of recognition accompanied by none of the terrible consequences portrayed.

The great volume of legislation is pointed out as a reason for restriction and choice. This volume of legislation is an illusory proposition. It is true that we have a great number of bills introduced, but out of the twenty thousand and odd bills which have been pending this session I will venture to say, without accurate estimate, that 80 or 90 per cent of them are purely private bills, of which but very few involve discussion, even in committee, and, coming into the House for action, by far the larger portion of them are absolutely determined by the action of the committee to which they have been referred.

The appropriation bills, while most important, rarely involve partisan dispute. The members of the minority are ordinarily as eager in defense of the committee's action as are those of the majority. The House does not require to be defended against itself by the interposition of the Speaker's authority upon these bills. You can almost count upon the fingers of your two hands the vital and far-reaching measures of public policy which have come before this Congress and the last involving any long-continued discussion, and in these the House needed no protection from a guiding hand.

These suggested objections to broad freedom of action and control on the part of the House are most fallacious. In themselves they discredit the House and emphasize the necessity of the change proposed. For, if it be true that the House, with these rules relaxed, would become an ungoverned mob, that it is incapable of selecting and judging as to what measures are of prime importance, that it can not discuss them and control both the time and temper of the discussion, adjusting itself to the occasion as the occasion arises, then the country is right in its feeling with relation to the House; and we are wasting the public time, temper, and money. The wise course will be for us at the opening of the next session, after the election of a Speaker and a general commission of the wise, to take a recess and return only for the purpose of ratifying their decisions. Whether it be wise or unwise, Congress was not so framed. The very thought of it was that the average representation by the average man presenting fairly the thought of the whole people was more apt to secure, in the long run, right, proper, and just results than any selection of wise men, however excellent they might be. We are not men of genius, we are not great lawyers, we are not great statesmen, we are not learned; the average man here is simply fairly representative of his own community and his own folks. Any set of rules which the skilled only can use, which cuts off the participation of the humblest and least learned man here from a place and part in the deliberations of this body, is a wrong to the very Constitution under which we exist.

Some people seem to think that the Reed rules are the source of the whole trouble. The fact is that the Reed rules accomplished in one direction precisely the object which we are seeking to accomplish now in another direction. The minority, by reason of foolish technicalities in the rules and narrow technical construction of them, was able to hinder and impede the will of the majority, which, in any representative assembly, must be the controlling power. The Reed rules made it possible for the House to do business by the application of common sense in the counting of a quorum and preventing the absurd abuse of the motion to adjourn and to take a recess, as pointed out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But in removing these time-honored abuses and leaving intact the power of the Speaker we greatly increased his strength and diminished the power of opposition. The power to filibuster, to obstruct and to hold up legislation, gave to the minority or to any Member in case of need a weapon of offense with which recognition could be compelled and measures forced to consideration. When this was taken away the Speaker was left without let or hindrance to the enforcement of his will. You have rightfully taken from the neck of the House the abuse of technical construction; complete the work by taking from the freedom of the House the unreined power of its servant, the Speaker.

I leave to others more skilled than I the duty of presenting in their purpose and effect the rules which we propose. They do not go as far as I should like to go; but I recognize my own fallible judgment, and I believe that if adopted they will go far toward restoring to the House its proper functions and casting upon it its due responsibility. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FOSTER of Vermont having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 12760. An act to correct the military record of Isaac N. Fordyce.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 67.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the conferees on the disagreements of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, be, and hereby are, authorized to take into consideration as if in disagreement the portion of the said bill relating to the salary of the Secretary of State, and also to report on any provision in relation to the law affecting said salary.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 100.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (S. 5989) authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Maj. C. De W. Wilcox decoration and diploma presented by the Government of France, be, and is hereby, rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill the word "Wilcox," in line 3 of the bill, be stricken out and the word "Willcox" substituted therefor; also amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Maj. C. De W. Willcox decoration and diploma presented by Government of France," so as to correctly spell the name of the prospective recipient, inaccurately stated in the bill.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifty minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to continue the discussion begun by my colleague [Mr. HUBBARD of Iowa], and I do so with very much less of timidity than I have suffered from on previous occasions when I have undertaken to insist that the rules of this House were not inspired. Heretofore the subject of opposition to the divine origin of the rules has been treated with levity or with contempt. No man has had anything more than a mere hearing by sufferance, as much as to say "Go on, gentlemen, discuss this matter as far as you will, but there will be no change in the rules."

I take it that that opinion is not so firmly held as formerly. I notice that on the 8th day of January the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] made an elaborate defense of the rules of this House. He spoke ably, and from his point of view his speech is an admirable one. The parliamentary clerk of this House not long ago, in an able magazine article, again came to the defense of the rules. That article has been reprinted in our RECORD.

Not a great while ago the gentleman from Pennsylvania published a magazine article that was extensively advertised and believed by many people to be a defense so complete as that answer was impossible.

Mr. Chairman, each one of these gentlemen, in my belief, has attempted to befog the question. It has got to be now in some circles that anyone who dissents from the perfection of the rules is an insurgent, that he is running counter to authority properly established and placing himself almost, if not quite, in the class of the criminal. These gentlemen who defend these rules are not content to let them stand upon their merits, but they try to throw around them the halo of a great name. It is suggested that we who would secure a change are assaulting the Reed rules. Not so. That is a slander upon our purpose. There is not one of the Reed rules that I would change. They in their time were as necessary as the changes that we now propose should be had. Then this House was in the hands of a mob whenever the mob spirit was rife.

Then, under the three privileged motions—to adjourn, to adjourn to a time certain, and to take a recess—under these three privileged motions a half a dozen men could hold the House captive for hours, and thus compel a round of voting that was known as a "filibuster."

The Reed rules were for the purpose of doing away with that irresponsible mob, and the purpose was accomplished by taking from two of these motions their privileged character by giving to the Speaker the power to determine when a motion was dilatory and imposing on the Speaker the right to count a quorum that was present rather than a voting quorum. Those, with the rule enlarging the powers of the Committee on Rules, constituted all the changes known as the "Reed rules." Those, in my humble judgment, are as they should be, and I, at least, would advocate no change.

But, Mr. Chairman, while the House escaped from the power of an irresponsible mob, it has not escaped from the undue and overgrown power of the Speaker. The importance of escaping from this power of the Speaker I hope to make somewhat apparent. And right here let me say, Mr. Chairman, in my belief none of the animadversions upon the Speaker can be imputed to the person of the gentleman who occupies that office in this body. If we are to have a benevolent despot, then the benevolent gentleman who is our despot would be my choice. [Laughter.] If I were to be a Member of the next House, I have no doubt I would cast my vote for him as Speaker. It is not the man, it is the system, the office, that I am in rebellion against. And I rebel against it because, through the power that we have invested in this gentleman, and that he has invested from time to time, by construction of the rules, in himself, we have changed the whole character of our Government.

When the Constitution was ordained, the great plan upon which it was builded was that the political power should be in the hands of the people; that it should be divided into units with absolute equality, and one of these units should be given to each one of the electors. Those units of power were to be exerted through the ballot. From the fact that it was impossible to assemble all the multitudes that possessed this political power the plan of representative government was ordained.

At first these units were grouped, and probably 6,000 of these units were grouped together in a constituency, and they were given a Representative. The fundamental idea, however, was that each one of the Representatives stood upon a plane, invested with the same amount of political power, no more, no less. The idea of the Constitution establishes the equality of Representatives and the equality of constituencies. The 50,000 units of power that I represent are here the equal of those that inhabit the Danville district. They are the equal of any other, and they have the same right to the same potential voice here that any other constituency may have.

But, Mr. Chairman, see what we have done in the way of taking from the constituency that I represent their power and placing it in the hands of the Representative of the Danville district of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, how important is recognition in this House—equality of recognition, the right of every man to deliver the message of his constituents. Under the rules of this House that power is taken away from me. I have no power whatever that is not yielded to me by the gentleman from the Danville district. For more than seventy-five years the rule of recognition in this House was the universal rule that applies in all deliberative bodies of which any of us have knowledge.

I am told that in every parliament, in every legislative convocation the world around, that old rule that required the presiding officer, when not prohibited by another rule, to recognize that man upon whom his eye first rested prevails. It was the rule of this House. It was the rule when the Speaker's chair was made memorable by the occupancy of Henry Clay, of James G. Blaine, of all of the older distinguished men who have given renown to the House by the manner in which they presided over its deliberations. But in the Forty-sixth Congress that rule was changed. In the early part of that Congress the rule read:

When any Member is about to speak in debate or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise from his seat and respectfully address himself to Mr. Speaker, and shall confine himself to the question under debate and avoid personality.

Later on in that same Congress that rule was changed by the interpolation of the words, after "Mr. Speaker," "and on being recognized shall proceed," so that it read:

He shall rise from his seat and respectfully address himself to Mr. Speaker, and on being recognized shall proceed, and shall confine himself to the question under debate and avoid personality.

The interpolation of those words took away from the individual the right to be heard, made him a mendicant at the feet of the Speaker begging for the privilege to be heard, and gave to the Speaker, without appeal, the right to deny to that Member or to his constituency the power and the right to present any matter to this House. There is no appeal, Mr. Chairman, from the decision of the Speaker upon the question of recognition, no matter how arbitrary the decision, no matter how the mailed hand of the tyrant may be present; there is no appeal. His voice is the final voice, and he can stifle when he chooses the voice of any Member in this House.

But gentlemen will say, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] has said, that we have the freest of debate here. Yes. What is our debate to-day? We have now pending before us a proposition for the expenditure of many millions of dollars for the purpose of defending our coasts, a most important question, the defense of the borders of the Nation.

Yet, under the rules of this House, I am not discussing that. There has to be some safety valve, and therefore, not under the rules, but under the procedure of the House, the methods of the House, the interpretations of the Speaker of the rules, and, in turn, of the procedure of the House, I am permitted not to discuss the question, not to engage in debate with some gentleman, but to deliver my views upon a question entirely outside of the record before us. Then, we have our five-minute debate, where, I believe, we are required to confine ourselves to the subject. The most of it is the uniform subject of striking out the last word or the two words next to the period, or some important question of that kind. That is the kind of debate that we have, and that is all the kind; but suppose that I want to call up a bill for the consideration of this House, how am I to do it? I must go to the Speaker, I must negotiate with the Speaker, I must get the good will of the Speaker, with regard not to myself but to my proposition. If I can not succeed, if he disapproves of the subject, he will not recognize me; but we have a day—it occurs once a month—when motions to suspend the rules may be made, and with the aid of a two-thirds vote propositions may be enacted into law; but, again, I have no rights in that day. I can only participate provided I can satisfy the Speaker that the proposition that I want determined by a two-thirds vote is such that it meets his approval. If it does not, I can not even have the poor advantage of appealing to the House for a two-thirds majority in support of my measure.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that this kind of procedure is degrading to the membership of the House. [Applause.] No Member ought to be compelled to go to another man, his equal and no more, a representative of a constituency in no whit superior to his own, and ask for the poor privilege of calling his measure to the attention of the House. [Applause.] And I do not hesitate to assert that if our constituents knew what we had done with their power, how we have betrayed our trust, how we have turned over their rights to another man, how we have imposed this wonderful difference between one constituency and another, not one of us would get back again. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen say that this power is necessary. I deny it, and in support of my denial I make profert of the experience of the world up to fifty years ago. The innovation "became necessary" then, never before. Everywhere else in the world this power is withheld from one man. But, Mr. Chairman, our rules provide for difficulties that may result from too much of zeal on the part of Members to get their business before the House, for the rules provide, clause 2 of Rule XIV, what shall be done when two or more Members rise at once. There is when the mob comes, as told in our illustrations and referred to by my friend, when a hundred men are on their feet clamoring for recognition. It is then that this rule gives peace and quiet to the assembly. I read:

When two or more Members rise at once the Speaker shall name the Member who is first to speak.

Mr. Chairman, that has been the rule; that was the old rule before the innovation that I have spoken of, occurring in the Forty-sixth Congress. But, Mr. Chairman, this is only a small portion of the betrayal of the trust that is reposed in the membership of this House. Experience in this body teaches us that more and more the legislation becomes legislation by committees. The deliberations, the investigations, the broadest discussion, all occur, or largely occur, in the committee room, and we are disposed more and more each year to rely upon the judgment of our colleagues who have instituted these investigations and who have arrived at the conclusions that they lay before us in their reports. So that the question of who shall constitute the committees every year becomes a more and more important one as this practice of reliance upon the committees becomes more and more the usage of the House. Our committees are appointed, how? By the Speaker. Unrestrained, he is absolutely powerful, and his voice alone is heard in these appointments.

No matter how important a subject may be, the Speaker determines who the committee shall be composed of that is to consider that subject. Ah! but not only that; if the Speaker were an unjust man and had made a mistake in his constitution of a committee, he still has the remedy in his hands, because he assigns all bills to the committees, and they go, as the rule is, where the Speaker assigns them. A wonderful power this! Then, more than that, Mr. Chairman, he selects the chairmen of the committees. How necessary it is that men should have ambitions with regard to their committee assignment. The man who has not is unfit, in my judgment, to a place here. They are the places of vantage from which a man can render the most efficient service in the direction of his choice, so that to be upon this committee or that may be a matter of supreme importance to one. A lawyer who has made a study and practice of his profession, his vocation during all of his life, to him the affairs of the Judiciary Committee come with ease. He prefers to be there. Another prefers that his sphere of usefulness be the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Those are places sought after by men. Men of righteous ambition seek after them. They have the right to this selection of choice, so far as they are concerned, and it is not unreasonable that they should be moved by ambitious consideration in connection with such appointments. The chairmanship is important, for there is, as almost all men will admit, an added power, an increased responsibility, a potency to the voice of the chairman given by his appointment, other things being equal, so that men desire these places. And then, Mr. Chairman, there is something more than that, because there is growing up in this House, and every other one, from year to year, a feeling of loyalty on the part of chairmen to the Speaker. It is expected. A distinguished gentleman from my own State who filled the Speaker's chair for years so acceptably used to speak of chairmen of committees as "my cabinet." He expected loyalty from them; and when you remember that there are more than 50 of these chairmen, most of them having membership in "my cabinet," each of them owning in his own feeling more or less of loyalty because of favors bestowed, what a power that is upon the part of the Speaker.

Mr. Chairman, another source of power of the Speaker is in that faulty legislation most reprehensibly recognized as "unanimous consent." At first blush, Mr. Chairman, a man would say, why, if unanimous consent can be obtained there ought to be no fear of such legislation. Unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, does not imply knowledge, it does not imply familiarity with a subject, does not imply consent to the legislation in the proper sense of the term. It means this: We recognize the fact that the greater number of bills that pass this House pass by unanimous consent; that if we get a measure through the possibilities are that it will be by unanimous consent. Therefore, no man probably, except the gentleman from Illinois, desires to take upon himself the odium of objection. He knows that his turn will come after a while and that a fellow, with a memory sharpened by disappointment, may rise to stick the javelin of "I object!" into his little measure. Therefore he keeps silent, hoping that the watchdog of the Treasury, or the alert leader on our side of the House, who always knows all that is going on and is always alert to see that no evil is done, will make the proper objection and prevent the objectionable measure from coming before the House. I think that there could be no more faulty system of legislation than that which proceeds by the log-rolling system that we denominate as "unanimous consent."

Mr. Chairman, again I want to assert with no cause of complaint upon my part or upon the part of any one of the gentlemen associated with me in this movement to secure certain amendments to the rules—29 of them only, I am sorry to say; but there are 29 of them, and there is nothing cold about their feet [laughter and applause]—I want to say that these 29 gentlemen would unite with me in saying that they make no fight upon the distinguished Member who now adorns the Speaker's chair. Every one of them, so far as my knowledge goes, is his personal friend, and probably, certainly so far as my knowledge goes, every one of them would be his supporters in the next Congress if they had the power to be.

I want to call attention to another fact, and that is that even in the changes to these rules we ask for there is nothing personal.

There is another body, not far removed from this, where there is just now a contention over the rules; and there is, I am told, a certain portion of the membership that are dubbed, either derisively or contemptuously, as the case may be, as "insurgents." Their purpose is materially different from ours. They have causes of grievance, they tell us. They feel that the distribution of that which may be distributed by a deliberative body is not equal, and that they do not get their share. Their struggle is for better assignments. They are making a fight, as I am told, against the gray wolves of that body. [Laughter.] There are no gray wolves here that disturb the equanimity of any of the 29 insurgents of our body.

Mr. Chairman, we do not ask for radical changes. We think that there ought to be one day, at least, in every week when the House automatically puts itself in conjunction with the calendars and takes up the business on those calendars and, by orderly procedure, disposes of them.

We hear it said often that the majority of this House controls its legislation. I would like to ask any one of the distinguished gentlemen who compose the revered Committee on Rules, by what process the majority of this House would secure a change in the rules? I assert that there is no power against the will of the Committee on Rules and the Speaker. There is no power, I reiterate; and I would be glad if some one of those gentlemen would tell us how, if I am wrong, this change can be made. What would be the process? We would introduce our resolution providing for the change. Where would it go? The Speaker, a member of the Committee on Rules, knowing the trustworthy character of that admirable committee, would at once consign it to the Committee on Rules. Ah, it is easy to get into the Committee on Rules; but by what hoist and by what petard would we get out of the Committee on Rules? [Laughter and applause.]

There is none, Mr. Chairman. Men have been studying that subject for lo, these many days, and they have come to the conclusion that while we do not know anything about the laws of the Medes and Persians, whether it was possible to change them or not, we do know that it is not possible to change the rules of this House without you have the consent of the Speaker and his two colleagues. [Laughter and applause.]

We are told, though, that we will have a call of committees. The call of committees has been jogged by some process or other into considerable activity lately. [Laughter and applause.] I understand we have had a call of the committee three times, four times, during this session. But if my recollection serves me right no bill was passed under that order during two years preceding the beginning of this session. I may be wrong about that, but I think that I am not. For two years, a colleague suggests to me here, that rule of ours, that order of business of ours, that sixth item of procedure in the order of business lay in disuse. In fact the attention of the Speaker was never called to it; and undoubtedly he had forgotten that it had an existence among the rules. [Laugher and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, we would like to change, if we could, the rule whereby we can have one day in each week, by automatic process, where the calendars would be reached, and bills could be taken under that sixth order and disposed of.

We do not regard that, however, as nearly so important as we do taking from the Speaker the inordinate power that he now has. Take that away and other things, other difficulties will smooth themselves without trouble. Take away that inordinate power and then I imagine there will be no difficulty, at least of the character embodied in my complaint. It was never intended by those who wrote the Constitution that the office of Speaker should be one of the exalted magnitude that we have made it.

And before I discuss that, I want to discuss another element of the power of the Speaker that is derived through the construction that the Speaker puts upon our rules and the construction that he puts upon our precedents. In other words, a rule has a construction given it by some gentleman who occupies the chair, temporarily, perhaps, or possibly by a Speaker. Now, that becomes, in the language of the Chair, a procedure of the House, and in its turn it is subject to interpretation, and that again in turn subject to interpretation, and here you have rules and a precedent established through ruling. Then it becomes procedure, and then that procedure is in turn interpreted by the Speaker, and so on the chain goes. Why, we saw something of that to-day. I may be wrong, but I thought that a gentleman took his seat after having made a motion. I thought that the Speaker began to put a motion. It occurred to me that the gentleman could not occupy the floor while the Speaker was putting a motion. It occurred to me that those two things were inconsistent, and that the gentleman should have ceased his speech before a courteous Speaker would have begun the performance of his duty—and our Speaker is always courteous. But we found that there was precedent, that there was procedure that enabled the gentleman after he had gotten through with his part of the performance, and after the Speaker had begun his part of the performance, still to keep his place as one of the important characters in that little drama. That is procedure.

Here is another illustration. We have unanimous consent. Any gentleman has the right to object. But growing out of that right to object comes, through interpretation and through procedure, another rule that allows a man to withhold his objection and go on with a colloquy.

I took the trouble to count in one day's proceedings nine columns of the RECORD taken up by those colloquies where gentlemen had reserved their right to object, finally objecting; nine columns in a day. I think there are days when there is much more than that. I am simply speaking of this to show how the rules of this House are made; not by the will of the House, not by the voice of a majority, but by interpretation, and interpretation upon interpretation, by usage, by procedure, and interpretation of usage and procedure, until now look! The interpretation rules of this House fill eight of those immense volumes, while the rules themselves are, I think, but 50 in number and occupy about 20 pages in this little volume in front of me.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no expectation that there will be any change in the rules of this House at this session. I am not at all hopeful that there will be at the next; but in my humble judgment, sir, if there was no session of this Congress until December of this year, I believe there would be by that time such an expression of the people as would compel the adoption of a system of laws under which the membership of this House could be restored to their old equality, and constituents should have like equality.

There is a hopeful sign. It is seldom in my life that I have found in a Democratic platform anything that consoled my soul. [Laughter.] It has been my duty during more than fifty years to criticise the performances of Democratic national conventions, as those performances found expression in their resolutions. But here is one that I commend:

> The House of Representatives was designed by the fathers of the Constitution to be the popular branch of our Government, responsive to the will of the people. We demand that the House of Representatives shall again become a deliberative body, controlled by a majority of the people's Representatives and not by the Speaker; and we pledge ourselves to adopt such rules and regulations to govern the House of Representatives as will enable a majority of its Members to conduct its deliberations and control its legislation.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who would condemn the Ten Commandments if by some accident the Democratic party were to adopt them. [Laughter.] I believe this to be good and wholesome truth. I know that the people are thinking about this matter of the control of the House of Representatives. I know that this agitation will go on; that the people will in time become informed of the real situation; that they will know how faithless we have been in the discharge of our great trust, when we have had reposed in us the care and guardianship of the equality of constituents, the care and guardianship of representative democracy in this country. Those ideas I know are dear to the American people, not less so than they were to their fathers, who ordained the provisions of the Constitution. Every day of agitation will make more and more friends. Ah, no; not more friends, because they are friends already; but the agitation will challenge the attention of the people; and when the attention of the American people is centralized upon this great question, then there will be action, and then there will be no difficulty in taking from the Speaker of this House the immense political power that he now has. [Applause.] He was in contemplation of the Constitution a very inconsequential officer. The Speaker is referred to but once in the Constitution, and that is in the clause that gives the House of Representatives the power to elect its Speaker and other officers; and in my judgment, it was intended that if the House of Representatives so chose there was provision made and power given to elect a Speaker from the great body of the people, as the other officers are elected. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifty-four minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky to use some of his time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifty minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, the subject of my remarks this afternoon is diplomacy and our fleet. These remarks were intended to be made in connection with the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, but I have made an exchange of time because of the chances of being out of the city, possibly, when the other bill comes up.

There is advantage in taking up the discussion of the fleet at times other than those when the naval appropriation bill is being considered. Some Members seem to imagine when reference is made to national dangers in any part of the world that it is simply a device to promote the chances of securing additional battle ships. Fortunately, the fleet of this country has its usefulness, and I believe its greatest usefulness, in the long years of peace. Though diplomacy begins when war ends, and ends when war begins, it owes its effectiveness chiefly to the fleet. The whole subject of my remarks, therefore, will relate to the question of the usefulness of the fleet in days of peace.

Diplomacy is the relationship of sovereigns. We should bear this fundamental fact in mind when we take account of our country's relations with the rest of the world. Section 10, Article I, of the Constitution confines diplomatic functions to the Federal Government. The same condition exists in other composite governments with vassal states and dependencies. These sovereign nations acknowledge no superior; unlike individuals, they are subject to no restraining authority. They are beyond the domain of law and are subject only to the impulses that sway human nature unrestrained.

I make no detraction from international law as it exists. But the fact is that in the true sense of law there is no such thing as law between nations. There is no codification of the so-called "tenets" of international law. There is nobody that has authority to say what is and what is not law between nations. International law, Mr. Chairman, rests upon precedent, and amid differing opinions the world to-day has no court to decide what is precedent and what is not. Between nations the condition of law to-day is analogous to the rudimentary condition of the common law within civilized nations before courts had been formed with authority to say what was precedent.

Even the generally accepted tenets are still uncodified. All that exists is the record of decisions of national courts which have no authority beyond national bounds. An international common law is in the forming, but it is only in the forming and is still without the machinery for its authoritative and orderly growth. Wherever there is a condition of law and order in a civilized community there is not only the fully developed common law of the nation, and courts with full authority to say what is common law, but there is also a body with authority to make new law, and a body with full power and authority to execute law and to impose adequate penalty for violation of law. There are no such bodies out in the world. The principle of an international court has been accepted, and the court itself is being organized, but when organized it will have no jurisdiction except what may be conferred upon it in such particular case by the litigating parties. The principle of an international congress has been accepted, but only the principle. It is hoped that the great Hague conferences, the third of which is to meet in 1915, will become periodical, automatic, and self-governing, and will evolve into an authoritative international congress to make laws for the nations to live under, but as yet these conferences are not fixed beyond the third and are not self-governing, and have only advisory authority. But even after the establishment of an international congress there would still be no international executive. This will be the last and most difficult branch of an international government, for it would entail the relinquishment of part of national sovereignty. Nations are sovereign from their birth, and even the smallest nation is jealous of the slightest suggestion of infringing its sovereignty. Anything touching even remotely this delicate subject suggested at either Hague conference brought the delegates to their feet instantly in opposition.

The best that can be said is that the embryo of an international organization has been spawned, but that is all. An enthusiasm that assumes that organization exists between nations capable of assuming the responsibility of administering justice deceives itself and endangers the progress of peace and justice. It becomes a public menace when it advocates leaving a nation's life, independence, and vital interests to hang upon a myth. To advise a nation to disarm because it is peaceable and would prefer an international organization for justice would be like advising the peaceable inhabitants on a wild frontier to disarm and allow the lawless to reign. Such action would retard and prevent the development of a condition of law and order.

The world as yet has no legislative body to make law, no judicial body to adjudicate and interpret law, no executive body to enforce law. The obligations that exist are those entered into by the sovereign nations in agreements known as "treaties," but treaties are not held subject to the generally accepted principles of justice and right. Who is to say when two nations are to make treaty engagements and what are to be those agreements? Can China go to the nations of the earth and get the most-favored-nation treaties to-day? No. Could Korea get any treaty at all? No. Can the weak have access to the benefits of treaties? No.

After a treaty has been entered into, who is to interpret the meaning of the terms of the treaty? There is no one. Finally, when the terms of a treaty are clear, who is to see to it that both contracting parties shall live up to those terms? There is no one. The pages of history, and the pages of contemporaneous history in particular, are full of the most flagrant violations of solemn treaty obligations. Even where treaties of arbitration have been entered into, calling in a third party, the field of arbitration has been reduced to the minimum, specifically excluding from arbitration questions affecting the honor, independence, territory, and vital interests.

A world public opinion is steadily growing and increased intercommunication is developing an internationalism, but the same causes that are bringing the nations together are even more rapidly welding together the parts of individual nations and accentuating national characteristics. Internationalism is growing, but the present is the age of nationalism which has caused all the great nations but America to leap to arms, to form every able-bodied citizen into a soldier, and to ply the national resources to their limit to maintain armies and navies.

Thus the field of diplomacy is clearly beyond the realm of law, and the sovereign nations with whom we hold diplomatic relations are subject to all the forces that sway human nature when it is free from the restraint of higher authority. A full recognition of this fundamental truth must lie at the basis of a wise and effective diplomacy.

In general terms, there are two classes of forces that prompt the actions of men—those springing from self-interest and those springing from altruism. With nations, as with men, the relative strength of the two classes of forces varies with the stage of social evolution, but even in the most advanced stage there can be no doubt as to which class of forces is dominant, for the laws regulating the relation between individuals in all civilized communities assume that in the great mass of human actions the supreme motive is self-interest. No right, however small, is left dependent upon the altruistic impulses of others. This being the case, when men are neighbors and compatriots under a common authority, much more must it be the case between these foreign to each other, free from any restraint. As a matter of fact, no nation has as yet acknowledged any right of another nation to interfere simply on grounds of altruism. Our attempting to so interfere in Cuba brought on war, and even here we contended that the proximity of Cuba gave us a basis in self-interest. The Monroe doctrine is the greatest instance of a foreign policy based on altruism, but here also we felt called on to seek justification on the grounds of self-preservation.

History shows that in the long run justice is the best policy between nations as honesty is the best policy between individuals, but it can not be expected that in the presence of immediate advantage from injustice a nation would discern the ultimate advantage of a just policy. Every system of justice within nations depends upon a system of punishments which imposes penalties greater than could be the immediate advantages of violation, invoking thus the motive of self-interest on the side of obedience. Every system of punishments is founded upon power, and depends for effectiveness upon the adequacy of the power behind the law and the certainty of its punitive consequences when law is broken.

Between nations where there is no common authority and no common power each nation must be its own judge of what is just and must provide the power necessary to have its just policies prevail, and the more ample the power the less the chance of necessity for its use. Americans should realize that at the present stage of the world our country's foreign policies, though scrupulously just, must depend absolutely upon our national power, and that without ample power at hand these policies must fail. A good illustration is found in the case of the Russian occupation of Manchuria. America called on Russia to evacuate Manchuria as Russia had promised, and American consuls were assigned to Manchurian cities with the full authority of China. But we had no fleet in the Pacific, no power available beneath our demand. So Russia promptly stopped our consuls, ignored our demand, and remained in Manchuria.

It is conservative to say that if America had possessed in the Pacific Ocean a fleet commensurate with our interests bordering that ocean Russia would have acceded to our just demand and the evacuation of Manchuria would have spared the world the war between Russia and Japan. Another modern illustration of the effect of having power and lacking power is seen in the contrast of the terms of the treaty of Shimonoseki and those of the treaty of Portsmouth. At the time of concluding the former treaty Japan was weak; at the time of the latter she was powerful. The former treaty forbade her taking from China precisely the same territory she took by the latter. At the time of the former treaty the powers forbade any encroachment upon Korea. Shortly after the latter treaty Japan absorbed Korea, and not a protest was heard from any power. A good illustration is found in the contrast of our treatment of Chinese and Japanese in America. Another illustration is found in the contrast of the terms of the treaty of San Stefano, drafted at Constantinople at the conclusion of the Russo-Turkish war, when Russia was master of the field, and the terms of the treaty of Berlin that supplanted the former treaty. The appearance of the British fleet in the Sea of Marmora and British troops in Malta caused Russia to consent to transfer negotiations from San Stefano to Berlin, and Austrian cooperation with the British took away from Russia the control of the situation. The treaty of Berlin promptly set aside the terms of the treaty of San Stefano, and Russia thereby lost practically all of the fruits of her victory over the Turks.

Since each nation naturally claims that its own contentions are just, the best results are accomplished when both nations or groups of nations in a controversy have power, so that an equilibrium is established, and so that it would be more advantageous for both to compromise than to take the consequences of a rupture. The balance of power established in Europe is doubtless the cause of a peaceful issue from the recent incidents of Casa Blanca, Algeciras, and Fashoda, and is doubtless the cause of the maintenance of peace thus far in the Balkan disturbances.

If the difference with a nation is of a fundamental nature and liable to become acute, then it is wise to develop a substantial superiority of power before settlement is attempted or pressed. In certain cases it is clearly the height of folly to try to settle differences without this margin of superiority of power.

For a number of years Bulgaria has been developing an army, until she had 350,000 to 400,000 trained soldiers, organized and equipped with the best arms and artillery. Then she notified Turkey of her decision to be independent. If she had not gathered the power, the declaration of independence would have meant war and practically certain disaster. As it was, Turkey has practically acquiesced.

The first expedition Commodore Perry headed was ordered to quit Japanese waters, and it had to quit without results or fight. The second expedition was a powerful one and proved successful. The first would have resulted in war, if pressed; the second was successful, with peace.

While the United States was in the midst of the civil war the French Government gave no heed to our protest against the invasion of Mexico. When the civil war ended General Sheridan was ordered to the Rio Grande with 60,000 men, and an army of over 1,000,000 seasoned veterans were held ready behind those, while we had the most effective navy in the world. We then called on France in strong terms, and Maximilian began at once the work of evacuation.

During the civil war we protested against the building and fitting out of the Alabama in vain. When the war was over, and when the French had evacuated Mexico, we pressed our claim for a settlement and secured full compensation. If these cases had been pressed while the civil war occupied our forces, both of them would have ended in war and in disaster.

If America had waited until her navy counted four additional battle ships, the trouble in Cuba could have been settled by diplomacy. But we did not have the margin of power, consequently we had war. The same can be said of the war of 1812, the war with the Barbary pirates, and the war with France. It is thought by many that if the Union had possessed larger power at the outset, the civil war could have been brought to a speedy close, if not averted altogether.

The question of a proper adjustment of power is so vital to successful diplomacy it is important to consider the elements of a nation's power. These elements may be grouped into two classes—resources and preparations.

Resources are based upon population and wealth. Population enters as a factor according to the number and the fighting characteristics of the average. Recent events tend to show that there is not the discrepancy formerly supposed to exist between the fighting capacity of the white man and yellow man. It is a reasonable conclusion that the time has come for the white nations to cease to fight among themselves, for the day appears approaching when it will require the cooperation of all the white men of the earth to establish an equilibrium with the superior numbers of the yellow men. Common peril caused families to combine into clans, clans to combine into tribes, tribes to combine into nations. The time is almost in sight when the same course will bring the white nations and yellow nations into unions, prior to the possible joining of the unions into a general brotherhood.

Wealth enters as a factor according to its prior accumulation and the opportunity for creation during the course of hostilities. Simply accumulated wealth may prove only a temptation and advantage to an enemy, and the oportunity for continued creation of wealth may be cut off by a sudden invasion or the destruction of maritime interests.

Preparations are of two kinds—those on land and those on the sea.

Land preparations consist of armies and coast defenses. Armies comprise standing armies and reserves, including militia of various kinds.

It can be said roughly that every other great nation, including Japan, maintains a standing army of from 400,000 men to 600,000 men, a force about 8 to 10 times the force of the American standing army. Every other great nation, including Japan, has a trained reserve, with complete organization and equipment, ready on a few days' notice, ranging from 1,500,000 men to 3,000,000 men. The British have not yet reached the above figures, but are rapidly approaching them. America has no reserve in the true sense of the word, but only 110,000 militia scattered throughout the nation in small units, with no division organization. In every other great country every able-bodied citizen is a trained soldier. In America not one man in a hundred has the slightest training or knowledge of the duties of a modern soldier.

In coast defenses America has more property exposed within gunshot of the water than has all the rest of the world combined, but our imperfect scheme of coast defense is only about two-thirds completed and we lack 4,000 coast artillerymen of having enough men to man the guns already mounted with half crews, and we have no mobile forces for support and protection from attack by landing parties coming up from the rear. In every other great country the coast-defense schemes are complete, and the force of men is sufficient for two and even three full crews, while a large mobile army insures complete protection against attack from the rear.

On the land, therefore, America's preparations may be regarded comparatively as nil. We are living thus the one unarmed nation in an armed world, and our security and our preparations of power depend almost wholly upon our fleet.

Preparations on the sea consist of the navy proper and the merchant marine. The merchant marine is not only an important part of naval power, as furnishing auxiliary vessels and reserves of seamen, but is also necessary for the transportation of troops oversea. America has practically no ocean-going merchant marine, consequently we are gravely deficient in reserves and auxiliaries, and would be found powerless to transport a considerable number of troops oversea within a reasonable time.

Every other great nation has a large merchant marine prepared to transport from 100,000 to 300,000 troops in a single expedition, and to furnish reserves and auxiliaries without delay.

We are thus dependent more than any other nation upon our commissioned fleet. Furthermore, our vital coast lines are so far apart that a fleet in one ocean can not be counted on for service in the other ocean. Even after the Panama Canal is completed we shall be compelled to maintain a separate fleet for each ocean.

As to the relative value of resources and preparation in making up power as a basis of diplomacy, we must bear in mind that modern wars are becoming more and more a test of preparation. When Prussia struck Austria in 1866, the war was over in a few months—a test of preparation. When Germany struck France in 1870, the same thing. When Japan struck Russia, the same thing. This result is due to the magnitude of the operations, and therefore the necessity for long preparation and perfect organization, and to the swiftness of modern transportation. It is estimated that at least three years would be necessary to create a modern army in America and prepare it to cope with modern armies which are kept ready to move on a moment's notice and which can cross the ocean in a few weeks. I do not doubt that if war came, America would persist as in 1861–1865, and would make the struggle a test of endurance and therefore largely of resources, but we can not expect the world to have the same opinion, and therefore as differences arise with other nations we must regulate our diplomacy largely according to our relative preparation, and therefore largely according to the relative size of our fleet in the ocean in question. Vice versa, as long as our fleet is inadequate for both oceans we should distribute it between the Atlantic and Pacific according to the nature and acuteness of differences that exist or are liable to arise in the direction of Europe or in the direction of Asia.

Having established the fundamental principles upon which successful diplomacy must be based, it remains now to examine the question of the differences that arise between nations and then to draw the practical conclusions as they apply to America.

The important differences between nations out of which wars have arisen may be grouped into four classes, namely: First, questions of territory; second, questions of trade and commerce; third, race antagonism; fourth, conflict of institutions.

Let us examine how these differences are involved in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and consequently what should be our policy as to size and distribution of power, and then, in the light of our actual condition of power, what should be our diplomatic policies.

An examination of our relations with the Pan-American nations shows that there is not a single question of difference. Therefore our natural relationship with those nations should be one of a close brotherhood, and clearly our diplomacy should be directed, as it has begun to be directed, toward constantly increasing the commercial relations and intercourse between our peoples. This should be promoted by the development of lines of transportation, and especially steamship lines. And full advantage should be taken of the approaching completion of the Panama Canal to give a lasting impulsion to intercommunication. Our Government should proceed to negotiate a model arbitration treaty with all the Pan-American governments, by which the contracting powers would solemnly agree to respect each other's territory and sovereignty within that territory and to arbitrate all other differences. Such an arbitration treaty is now practicable in Pan-America and its adoption here would work a great stride in the development of the general cause of arbitration and peace. The approaching Pan-American conference would be a fitting occasion for effecting such treaties. In order to realize the best results in our Pan-American diplomacy, Congress should provide for permanent representation at the Pan-American conferences, as it should provide for permanent representation at The Hague conferences, in some such manner as is provided for in the bill introduced in the House by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] and in the Senate by Senator MCCREARY, the father of the Pan-American conference.

An examination of our relations with European nations is not so assuring.

Over questions of territory there are no direct differences likely to arise in the near future, but the same can not be said of the indirect differences that may arise under the Monroe doctrine. This doctrine has been accepted in the matter of contractional debts, but it was refused in connection with territory. We can only be sure of a permanent respect for the Monroe doctrine by being in control of the sea in the Atlantic.

Over matters of trade differences may be expected to grow steadily as we become more and more an industrial nation and reach out more and more for the markets of the world with our products that are steadily growing in excess of our home consumption. There is a fundamental basis for what is called "the American peril," which the European nations have discerned in the financial and industrial growth of America. The military powers take their men away from work for military service. We have our men at work producing. It will prove impossible for military nations ultimately to meet American competition where there is an "open door," fair chance, and no favor. From this fundamental fact we must expect differences of an even increasing gravity as time goes on.

From questions of race there are no differences to fear. We have already demonstrated that all the nations of Europe can meet here and mingle without producing race antagonism, all being more or less remotely of the same race.

From questions of institutions we can not expect monarchs and royalty and nobility to view with satisfaction the rise of democracy, nor can we expect nations always to accept our national irresponsibility for the welfare of their subjects suffering violence within our individual States with which they can hold no diplomatic relations.

Thus it is clear that we must anticipate more and more differences of a serious nature to arise between America and European nations.

Fortunately for the world and for America a balance of power exists in Europe, where experience has shown that a balance of power is essential to peace. This balance of power has kept the attention of European nations upon Europe itself and has confined the power of those nations to the same sphere. It was largely to European complications and diversions that America owed her relatively satisfactory issue out of the war of the Revolution and the war of 1812, and it is to the balance of power in Europe that we owe our partial immunity in the past when we announced such a doctrine as the Monroe doctrine. While we were young, growing up off by ourselves, not running counter to the other nations, this dependence upon the balance of power of Europe was fairly effective. At best, however, it is a most unsatisfactory dependence, analogous to the dependence of Turkey or the dependence of China. Every day it becomes less and less available. America has reached the stature of manhood and moved out into the world. Whether we like it or not we are in the midst of the world's activities, in the vortex of its politics, and the time has come when we must place upon ourselves, and not upon others, our security and the effectiveness of our policy. To-day the only basis for our diplomacy with Europe is for America herself to establish an equilibrium in the Atlantic Ocean as against any individual nation of Europe. [Applause.] This means that we have a great responsibility with regard to our naval progress. With our whole fleet in the Atlantic we just hold an equilibrium with Germany and with France, and are far below an equilibrium with Great Britain. While Great Britain is building 12 large vessels of the Dreadnought type, she is this year authorizing 6 more; while Germany is building 9 of such large vessels, she is this year authorizing 4 more; and yet we are only building 4 of these vessels, and this year are only authorizing 2 more. Thus for our whole navy with its two ocean demands we are only advancing at a rate one-half that of Germany and one-third that of Great Britain. It does not take the eye of a prophet to see the steady approach of the day when, without the benefit of the balance of power of Europe, we shall find ourselves absolutely defenseless on the land with a fleet completely outclassed on the sea, while grave questions arise, whose peaceful solution with honor will demand at least an equilibrium of power which we can not furnish.

Clearly, a wise diplomacy demands that for the Atlantic alone the rate of increase of our fleet should be doubled—that is, should be on a four battle ship basis instead of two battle ships a year.

If the outlook for the Atlantic is so unsatisfactory, how much more unsatisfactory must it be in the Pacific, where we have not a single battle ship, and where the gravest diplomatic problems have arisen.

While there is a balance of power in Europe, there is no balance of power in Asia. The growth of the German navy has made it necessary for the British to bring their battle ships back to Europe. There is not a single British battle ship in the Pacific Ocean. Nor is there a German battle ship, nor a French, nor an Italian, nor any European or American battle ship; nor is there any prospect of any European nation being able to send a battle ship there. But there is a great fleet of Japanese battle ships. If it so happened that we were to have a fleet of American battle ships there alone, unbalanced, it could not make much difference in a war, because, no matter how large our fleet, it could never be aggressive. A fleet can not invade; it can not go ashore. We have no army with which to follow the fleet; and if we had an army, we could not get it over where the fleet would operate because we have no merchant fleet to transport it. Until our Nation has changed its whole character and become a military power our navy could never be more that a mere shield to protect us from aggression and to aid the weak of this hemisphere whom injustice may mark for attack.

But it is not so with the Japanese fleet. Behind that fleet to-day there are 1,500,000 armed men, and behind these men there is a military population of 50,000,000, in which avery able-bodied man is a soldier; and along with that great army of armed men, prepared, organized, and ready, there is a merchant marine of over a million tons that can take 200,000 men at a single expedition.

Mr. Chairman, this means that every foot of territory washed by the Pacific Ocean is out there at the mercy of one power. All the history of the world shows, no matter how advanced and civilized the dominating nation may have been—the whole experience of mankind shows—that such a condition can not be expected to continue long in peace. These elemental laws of human nature are the same. If Japan were a thousand years further along in sociological evolution than she really is, the result would be the same. Any student of history would know that unless some power is brought in to establish an equilibrium in the Pacific permanent peace will be impossible. But we ought not to forget that Japan has just emerged from feudalism. They were feudal when I was a boy. For eight hundred years they have been passing through this condition of feudal strife that makes the pursuit of arms and the organization for war a part of their nature. When a nation comes out of feudalism it can not change the fighting habit overnight. You must expect it to go out on foreign wars. Japan has gone out on two foreign wars within a decade of each other. If there were as yet no specific causes for war visible, any student of history would know that unless a balance of power is established in the Pacific war will be as inevitable as that the laws of nature will hold.

But, unfortunately, through our neglect, Mr. Chairman, the greatest causes for war between nations are already acting in the Pacific Ocean. It is a strange march of history, guided, I believe, by the hand of Providence, certainly not the result of design on the part of Americans, that has spread this country all over the Pacific Ocean. Take a map and examine that ocean. Across the whole north stretches our territory, the Aleutian Islands, where there are two harbors, the only two harbors in the northern Pacific—Great Kiska and Dutch Harbor. Go to the east of that great ocean where Alaska comes down until it almost reaches our western mainland coast, and then proceed along the eastern Pacific. All the great harbors in that part of the ocean are ours. In the south there is one in Samoa, and it is ours; in the west there are the harbors at Guam and at Subic and Manila; all are ours. Now cross that great ocean, the Pacific, from north to south, from east to west, you find but one great archipelago in the middle of that ocean, the Hawaiian Islands, and we have it. Take a radius of 2,000 miles and strike a circle from the center of the Pacific Ocean. In that circle of 4,000 miles in the heart of this great ocean there is but one harbor, Pearl Harbor, near Honolulu, a wonderful harbor; but there is only one, and we have it now.

Any student will know, studying the drift of history, that the nation that controls Pearl Harbor is going to dominate the Pacific Ocean. To me it is a demonstrable fact that the race that gets its foot planted there in Pearl Harbor, on the apex of the world, is going to dominate the world.

Mr. Chairman, America possesses all this vital territory, with all the great harbors all over the face of that great ocean. Do not you suppose the nations of Asia wish that territory? If they do not, why are they flocking to that territory? Why did one of the great nations of Asia apply to us in 1898 to share the Philippine Islands with her? Of course they want it. To-day, with no garrisons to speak of, with scant fortifications, all this vital territory is absolutely defenseless. To continue thus is simply flying in the face of Providence—flying into the face of the laws of human nature. It is fundamentally wrong to place such a temptation in the path of the great military nations of Asia.

Unless America controls the sea that stands between the great armies of Asia and that defenseless territory, we will find ourselves constantly in the presence of this, the first, foremost, fundamental, eternal, historic cause of war between nations—the possession of vital territory.

But that is not all. The careful student of world events sees the drift of commerce from the Atlantic toward the Pacific. When the Panama Canal is completed, the drift will go faster. Where is the greatest natural market that all the nations of the earth will center upon? It is the market of China. I lived there a long time. They are a wonderful people. They are on a 7½-cent wage basis to-day, but already their foreign commerce is more than $800,000,000. What do you suppose it will be when they increase tenfold their buying capacity? It means that China will be the greatest neutral market the world has ever seen, and the Pacific will be the seat of a mighty commerce, the object of the fiercest competition. The Chinese will demand many times more clothing stuffs. They are only half-clad now. America has peculiar advantages in cotton to produce those clothing stuffs. China will demand high standards of food. The Chinese eat only rice and dried fish now. America produces high-standard foods. The Chinese will demand all the manufactured articles involved in the comforts and conveniences of life. We possess in natural resources, in coal and iron and other materials, and in the mechanical aptitude of our people, peculiar advantages for manufacturing. When the Panama Canal is completed and we develop our great internal waterways, we shall have direct water communication between our great centers of production and that mighty market. We must expect all the nations of the earth to look askance upon America's coming to that market to take the paramount position.

And when we demand the open door, a fair chance, and no favor, is it to be expected that our rights and interests will be respected when we have no power? What can we expect from the great nation on the flank of China, supreme in power, with its costly armaments, that naturally desires to be paramount in that great market? Leaving that ocean defenseless simply places us in the presence of the second of the great eternal causes of war between nations—that of competition for trade and commerce.

Furthermore, in the Pacific Ocean there is the problem of all the ages, the problem that now challenges the good and thoughtful men of all the world. Space has been annihilated. Not only are nations being brought together, but races are being brought together. The great white race and the great yellow race have met there on that vital territory that we possess in the Pacific Ocean. History shows that wherever these two races have met, whether the Europeans invaded Asia or the Asiatics invaded Europe, they have always fought for supremacy and survival.

The world has not yet found out how two races, differing in color, which claim equality, can live together in large numbers in peace in the same vicinity. History goes to show that the yellow men can live with great prosperity and happiness on the Pacific slope, the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, and our other outlying possessions, and that the white men can live there with prosperity, but the whole teachings of history go to show that these two races can not live there side by side in peace.

We are to-day facing this great problem in its most acute state; and having no power on the Pacific Ocean, while Japan has supreme power, we are simply making it impossible to solve that great problem in peace.

When it came to a question of excluding the Chinese, we excluded them. When it comes to a question of excluding the Japanese, the Japanese Government forbids it. When it comes to a question of segregating the Chinese, we segregated them; but when it comes to segregating the Japanese, they forbid it. We can not even discuss the great problem with the Japanese Government.

Our Chief Executive has fully realized the impossibility of our undertaking to settle any of these questions while we are defenseless, and has worked unceasingly to have the question dropped, even though they involved the rights of local self-government. Keeping no power in the Pacific Ocean means, then, that we are placing ourselves directly in the face of this, the third great, eternal, persistent cause of war between nations—race antagonism—which is knocking at our doors for solution.

Japan is an oriental absolute monarchy, whose Mikado is supposed to come down out of the sun, and America is the one great decentralized democracy, furnishing the elements of conflict of institutions such as have caused great wars in history.

I have referred to Japan forbidding our passing an exclusion act against Japanese. The question of immigration is essentially a domestic question residing in sovereignty. In this matter Japan practically forbids us to exercise sovereignty in our own territory as far as her subjects are concerned.

In the school question in San Francisco Japan insisted that the local regulations should be modified against the wishes of the people of San Francisco to comply with the wishes of Tokyo. By decisions of our Supreme Court and by universal usage, school regulations are considered a local affair coming under police control. The Japanese Government knew perfectly well that our Federal Government could not legally interfere under our Constitution.

There have been 13 cases in our country's history where the subjects of foreign powers have been maltreated within individual States. In 11 cases those foreign subjects have suffered violence, in most cases being lynched by lawless mobs. In these cases the home governments had great provocation. In one case it was the question of a murder of Japanese in Utah. The foreign governments made demands on our Central Government to interfere, and in each and every case our Central Government informed them of its regret, but stated that it could not interfere. In most cases an indemnity was afterwards made as a matter of humanity, but not as a matter of law. In this case we were not harming the Japanese, yet our Government could not tell them that we could not interfere, but it had to proceed by indirection to interfere.

Take another question: The Japanese consular agent at San Francisco went to the mayor of that city and requested that the Japanese be allowed to sell liquor in that city without the regular license, which the city law forbids to be issued to any alien. The United States ambassador to Japan was passing through and indorsed the application, as a result of which five Japanese subjects have been selling liquor in the city of San Francisco in direct and open violation of the law that forbids any alien to sell liquor.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will be short.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will they permit American citizens to violate their laws with impunity—will they permit American citizens to attend the same schools as their children and to sell liquor, as the gentleman has said they do in San Francisco?

Mr. HOBSON. I do not understand the intent of the gentleman's question, but I can give the names of these Japanese and their addresses.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am not questioning that; but what I want to know is, whether there is reciprocity in this matter.

Mr. HOBSON. I will answer it in this way: There is no Englishman or German or Frenchman or citizen of any other nationality allowed to sell liquor at all. There is no American allowed to sell without a regular license. It is against the law for anyone to sell it without a regular license, and against the law for Japanese to sell it at all; but they felt we had to allow the Japanese to sell it without a regular license.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will understand my question——

Mr. HOBSON. Make it short. If it is a question, I will answer it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can an American citizen go to Japan, to Tokyo, and send his children to the Japanese schools or go there and sell liquors without a license, as they are demanding to do in the United States?

Mr. HOBSON. No, sir. On the contrary, we are segregated in Japan. You can not buy a house and lot or own real estate except in the foreign quarters of certain cities. You are not allowed to move to Japan and buy and own real estate and send your children to school. We are segregated there, along with all white people.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Why should not we demand the same thing from the Japanese?

Mr. HOBSON. We can not demand it, and I am trying to show you why it would be the utmost folly to demand it at this time. It would mean war. I shall point out shortly, and this is one of the chief objects of my remarks to-day, that we must postpone the settlement of all these questions until we can establish an equilibrium in the Pacific. Then, and not till then, shall we have a basis for settling such questions in peace.

Mr. HARRISON. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the American ambassador to Japan indorsed the application of Japanese to be permitted to sell liquors in San Francisco without a license?

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman did.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman give the name of the American ambassador?

Mr. HOBSON. Ambassador O'Brien.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOBSON. For a question.

Mr. SMITH of California. Does the gentleman undertake to say that in San Francisco the Japanese are permitted to sell such liquors as Americans sell, and sell them without a license, when Americans and other nationalities have to pay a license?

Mr. HOBSON. I will read the gentleman the ordinance. That is exactly what I mean to say, and it is exactly what they are doing to-day, or were doing up to a short time ago.

Mr. SMITH of California. I challenge the correctness of that statement.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman from California allow me time enough out of such time as he may control to answer, so that will not be taken out of my time?

Mr. SMITH of California. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HOBSON. I will be glad to do it. Here is a copy of the minutes of a regular meeting of the board of supervisors of June 25, 1908. Here is the heading of it. It is copied from their record:

JAPANESE RESTAURANT, RETAIL LIQUOR DEALERS.

Resolved, That this board will accept applications for permits to the total number of five from Japanese to open and conduct restaurants and sell liquor therein on condition that if the said applications are granted no liquor will be sold to others than Japanese, and that no liquor will be served to female patrons.

That is signed by three members in the affirmative and one in the negative. As a result of this resolution retail liquor permits were granted to the following persons in violation of section 6 of ordinance 29:

Shinecko Nako, 1675 Post street;
Shigeo Takata, 1908 Bush street;
Fijtami Yamasaki, 1562 Webster street;
Takichi Ogawa, 1356 Post street; and Jinoski Kikijgawa, 1610 Cherry street.

Mr. SMITH of California. Do I understand the gentleman to mean by that that they are selling liquor without a license?

Mr. HOBSON. I do.

Mr. KEIFER. Why, that is the license.

Mr. SMITH of California. But that does not say so. It says——

Mr. HOBSON. Oh, I am not here to quibble as to the word "license." I will pass on.

Mr. SMITH of California. I submit the gentleman's statement is not borne out by the citation. That simply says that application to sell liquor will be received, but certainly under the general ordinance of the city that everyone who sells liquor must take out a liquor license.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman misses the point entirely. No Englishman or Frenchman sending such application would have been considered.

Mr. SMITH of California. Why, it is received from many.

Mr. HOBSON. On the contrary, it is forbidden by the ordinance that I cited, section 6, ordinance 29, for any alien to sell liquor in San Francisco.

Mr. SMITH of California. The gentleman is certainly mistaken.

Mr. HOBSON. I certainly am not. I investigated the matter on the spot. The gentleman can take any further time out of his own time and not mine.

Mr. SMITH of California. I do not desire to interrupt the gentleman, but I do not want him to misrepresent the city of San Francisco by saying that they permit Japanese to sell liquor without a license, when they require licenses of Americans and others.

Mr. HOBSON. I mean to say they were not granted a regular liquor license, but simply a permit.

Mr. SMITH of California. I mean to say they were.

Mr. HOBSON. And I mean to say that city ordinance No. 29 (new series), section 6, expressly states that no liquor license shall be issued to any person not a citizen or becoming a citizen of the United States, and that thus the law forbids Japanese to sell liquor within San Francisco, and that they are allowed to sell liquor there. This condition of conflict of institutions is so grave that the Federal Government of the United States has to indirectly be a party to asking the people of San Francisco to surrender the inalienable right—the right for which Anglo-Saxons have fought for thousands of years [applause], the right for which our forefathers fought—the right of local self-government. I do not wish to be misunderstood as criticising the action of our Federal Government nor of the action of San Francisco. On the contrary, I say it is wise and right for them to do as they have done and are doing, in dropping the Japanese question in legislatures and in city councils. My investigations show that there is no way to settle these questions while we are defenseless in the Pacific, and we should not attempt the settlement now. If our people are going to be so neglectful, so self-centered in their own interests, that they will not take an account of their country's growing danger; will not even open their eyes when daily occurrences show the crying necessity to provide for the power that is needed to have a rational and peaceful settlement of grave difficulties, then it is right for them to put on sackcloth and ashes and submit to the humiliation that is necessary to avoid war, until finally we can establish equilibrium and can then have a chance to settle on a basis of justice. It is not a question of a permanent surrender of the sacred right of self-government, but of the duty of a temporary surrender to avert the consequences of our neglect and avoid a war that would be ten thousand times more deplorable.

I must press forward in my analysis. Now, then, having no power in the Pacific Ocean to-day we are placing ourselves and our country in the presence of these four great eternal causes of war. These are not matters of opinion, they are laws of nature. Without being properly counteracted and offset, any one of those great causes of war would bring on war just as inevitably as to-morrow's sun will rise. To-day, because of our neglect we are causing all four of these great causes to act, and they are acting in a most acute stage and are acting upon a nation just out of feudalism, that is armed to the teeth on land and sea, flushed with victory, that stands unchecked and unbalanced, supreme in power in half of the world. A schoolboy can see that with these conditions the only escape from war is for us to adopt a policy of complete conciliation in diplomacy, to drop all the differences and to begin now to inaugurate a policy of naval expansion that will enable us to issue out of such a condition, if an issue is still possible, and then to resolve that never again shall we be found defenseless. Having examined the condition of differences in the Pacific, it now remains to examine the conditions of power. I pointed out in some detail the lack of power in the Atlantic. The condition is far worse in the Pacific.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, what would be the effect on this situation of ours if we should get rid of this new territory of the Philippines?

Mr. HOBSON. Well, if you include Hawaii, it would only give them a base of operations at our doors instead of having them farther away. They are prepared to take it, anyhow, and it does not make much difference at this juncture. While we are not in control of the sea our outlying possessions are a source of weakness. If we had control of the sea, as bases, they would give us great strength. To resume, the conditions in the Pacific are such that America must have superiority there by a substantial margin, and yet we are absolutely defenseless. We have not a single battle ship in the Pacific, as pointed out above; we can not depend upon a fleet in the other ocean. We have no army. Our meager coast defenses can not even make good, because we have no mobile army to protect them from being attacked in the rear. Every other country with coast defenses, except America, can expect these defenses to fulfill their object of attacking and driving off vessels in front, being secured by mobile troops against capture from the rear. In the whole of continental United States to-day we have about 9,000 regular infantrymen, less than the number of policemen in New York City, and they are spread over the whole United States. Twenty-five thousand men can land near by and attack the forts of any great seacoast port from the rear and capture them practically without resistance. This is not a matter of my opinion. The War Department has worked it out and the war departments of other nations have worked it out. In the Atlantic, for instance, there are several powers that could put 200,000 to 300,000 men on board transports in a single trip. It has been determined that, with control of the sea, 100,000 men—two army corps—would suffice; that they could cross the ocean, attack our coast defenses from the rear, and in a few weeks, it has been estimated, they could capture Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York practically without resistance.

Furthermore, after they had retired to the other side, we would be utterly powerless to get at them for revenge or reprisal. We could not get a base on the other side. We have no means of seizing one. We are the only great nation on earth that has no merchant marine capable of carrying soldiers overseas. I believe I do not betray any confidence, and I believe it is desired by the authorities to have the people know about how defenseless we are. All the other countries know of this; our people only are ignorant. A most carefully conducted investigation has shown that a great nation out in the Pacific called "Orange," hardly going on a war basis, simply by taking part of the men that were ready, men whom they were already feeding, and simply by using their ships that ply to America, leaving the lines that ply to Australia and Europe undisturbed, was able, in a little over two months after war was declared, to capture the Philippines, Hawaii, the Aleutian Islands, and Alaska, and to actually capture San Francisco and the Puget Sound region, all of this long before the fleet, admitted to have been ready and to have started the next day, could get around to the seat of operations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. May I have ten minutes more?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield the gentleman ten minutes additional.

Mr. HOBSON. As against this defenseless position of America stands Japan in a position of stupendous power. It is not necessary to say against what nation all this power has been prepared. The supreme fact is that the power is assembled and is ready. Five hundred thousand men have been added to the Japanese army since the war with Russia was over, and the most stupendous military preparations the world has ever seen have been going on, night and day, in Japan and enormous orders for war material have been placed in all parts of the world.

Japan captured 5 Russian battle ships and added them to her fleet, and she has made provision for 11 Dreadnoughts since the war was over. Two are completed—the Aki and Satsuma—2 more are building, 2 others are expected to be laid down this year, and five more are in contemplation, making 11 altogether. They have to-day 13 battle ships ready and 11 armored cruisers. To insure us control of the sea in the Pacific would require our whole existing navy and all its increase now authorized, and would require the permanent location of that whole force in the Pacific. This latter necessity will exist, as pointed out above, even after the completion of the Panama Canal.

After the Panama Canal is completed an enemy's fleet in Asia would still be closer to our Pacific coast than our own fleet in the Atlantic, and an enemy's fleet in Europe would be nearer to our Atlantic coast than our fleet in the Pacific. Ours is the only nation in the world which is driven by geographical necessity to having two great fleets. In addition to naval and military preparations, Japan has made great financial preparations. The Imperial Government receives a large percentage of the corporate earnings of the Empire without these revenues appearing at all in financial statements. The war with Russia was largely paid for as it progressed, and the result of the war established a great national credit, upon which Japan has borrowed over $1,000,000,000, the bulk of which has been available for war preparations and a large part of which is held in a war chest in specie to be on hand for the conduct of the next war.

In fact, war with America would not appear to the Japanese in the light of a drain. With almost no extra expenditure they could possess themselves of our outlying territory of vast value, including Alaska; could levy upon the rich Pacific slope and retire without serious resistance, and apparently without any chance of suffering reprisals or chance of having the outlying territory retaken. On the strength of such achievements they would expect to establish another enormous national credit, available for preparations for the subsequent war for permanent control, in preparation for which they would expect to have the resources and population of China available.

In addition to naval, military, and financial preparations, Japan has made diplomatic preparations of the greatest significance. India is at the mercy of Japan. As a result, Japan has been able to form an alliance with the British Empire, offensive and defensive, lasting till 1915. This alliance has been officially interpreted by a British official, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Canadian premier, February 28 last, in the Canadian parliament, as meaning that British, Canadian, and Japanese forces would be found cooperating on the frontiers of America in case of war.

France is unable to protect her colony of Cochin China against Japan, and must stand in with the latter. Japan has entered into a convention with France, one result of which has been French cooperation in financing Japan.

Russia's far eastern interests are more or less at the mercy of Japan. Japan has entered into a significant convention with Russia.

It is not necessary to discuss the nation against which these preparations are directed; the supreme fact is that they have been completed, naval, military, financial, and diplomatic, and are now available for Japan, while America continues absolutely defenseless.

It is this disparity of power that lies at the basis of all the disturbing conditions on the Pacific coast and the otherwise incomprehensible attitude assumed by Japan toward America. It is the essence of oriental diplomacy for Japanese diplomats and statesmen to give ceaseless assurances of friendly intentions while the war preparations go on. Russians, even those in the Far East, did not suspect that war would come within five years. The Russian minister to Korea scoffed at the idea of war the very night the Japanese destroyers entered the harbor of Port Arthur, where they struck the Russian battle ships and found the officers ashore at a dance, while no mines had been laid, no picket boats put out, and the searchlights were not operating.

It is of great significance, however, that drastic anti-Japanese legislation and manifestations in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and British Columbia pass practically unnoticed in Japan, while the least trifling incident in San Francisco is magnified into a mountain. It is significant that while Japan segregates all white people in Japan, she forbids us to do the same for all yellow people in America; that while she forbids foreigners to own real estate at large in Japan, she forbids the same thing in California; it is significant that she expects privilèges for her subjects in America, not the same as other aliens receive, but superior to these. It is significant that during the sojourn of our fleet in the Pacific not a word was spoken in Japan about differences with America, and that the day after the fleet entered the Red Sea the Japanese press started up the immigration question again.

It all goes to confirm the conclusions arrived at above, that the utter disparity in power in the Pacific makes it impossible for America to conduct diplomacy as it is usually conducted, and makes it impossible to solve the great problems that have gathered in that ocean.

Since the conditions of differences are so much more grave and acute in the Pacific, our policy should be to maintain the bulk of our fleet in that ocean. It was a colossal blunder for the fleet to be withdrawn when it was once out there.

I should estimate that our strength there should be maintained at at least a 25 per cent superiority over the Japanese navy. This is the most vital and most urgent matter before the country to-day.

In the absence of the fleet and during our period of weakness we must absolutely refuse to take up the problems of the Pacific coast, and the people of this coast should bring to bear the greatest forbearance and patience in order that there may be a peaceful outcome. Any other policy would only mean war—and war between the United States and Japan would be a frightful calamity for mankind. These two nations will have it in their power to solve the great race problem of the ages and to establish the basis in justice for a permanent and abiding peace and friendship. But if they engage in war, it may be the beginning of a mighty race war to drench the earth in blood and set mankind backward into savagery. Japan and the United States simply must not go to war. We must do anything and everything to prevent it.

From the above examination it will appear clear that there is not only no equilibrium in the Pacific, but there is to-day no equilibrium in the world. America should have power to hold the balance of the balance of power in Europe, as it were, and help to keep that balance on the side of peace, and it should also look carefully toward maintaining a general balance of power in the world. A large part of the power of Europe and Asia is in alliance. To balance this for our own security and for the good of the world we should endeavor to get an entente, a well-defined understanding, with China in Asia if we can, and with Germany in Europe if we can. Such an understanding would be a safeguard in Europe, and would help somewhat at least to be a safeguard in Asia.

In view of the serious condition in the Pacific and the other lack of necessary power, I feel that I should state that it is a grave question whether we can now come forth in peace. It is a question whether our fleet can be gotten there again, and a question whether it is possible to awaken the Nation, so that the full naval policy upon which peace must depend may be adopted. I see certain gentlemen smile at my reference to the gravity of the situation. I will only say that I am telling you this because of a sense of duty. You do not suppose I would say such things from any other sense, when I only get ridicule and widespread defamation for my efforts. My judgment is that we must be most careful if we would come forth with peace, and I repeat there is the gravest danger that we may not come forth with peace. Therefore we ought to realize what a war will mean. Thus far, in modern times, wars have been won by preparations, not by resources, as already stated. When Prussia struck Austria, the war was over in a few weeks. When Germany struck France, the war was over in a few months. When Japan struck Russia, the war was over in a few months. If we are struck in the Pacific Ocean, we shall be down and out, helpless beyond any condition that Russia reached. The world will cite the precedent of our going to Russia. They will come to us and demand, "In the name of humanity, call it off."

Americans would not hesitate to make provision by which we might have peace if they realized what such a war may mean if it comes. If we stop in the midst of defeat, allowing the enemy to take our outlying conquered possessions, and paying a big indemnity, with the view of taking advantage of peace to make the preparations to fight it out again in the future, then our institutions will totter to their fall. Those preparations would take fifteen or twenty years, and during that time every American must become a soldier. We would have great resentment against our liberal Government, as is always the case in national disaster. We would begin a steady process of centralization. We would have anger and hatred in our hearts. We would become military. We would lose our democracy and our free institutions. Our civilization would revert back to the old civilization of the bayonet. The world would decide that if citizens in the new civilization, based on equality and peace and not upon destruction, are so blindly selfish that they would not make provision for national defense and thus proved a failure in free government in America, they could not be expected to make it a success in any other land. The hope of liberty would vanish from the earth.

By the time we completed the long preparation necessary for fighting the war over again, Japan would have dominated China and made the Chinese military and organized them, and the second war would usher in the beginning of an ultimate world war between the yellow race and white race, in which America would be ground between, and out of which the world would emerge in a state of a new savagery.

Our resolves should be, first, that the first war must not come; second, that if, unfortunately, it does come, then it must not end until it is a test of endurance, resources against resources, so that the new civilization of peace and productiveness may never again be challenged by the old civilization of the bayonet, so that the world will see that producing, not destroying, is the quality for surviving in modern times. America, with her boundless resources, with her white arms on the oceans, can then say to the troubled waters, "Peace, be still," and can then lead the column of the nations as they advance to develop arbitration, to create and expand an international organization for peace, where right and justice will take the place of might.

I believe that if America would awaken to her high duty and opportunity, and would ply her hand to developing naval power, she could usher in this happy era in peace; but if we neglect our duty, and war comes upon us as a consequence, then, no matter what the staggering cost, we must win. If we fail to get peace through peace, then we must get it through war.

The conclusion of this discourse may be recapitulated—

1. Diplomatic relations deal with sovereigns, who are beyond the realm of law and under the sway of human nature, where self-interest is the dominant motive.

2. In this field power plays the paramount rôle.

For general conditions of justice an equilibrium of power is desirable, but in acute cases a margin of superiority may become necessary.

3. Power in preparations is more effective in diplomacy and in war than power in resources.

4. American diplomacy has always been just, and can be relied on to continue just, but it has nearly always been weak in power, and because of this weakness has failed of its end and brought on war.

5. In the Atlantic Ocean our diplomacy with Pan-America should be that of a family. With Europe the changing conditions require us to hold an equilibrium on the sea with any nation of Europe. This will require a rate of naval expansion at least double what it is now.

6. In the Pacific Ocean the conditions are very grave and call for the greatest care and forbearance on our part, and demand that we hold a margin of superiority of naval power. This means at least an additional navy as large, relatively, as our present navy.

7. Specific recommendations for our country are as follows:

(a) Stop all anti-Japanese agitation on the Pacific and postpone completely attempts to solve the problems there involved.

(b) Send our whole fleet to the Pacific and keep it there.

(c) Secure an entente with Germany and an entente with China.

(d) Negotiate general treaties of arbitration with Pan-American nations and provide permanent representation at the Pan-American and Hague conferences.

(e) Accept any humiliation to avoid war; but when it comes, win it at any cost.

8. The fundamental conclusion is that our vital need is greater naval power and a more rapid naval expansion. It would be a matter of supreme advantage if it were possible to duplicate our navy forthwith and then to proceed at a rate about three times as rapid as the present rate.

9. The supreme end and result of such a naval policy would be to promote peace; it would insure peace for the American hemisphere and for Asia, and would promote peace for Europe; it would practically avert war between the white race and yellow race and enable America to rise to the demands of her high calling, to establish the basis over the oceans where the nations and races meet, the basis of justice and equal rights, upon which all may build, where all may meet as friends in commerce to help each other and not as enemies in war to destroy each other, thus extending the sphere of the new civilization of peace that we enjoy until it reaches all corners of the earth and brings in at last the brotherhood of man. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY].

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] is not on the floor this afternoon; not that I intend or desire to attack him in any way, but I prefer that any gentleman whose name I refer to in a speech should be here to hear my remarks. However, I have tried to anticipate this objection, and have called up the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and have read to him over the telephone all that portion of my remarks with which he is concerned, and I have no reason to think he has the slightest objection to the remarks that I am about to make. [Applause.]

On January 26 the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] made a speech in regard to Panama. His remarks are so filled with direct accusations of corruption in high places and with innuendo and suggestions concerning other gentlemen not directly accused that he rests under a heavy obligation to the people of two Republics to prove the statements made or to make apology as publicly as he made the charges. Congressional immunity does not protect a man from his own conscience. I do not intend to-day to review the speech referred to in general. It has become so much the custom for the enemies of the incoming administration to connect the name of Mr. C. P. Taft with vicious and improper practices that such assertions are now regarded as a matter of course and little heed is paid to them. Mr. Taft has ably defended himself and has many able defenders among his friends, as have Mr. Robinson and the other gentlemen who have been assailed.

Mr. Cromwell has also been a shining mark for the arrows of criticism so long that the assault upon him creates but little comment, and he has shown himself well able to fight his own battles.

The incoming President of the United States requires no defense before the American people against such general innuendo as was indulged in by the gentleman from Illinois.

I call attention particularly, however, to the following extracts from the gentleman's speech, and propose to use them as the text for a few remarks. Speaking of Señor Obaldia, the President of the Republic of Panama, the gentleman from Illinois said:

> Obaldia represents as no other Spanish-American statesman in his generation all that is corrupt in Spanish-American politics.

And again, talking of Messrs. Cromwell and Obaldia, he says:

And so these two modern filibusters and buccaneers come down, arm in arm, through ten years of bloodshed and bribery and corruption and occupy to-day the center of the stage, high in the confidence of the present administration, and the chosen advisers of the incoming President.

One more quotation. When speaking of Mr. William Howard Taft, the Secretary of War, the gentleman from Illinois mentions, among other alleged evidences of his guilty knowledge of a scheme for robbing Panama—

His interference on the Isthmus of Panama, which compelled the election of a corrupt statesman, absolutely under the control of Cromwell, as President of that Republic.

Never before in my knowledge, and never I hope in the history of the country, have such astounding accusations of corruption, unfitness, and weak submission to others been made against the head of a friendly state in this Hall. Never has a Member of this body seemed so to forget the respect customarily paid to our friendly neighbors.

The situation at Panama, most anomalous and peculiar, is difficult at best. The solution of our problems of administration on the Isthmus requires friendly and sympathetic cooperation between the two Governments. Whatever tends to prevent that cooperation impedes the proper conduct of affairs and makes more difficult the completion of the great enterprise in which we are engaged. It will not be denied, I think, that the spectacle of a Representative of the United States, clothed with all the dignity and all the authority which pertain to that office, and speaking in his official capacity in Congress, heaping multiplied insults upon the head of the President of Panama, can not tend to encourage the friendly and sympathetic cooperation which is so desirable.

I do not know what proofs the gentleman from Illinois may have to sustain his allegations. I know only that he has taken a series of events which occurred upon the Isthmus, and these events he has linked together by a chain of alleged conspiracy to defraud the Republic of Panama. He assumes the utter degradation of the President of that Republic, the shameless corruption of sundry American citizens, the corrupt acquiescence on the part of a high official of the American Government shortly to be President of the United States, all joined in a wicked league to defraud and practically to destroy the Republic of Panama. Ingenuity in the ascribing of vicious motives and the linking together of separate events could go no further. Again I say I have no knowledge of the proofs the gentleman may be able to produce; but until those proofs are produced I shall utterly and absolutely refuse to believe that the astounding charges he has made can be substantiated.

Let me speak very briefly from personal observation of the conditions at Panama under which the two Governments are forced to operate.

Last year I landed on the Isthmus on June 6, bearing a commission from the President of the United States as commissioner plenipotentiary under the treaty with Panama of November 18, 1903. I was associated with a fellow-commissioner, Judge E. C. Bumpus, of Boston. We were the two American commissioners appointed to sit with two Panamanian commissioners and to assess the value of lands owned by private citizens in the Canal Zone and to award the owners the value of the lands to be taken by the United States.

Our sessions began June 8 and lasted until, having reached an agreement and made our awards, we sailed from the Isthmus on August 13. During the two months and more that we were upon the Isthmus we had ample opportunity to meet, and did meet and become well acquainted with, the leading Panamanian citizens, as well as with the work of the canal. It was necessary to inspect lands lying in every part of the Canal Zone, and the authorities gave us every facility for seeing the work and forming just conclusions concerning its progress.

Incidentally here, let me say that, in my opinion, no work of such gigantic character, involving the expenditure of such huge sums of money and the employment of such an army of workers, could be conducted with less criticism justly to be made than the work upon the Isthmus of Panama. Mingling with all classes of employees on the zone—from the highest engineers to the railroad trainmen, clerks, and mechanics, talking confidentially and intimately with them constantly, hearing trivial and unimportant complaints, I can say truthfully that never once did I hear it intimated on the zone, even by the most disgruntled employee, that there was any theft or graft in the work of the canal digging. It is the custom now to praise the work—it deserves praise—and the spirit of loyalty, of earnest, energetic endeavor, and great pride seems to animate every employee on the zone. I know of no better way to preserve that invaluable business asset than to let the employees know that the people of our country appreciate their zeal and commend them for it.

Perhaps, however, the most interesting phase of the Panamanian situation is the peculiar and anomalous political condition that exists. The Republic is split in two by a zone 10 miles wide. The Republic of Panama enjoys sovereignty on either side of that zone. The United States has sovereignty within the zone with the exception of the two cities of Panama and Colon. In these two municipalities which are within the zone Panama is sovereign for most purposes, but the sovereignty is qualified by the right of the United States to control the sanitary conditions and to enter into them and construct public works whenever deemed necessary. We have therefore two sovereignties within the Republic, and two qualified sovereignties. Like the interstate-commerce clause of our own Constitution, the clause in the treaty with Panama giving the United States power in sanitary and police matters has never yet been completely interpreted. How far it will permit us to go remains to be seen, but it is clear that under it we have extraordinary powers to interfere in the affairs of the Republic. Where so peculiar a condition exists, only friendly and sympathetic cooperation can make possible the continued successful development of the Republic and prosecution of the canal work.

I am glad to say that in my association with the members of the Government of Panama and the gentlemen of the Republic, I found everywhere a spirit of friendliness toward the United States and an earnest desire to put no stone in our way in the completion of our great enterprise. I think it may be said that the Government and people of Panama have never prevented the excavation of a single shovelful of earth. On the contrary, it has seemed to be their desire to expedite the work as much as possible. Causes of friction have arisen. A matter of importance to them, and a burning issue for a time, was the custom of the American commissary department in furnishing the employees of the zone provisions, household effects, and wearing apparel of every character, and so, of course, lessening the sales of the merchants of Panama and Colon. It may have been, and probably was, true that the merchants' own desire to make as much profit as possible caused them to overreach themselves by charging too high prices and made necessary the amplification of the original purpose of the commissary establishment. Be that as it may, the soreness engendered by that situation seems to have largely disappeared. Certain troubles also arose over the adjustment of the tariff, and other trivial matters have caused ripples to pass over the placid sea of our intercourse.

The incidents of last summer did unquestionably cause adverse criticism, but I hope and believe that the Republic is now convinced of the good faith of the American Government in its announced determination not to interfere with the independence of the Republic of Panama.

The people of Panama have, upon many occasions, shown an earnest desire to aid the Government, even at considerable incovenience and annoyance to themselves. Three times the sanitary squad of the commission has fumigated every room in the cities of Panama and Colon, and the people of Panama have not only permitted but encouraged the doing of this work, although it caused them the most painful inconvenience. Modern innovations of various kinds have been introduced and never seriously opposed by the Panamanians. In general, it seems to me that the people of Panama are entitled to a just meed of praise and gratitude for their cooperation in this work on the Isthmus. Fortunately we have had perhaps the greatest living sanitary engineer—Colonel Gorgas—at the head of that portion of the work which most interfered with the personal comfort of the Panamanians. Colonel Gorgas is one of the most lovable men I have ever met, and the people of Panama have for him and his assistants a deep affection, admiration, and respect.

Fortunately also, they have appreciated the keen, energetic, and eminently just administration of Colonel Goethals, and the civil governor—ex-Senator Joseph Blackburn—has by his courtesy and consideration for their rights and sensibilities made himself generally respected. [Applause.] We have been fortunate in our administrative officers under the guiding genius of President Roosevelt and Mr. Taft, but we have been equally fortunate in the caliber and character of most of the Panamanians with whom we have dealt.

Those who see the Panamanians only superficially and make no effort to appreciate or understand them are likely to do them a great injustice. The two judges who served with Judge Bumpus and myself upon the joint commission—Messrs. Ponce and Fabrega—were as public-spirited, as honorable, and as high-minded men as I have ever known. They approached their duties on that commission in a spirit of absolute justice, asking no more for the Panamanian claimants than they thought should be paid, actuated as little by bias or personal considerations as was possible under the circumstances.

So I might go on mentioning many others who might worthily hold citizenship and official position in any society of the world.

Mr. Obaldia, President of the Republic, may have, and probably has, many faults, as have most men whom we know; but his reputation among his own people is that of an honorable, upright man in his personal dealings, and a patriotic citizen of his country. [Applause.] That he would demean himself to dishonor, I absolutely disbelieve; and that he would consent to despoil the Republic is simply unthinkable.

Mr. Chairman, in approaching our Panamanian problems I hope the Congress and the administration will never forget the relative positions of the two Republics nor fail to treat with tender regard the sensibilities of the smaller state and with exact justice the rights of its people. We can lose nothing by a friendly and even magnanimous attitude, and we can gain much in the sympathy and aid of the people who must forever surround the Panama Canal. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given one minute more in which I may ask him a question.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am very anxious that the committee rise, and that we take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock, but if it is not going to prolong the debate I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan two minutes more.

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman from Michigan has eulogized President Obaldia as a man who would not despoil his country or be a party to it. Does the gentleman know that he signed the alleged timber contract and tried to compel the legislature to approve it?

Mr. DENBY. I have made no attempt to go into the merits of the charges made by the gentleman from Illinois. Like the rest of the country, I simply suspend judgment until we know what proof he has.

Mr. RAINEY. If I produce the evidence that he signed the contract, according to the gentleman's own statement he is not entitled to eulogy.

Mr. DENBY. The gentleman would have to produce evidence that the contract was corrupt and vicious before I would condemn the signer of it as corrupt and vicious.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNSEND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 2754, the fortifications appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 26394) from the Speaker's table and ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate may be disagreed to and the House ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments to the naval appropriation bill and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What bill is this?

Mr. FOSS. It is the naval appropriation bill. There are comparatively few amendments. The bill has been passed substantially as it went from the House, and I would like to put it into conference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much did the Senate increase it?

Mr. FOSS. I think, in round numbers, about $1,000,000.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether there will be an opportunity to consider the marine-corps proposition put on by the Senate, or will we be compelled to swallow that in the conference report?

Mr. FOSS. As far as I know, there is no disposition to conclude that proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FOSS, Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, and Mr. PADGETT.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill (H. R. 27971) authorizing the Attorney-General to appoint as special police officers such employees of the Alaska school service as may be named by the Secretary of the Interior, which is on the Union Calendar, will be transferred to the House Calendar where it belongs.

There was no objection.

ADOLPHUS ERWIN WELLS.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 99, to correct an enrolled bill which the House and Senate recalled from the President.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution 99.

Resolved, etc., That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice-President of the United States and the President of the Senate in signing enrolled bill H. R. 10752, "to complete the military record of Adolphus Erwin Wells," be and hereby is rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill the following amendment be made so as to comply with the form adopted by the Secretary of War:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

"That in the administration of the pension laws Adolphus Erwin Wells, of North Carolina, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered into the military service of the United States as a private of Company E, Ninth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, on the 16th day of June, 1864, to have served continuously as such to the date of muster out of said company and regiment, and to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the date of the muster out of said company and regiment."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the joint resolution will be agreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this bill passed the House and the Senate, and The Adjutant-General suggested that this amendment be made, and it came back for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I believe I called the gentleman's attention to the fact that the President would veto it if it was passed in that form.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 17214. An act for the relief of Harry Kimmell, a commander on the retired list of the United States Navy;

H. R. 20247. An act to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906; and

H. R. 27311. An act amending chapter 591 of the United States Statutes at Large, Fifty-sixth Congress, approved May 26, 1900, entitled "An act to provide for the holding of a term of the circuit and district courts of the United States at Superior, Wis."

RECESS.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Attorney-General submitting an estimate of appropriation for rent of building for the Department of Justice (H. Doc. 1459)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for trophy and medals for rifle contest (H. Doc. No. 1460)—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Henry Brant against The United States (H. Doc. No. 1461)—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HULL of Iowa, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 6971) authorizing the acceptance by the United States Government from the Woman's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, of a proposed gift of Andersonville Prison land, in the State of Georgia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2190), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BARTLETT of Nevada, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 28056) to amend section 2337 of the Revised Statutes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2194), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. KITCHIN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 24424) for the relief of S. H. Loftin, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2192), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WALDO, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 27586) for the relief of the Pittsburg Brewing Company, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2193), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 28215) for the relief of John H. Layne, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2195), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3956) authorizing a credit in certain accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, reported the same, together with the views of the minority, without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2196), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 27969) granting an increase of pension to Jerome B. Brooks, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 19, 1909.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

OWNERS OF PRIVATE DIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 16th instant, a statement showing the amounts opposite the respective names given, representing sums withheld in excess of the commissions to which the taxpayers were entitled as owners of private dies (S. Doc. No. 732), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 7829. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Keithsburg, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road," approved April 26, 1882; and

S. 8048. An act to withdraw from settlement and entry certain lands in the State of California.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25155) to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes."

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 219) to accept the gift of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, New York.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24140) extending the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, concerning transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26394) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Foss, Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, and Mr. PADGETT, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution No. 99 of the Senate relative to the action of the Speaker of the House and of the Vice-President of the United States and the President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (H. R. 10752) to complete the military record of Adolphus Erwin Wells.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 6155. An act to provide for an enlarged homestead;

H. R. 6903. An act for the relief of Willis A. Joy;

H. R. 9617. An act for the relief of Joseph Swisher;

H. R. 27342. An act to amend the military record of David H. Dickinson;

H. R. 28164. An act for the investigation, treatment, and prevention of trachoma among the Indians; and

H. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver a condemned cannon to the Grand Army of the Republic.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution of the legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of South Dakota:

I, Samuel C. Polley, secretary of state of South Dakota, and keeper of the great seal thereof, do hereby certify that the attached instrument of writing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 5, as passed by the legislature of 1909, together with all indorsements thereon, and of the whole thereof, and has been compared with the original now on file in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, done at the city of Pierre this 9th day of February, 1909.

Secretary of State.

House joint resolution.

A joint resolution of the eleventh session of the legislature of the State of South Dakota, making application to the Congress of the United States for calling a convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives, the senate concurring:

Whereas Article V of the Constitution of the United States provides that the Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to the Constitution, or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which in either case shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by convention in three-fourths thereof, etc.; and

Whereas the House of Representatives of the United States has on four separate occasions passed by a two-thirds vote a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people; and

Whereas the United States Senate has each time refused to consider or vote upon said resolution, thereby denying to the people of the several States a chance to secure this much-desired change in the method of electing Senators: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring), That under the authority of Article V of the Constitution of the United States application is hereby made to Congress to forthwith call a constitutional convention for the purpose of submitting to the States for ratification an amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people; and

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, directed to forward a properly authenticated copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

I hereby certify that the within act originated in the house, and was known in the house files as house joint resolution No. 5.

House joint resolution.

A joint resolution and memorial requesting the Congress of the United States to make Fort Meade, S. Dak., a brigade post, with permanent brick or stone barracks, officers' quarters, and other buildings.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring):

Whereas Fort Meade is centrally located with reference to all the Indian reservations in North and South Dakota, Montana, and Wyoming, upon which there are quartered about 40,000 uncivilized Indians; and

Whereas Fort Meade is the only military post in South Dakota, and the only post in the whole Northwest possessing the required strategic advantages to exercise surveillance over the Indians and afford proper protection to the property and people of this rich and rapidly developing country; and

Whereas the lines of railroad now in operation offer transportation facilities over four lines in four different directions, forming a basis for military movements, enabling troops to quickly reach any point of trouble; and

Whereas Fort Meade has a large timber reservation, with the Black Hills Forest Reserve, upon which there is pine timber and an abundant supply of pure mountain spring water, and also a military reservation, 2 miles by 6 miles in area, with all available adjoining land needed for the requirements of a brigade post, which, collectively, would include the level and rolling prairie, open and wooded streams of water, bluffs and brakes, bare hills and timbered mountains, offering all practicable varieties of country for maneuvers; and

Whereas the hospital records show that the pure, malaria-free, bracing climate renders Fort Meade the healthiest post garrisoned in America; and

Whereas Fort Meade is in process of rebuilding, as a two-squadron cavalry post, there having been built in the past six years brick and stone barracks for eight troops, hospital, post exchange, line and field officers' quarters, noncommissioned officers' quarters, bakery, powder magazine, stables, fire station, water system and concrete reservoir, sewer system and stable drain, macadamized roads and cement walks, electric-light wiring, and other permanent improvements, modern and up to date and costing over $600,000: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we favor and earnestly urge the Congress of the United States by proper enactment to designate Fort Meade as a brigade post and provide for the erection of additional barracks, quarters, and other structures, ample and suitable for the proper garrison thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That we request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to employ their best efforts to compass this end.

I hereby certify that the within act originated in the house and was known in the house files as joint resolution No. 12.

Mr. GORE presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 15. By Mr. Putnam.

House concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to give aid in the construction of public highways.

Whereas it has been the policy of our Government from its foundation to aid and encourage the development of commerce and agriculture, and to this end has made, regularly, large appropriations for the purpose of improving the rivers and harbors of our country; and

Whereas in the development of our civilization our people have established large and important communities at great distance from waterways, so that the waterways of this country no longer serve even the greater part of our citizenship; and

Whereas the commerce and agriculture of those sections far removed from such waterways are as important as those in close proximity thereto; and

Whereas the only means by which the United States Government can justly continue its appropriations with these objects in view to the improvement of waterways is also to make equal or greater appropriations for the improvement of public highways: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Oklahoma (the senate concurring therein), That we most respectfully memorialize the United States Congress to make appropriations for the encouragement and development of the construction of improved highways throughout the United States, giving special attention to those sections far removed from navigable water courses.

BEN F. WILSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
GEO. W. BELLAMY,
President of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
Guthrie, February 15, 1909.

Hon. R. L. OWEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You will find herewith copy of house concurrent resolution No. 15, as passed by the second Oklahoma legislature and transmitted to you for your proper consideration.

Yours, very truly,
W. H. EBEY, Chief Clerk.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
Guthrie, February 9, 1909.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You will find herewith copy of house resolution No. 13, passed by the legislature of the State of Oklahoma, which is transmitted to you for proper consideration.

Yours, truly,
W. H. EBEY, Chief Clerk.

House concurrent resolution 13. By Messrs. Bryan and Jones.

House concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to remove restrictions on Indian lands in drainage districts organized under the Oklahoma drainage act and authorize the assessment of the proportionate share of the cost of drainage improvements against same.

Whereas the reclamation of large areas of fertile lands embraced in the flood plains of certain streams in Oklahoma has been made feasible through the enactment of the Oklahoma drainage act, and the cost of such drainage made easy to meet by assessing the benefits against said land in severalty and issuing bonds against the district in common; and

Whereas the large proportion of nontaxable Indian lands in many of said districts render the scheme of drainage and reclamation impracticable: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be, and the same is hereby, memorialized to so remove the restrictions upon Indian allotments in organized drainage districts in Oklahoma as to render such lands subject to assessment under the Oklahoma drainage act for their proportionate share of the cost of drainage according to the benefits accruing to such lands in severalty, and to the lien created by the taxing of such assessments and the issuing of bonds against the drainage district within which such lands are embraced.

BEN F. WILSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: You will find herewith copy of house resolution No. 4, passed by the legislature of the State of Oklahoma, which is transmitted to you for proper consideration.

Yours, truly,
W. H. EBEY, Chief Clerk.

House joint memorial and petition 4. By Mr. Lincoln.

The Legislature of the State of Oklahoma to the Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the Deep Fork River, flowing through seven of the counties of the State of Oklahoma, is, on account of frequent overflows caused by its winding channel and the obstructions therein, a menace to the lives, health, and property of the people residing in and along the Deep Fork Valley; and

Whereas a movement is now on foot to straighten the channel of said river, thereby draining said valley, preventing said overflows, removing the menace to health and property, and reclaiming a vast area of the richest lands in the United States; and

Whereas a large per cent of said lands is now owned by full-blood Indians, wards of the Government, whose lands are nontaxable; and

Whereas the draining of Deep Fork River, as above, has been pronounced by competent surveyors and engineers as being practicable and feasible and would resutl in exempting the said valley from overflow; Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Oklahoma (the senate concurring herein), That the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States be, and he hereby is, petitioned to authorize and cause the immediate survey of the Deep Fork River, to the end that the proper and necessary steps may at once be taken to straighten the channel of said river: And be it further

Resolved, That copies hereof be forwarded to the honorable Secretary of Agriculture and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

BEN F. WILSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Extract from the records of the thirty-ninth annual meeting of the National Board of Trade, held in Washington, D. C., January 19, 20, 21, 1909.

CITIZENSHIP FOR PORTO RICANS.

Whereas the people of Porto Rico have proved their loyalty to the United States by more than ten years of faithful observance of all rules and regulations prescribed and all laws enacted for their government; and

Whereas the people of Porto Rico have shown their earnest desire to become more closely identified with our Government and with our people by cordial acquiescence in all measures proposed by the United States for their benefit; and

Whereas trade and commerce between Porto Rico and the United States have largely increased and business relations between the people of the island and the people of the United States have been established upon a firm and enduring basis. Therefore

Resolved, That the people of Porto Rico are in every way worthy of and of right should be admitted to full citizenship in the United States, and that the Congress be, and it hereby is, respectfully petitioned to pass an act conferring this privilege on these well-deserving people.

Mr. FORAKER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Cleveland, Cincinnati, Toledo, Springfield, Piqua, and Ashland, all in the State of Ohio; of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Rochester, N. Y.; New York, N. Y.; Pittsburg, Pa.; St. Paul, Minn.; Omaha, Nebr.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Atlanta, Ga.; Johnstown, Pa.; Boston, Mass.; Danbury, Conn.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Westford, Conn.; Syracuse, N. Y.; and Allegheny, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Sherley bill," amending the present bankruptcy law, and praying for the passage of the so-called "Nelson bankruptcy bill," which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GAMBLE presented a joint resolution of the legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

House joint resolution 7.

Joint resolution and memorial requesting Congress, under the provision of Article V of the Constitution of the United States, to call a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited and Congress given power to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives and senate concurring:

Whereas it appears from investigation recently made by the Senate of the United States, and otherwise, that polygamy still exists in certain places in the United States notwithstanding prohibitory statutes enacted by the several States thereof; and

Whereas the practice of polygamy is generally condemned by the people of the United States, and there is a demand for the more effectual prohibition thereof, by placing the subject under federal jurisdiction and control, at the same time reserving to each State the right to make and enforce its own laws relating to marriage and divorce: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That application be, and hereby is, made to Congress, under the provision of Article V of the Constitulon of the United States, for the calling of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited, and Congress shall be given power to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

Resolved, That the legislatures of all other States of the United States now in session, or when next convened, be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to join in this application by the adoption of this or any equivalent resolution.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this application to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to the several Members of said bodies representing this State therein; also to transmit copies hereof to the legislatures of all other States of the United States.

House joint resolution.

A joint resolution and memorial requesting the Congress of the United States to make Fort Meade, S. Dak., a brigade post, with permanent brick or stone barracks, officers' quarters, and other buildings.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring):

Whereas Fort Meade is centrally located with reference to all the Indian reservations in North and South Dakota, Montana, and Wyoming, upon which there are quartered about 40,000 uncivilized Indians; and

Whereas Fort Meade is the only military post in South Dakota, and the only post in the whole Northwest possessing the required strategic advantages to exercise surveillance over the Indians and afford proper protection to the property and people of this rich and rapidly developing country; and

Whereas the lines of railroad now in operation offer transportation facilities over four lines in four different directions, forming a basis for military movements enabling troops to quickly reach any point of trouble; and

Whereas Fort Meade has a large timber reservation, with the Black Hills Forest Reserve, upon which there is pine timber and an abundant supply of pure mountain spring water, and also a military reservation 2 miles by 6 miles in area, with all available adjoining land needed for the requirements of a brigade post, which, collectively, would include the level and rolling prairie, open and wooded, streams of water, bluffs and brakes, bare hills and timbered mountains, offering all practicable varieties of country for maneuvers; and

Whereas the hospital records show that the pure, malaria-free, bracing climate renders Fort Meade the healthiest post garrisoned in America; and

Whereas Fort Meade is in process of rebuilding as a two-squadron cavalry post, there having been built in the past six years brick and stone barracks for eight troops, hospital, post exchange, line and field officers' quarters, noncommissioned officers' quarters, bakery, powder magazine, stables, fire station, water system and concrete reservoir, sewer system and stable drain, macadamized roads and cement walks, electric-light wiring, and other permanent improvements, modern and up to date and costing over $600,000: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we favor and earnestly urge the Congress of the United States by proper enactment to designate Fort Meade as a brigade post, and provide for the erection of additional barracks, quarters, and other structures ample and suitable for the proper garrison thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That we request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to employ their best efforts to compass this end.

I hereby certify that the within act originated in the house, and was known in the house files as joint resolution No. 12.

House joint memorial 2.

Memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, requesting Congress to grant to the State of Wyoming certain lands for a winter refuge for game.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring): That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows:

Whereas the advance of settlement in the Western States is gradually noting the disappearance of wild animal life peculiar to North America, more especially the large species, such as elk, moose, and deer, which animals are driven into the higher mountain regions, where winter feed and sustenance can not be procured, a condition that threatens their ultimate extinction by starvation; and

Whereas the lands hereinafter described are government lands included within the Teton National Forest Reserve, in the State of Wyoming, with the exception of a few claims located by settlers; and

Whereas the said lands are so situated as to constitute a natural protection and winter refuge for the wild elk, moose, and deer of northwestern Wyoming; and

Whereas the State of Wyoming has by liberal expenditures and constant supervision for many years efficiently protected these animals from all danger of extinction, but it is helpless to check the danger from winter starvation; and

Whereas there is urgent need of a winter refuge for the elk, moose, and deer of northwestern Wyoming: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is hereby earnestly requested to grant to the State of Wyoming for exclusive use as a winter game refuge townships 41 and 42 north, range 111 west; townships 41 and 42 north, range 112 west; and townships 42 north, ranges 113 and 114 west of the sixth principal meridian, all being situated in the State of Wyoming, and that some suitable provision be made to acquire the holdings of the actual bona fide settlers residing upon portions of the lands hereinbefore described; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this memorial be sent to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States at Washington, D. C.

Approved February 16, 1909.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of the legislature of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,

I, William R. Schnitger, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed has been carefully compared with the original enrolled house joint resolution No. 3 of the tenth legislature of the State of Wyoming, and is a full, true, and correct copy of same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 16th day of February, A. D. 1909.

[SEAL.] WM. R. SCHNITGER,
Secretary of State.

House joint resolution 3.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

Whereas the public lands of the United States have from the beginning of our General Government been entered and taken under the laws enacted by Congress; and

Whereas the procedure leading to the issue of patent has until recently been simple, thus enabling the settler to compete with more powerful interests; and

Whereas the holders of land scrip have during the past five years opposed the operation of all land laws, with the possible exception of the homestead act, thus restricting the operation of statutes enacted by Congress and adding greatly to the value of such land scrip; and

Whereas the administrative officers at Washington have been and are deceived by the published reports emanating from the press bureaus conducted by the holders of land scrip as to the operation of the land laws of the United States; and

Whereas the recent rules and regulations relating to the administration of the timber and stone act place further restrictions upon the settler by complicating the procedure he must follow to procure title to such lands, thus further adding to the value of such land scrip and indicating another victory for the holders thereof: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives and the senate of the State of Wyoming in legislature assembled, That the Congress of the United States be petitioned to provide by law the limit of authority of the officers who are charged with the duty of enforcing the public land laws; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress be petitioned to simplify the procedure under all land laws, that settlement may take place rapidly and that our people may be relieved from the oppressive rules and regulations which have been inspired by the holders of land scrip; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the President of the United States, to each member of the Cabinet, and to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives at Washington.

Approved February 16, 1909.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18345) to fix the price of gas in the District of Columbia, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I give notice that in a day or two I shall file a report (S. Rept. No. 1054) on this subject, and that I shall at the earliest possible moment endeavor to call up the bill for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 27864) granting a right of way over a strip of land along the eastern boundary of the Fort McPherson Military Reservation to the commissioners of Fulton County, Ga., for road purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1037) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 9190) granting a strip of land along the eastern boundary of the Fort McPherson Military Reservation to the commissioners of Fulton County, Ga., for road purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24149) granting to the Montana, Wyoming and Southern Railway Company a right of way across the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, Mont., to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 1039) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is a local matter, and the bill is very short.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill, and it will go to the calendar.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 9286) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two condemned brass or bronze field guns, carriages, and cannon balls to the State of Colorado, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1038) thereon.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8545) for the relief of Jackson Pryor, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred certain bills granting pensions and increase of pensions, submitted a report (No. 1041), accompanied by a bill (S. 9421) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war and to certain widows and dependent and helpless relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was read twice by its title, the bill being a substitute for the following bills heretofore referred to that committee:

Mr. DICK, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10697) for the relief of David Brinton, reported it without amendment.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 27894) amending an act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved June 29, 1906, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 9353) amending an act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved June 29, 1906, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. LONG, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 27367) to provide for the inspection of nursery stock at ports of entry of the United States, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a quarantine against the importation and against the transportation in interstate commerce of diseased nursery stock or nursery stock infested with injurious insects, and making an appropriation to carry the same into effect, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1042) thereon.

Mr. TALIAFERRO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 9402) for the relief of John H. Layne, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1043) thereon.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13644) for the relief of the Bridgeport National Bank, Bridgeport, Ohio, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McCREARY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 26072) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1045) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1086) to correct military record of Pleasant Thomas, late of Company B, East Tennessee National Guards, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1046) thereon.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1753) for the relief of the several States under act of July 27, 1861, and acts amendatory thereto, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 26916) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 1036) thereon. I desire to state that the report itself is in the hands of the printers and and will be distributed this afternoon.

I desire further to say to the Senate, that in view of the contingencies of legislation at this session we have placed several administrative features in the bill, and have placed one claim, which is a federal claim, other claims being limited to claims against the Indian funds.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will push the consideration of the bill as early as possible.

Mr. CLAPP. I am ready at any time, but the printed report will not be ready for distribution until this afternoon, and Senators will want to examine it.

Mr. HALE. I do not suggest the idea of calling up the bill now, because there are two other appropriation bills that will come in. I hope the Senator will be ready the moment the other bills are out of the way to take up this bill.

Mr. CLAPP. I merely wish now to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there are several administrative features of legislation placed, at the instance of the department, in this bill. The committee felt at liberty to insert them and bring the bill into the Senate in that shape, in view of legislative contingencies.

Mr. HALE. I am glad the Senator has given notice of that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

LANDS IN CRAIGHEAD COUNTY, ARK.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, while the matter of reports of committees is in order, I desire to ask unanimous consent——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas rise to the pending order?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. In a manner; yes, sir. Day before yesterday a report was made during my necessary absence from the Senate concerning a local bill that I desire to have considered. It will take but a second. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 8654) for the relief of certain occupants of unsurveyed public lands in Craighead County, Ark., may be taken up and disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, on page 1, line 5, after the words "situated in," to insert "St. Francis River, in townships Nos. 14 and 15 north, range 6 east," so as to make the section read:

That the survey, made under the authority of the State of Arkansas in the year 1898, of a small area of land known as Cane Island, situated in St. Francis River, in townships Nos. 14 and 15 north, range 6 east, Craighead County, Ark., into blocks numbered, respectively, from 1 to 33, inclusive, shall, upon the filing in the local land office, and with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of the plat of said survey and the field notes thereof, be accepted as the governmental official survey of said body of land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 14, before the word "acres," to strike out "three hundred and twenty" and insert "one hundred and sixty," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, all persons who at the date of the passage of this act are bona fide occupants and owners of improvements situated upon any of the blocks returned by said survey, shall have a preferred right at any time within one year from the passage of this act to make entry, under the provisions of the homestead laws, of the block or blocks so occupied and upon which their improvements are situated, as their respective interests may appear, or to make purchase of such lands at the rate of $1.25 per acre: Provided, That no person shall be permitted to acquire title under this act to more than 160 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to grant to any person title to any part of the island herein referred to which is shown to be within the limits of land previously surveyed and disposed of by the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

Mr. ELKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to submit the report (No. 1044) of the Printing Investigation Commission, embodying recommendations in relation to the codification, revision, and amendment of the laws relating to the public printing, binding, and distribution of public documents, accompanied by a bill, as a result of the investigations of the commission, to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

The bill (S. 9406) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents was read twice by its title.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask to have printed in the RECORD the report of the commission, omitting the appendix.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 18, 1909.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a report from the Printing Investigation Commission, embodying recommendations in relation to the codification, revision, and amendment of the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

Respectfully,

T. C. PLATT,
Chairman Printing Investigation Commission.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Section 5 of a joint resolution approved June 23, 1860, formed the legislative basis of the present printing law, and upon this the law, such as it is, was constructed. The last attempt at revision is known as the "general printing act," approved January 12, 1895. This did not assume to be a complete codification, and there were no specific repeals. The ten years of its operation were characterized by an increase in expenditures for the public printing and binding, as shown by a comparison of such expenditures for the fiscal year 1905 with those of 1895, of $3,577,048, or 102 per cent. This is due, in part at least, to the fact that the revision of the law left remaining many conflicting provisions, but more to the fact that the amendments to this revision, many scores in number, have tended to destroy any spirit of harmony or consistency which may have characterized the revision itself.

THOROUGH REVISION NECESSARY.

A study of the history of this legislation reveals the fact that it has originated chiefly in recommendations from three distinct sources: First, from the Public Printer; second, from the various executive departments and bureaus; third, from officers of Congress; the author of each recommendation apparently viewing the subject only from his own standpoint, regardless of the complicated machinery of distribution contained in the general printing law, and regardless of conflicting or related provisions of law. Much of this legislation has been recommended to Congress by committees other than the committees of the Senate and House which are charged, under the rules of these bodies, with the consideration of these matters; and while the printing law probably covers to-day 60 pages of the statutes, the decisions of the comptroller and the opinions of the Attorney-General in relation thereto would fill a large volume. It may not be improper to state in this connection that the decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury alone, since May 1, 1906, involving constructions of the law in relation to the public printing and binding, on submissions by the Public Printer and various executive establishments, have been 52 in number, occupying more than 200 typewritten pages, not all of which have been printed.

As a further result, the law can not, as it stands, be intelligently codified without thorough revision, nor can it even be efficiently indexed. These somewhat caustic comments on the existing printing law have been voiced by trained and experienced men who have attempted both, and who have confirmed the view which the commission itself has long entertained.

When the commission four years ago began the work which Congress imposed upon it, it undertook first the correction of the more glaring abuses in the public printing and binding before undertaking any general revision of the printing laws. It was the policy of the commission from the beginning to build a printing law by distinct parts which could later be intelligently codified. In order to render possible in the end a proper codification of the printing law, many existing provisions should be specifically repealed. In fact, in the opinion of the commission, this treatment of the subject will be necessary throughout the entire revision work. This will be readily understood when it is recalled that the present printing legislation is the growth of nearly seventy years, many of the earlier enactments being still upon the statute books, wholly or in part inoperative because impossible of application to existing conditions or in conflict with other provisions also assumed to be in force.

In the opinion of the commission printing and binding involving large expenditures has been executed at the Government Printing Office in the last fifteen years, not only without warrant of law, but in direct contravention of law. Much of this printing and binding was necessary to the public service, and the service would have been seriously embarrassed if the orders for such printing had been disregarded by the Public Printer. This absence of legal authority for what is necessary to the public service is likely to lead, if it has not already led, to abuses, both in Congress and the executive establishments, which should not be possible. This condition has been, in part, already remedied by legislation recommended by the commission and approved March 1, 1907, but many further corrections are necessary. In view of these conditions and the conditions stated on pages 1 and 4 of this report and in former reports of the commission (S. Rept. No. 2153, 59th Cong., 1st sess.; S. Rept. No. 6828, 59th Cong., 2d sess.), the commission has recommended and Congress has approved legislation that will enable the Joint Committee on Printing to protect the printing service against any serious embarrassments in the execution of the printing and binding pending a complete revision and codification of the laws relating thereto. This commission is of the opinion that in the meantime the attention of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the several committees of the Senate and House charged with consideration of appropriations relating to the public printing and binding should be invited to the importance of referring to the committees of their respective Houses, or to the Joint Committee on Printing, for their consideration any amendments to existing law proposed to be incorporated in appropriation acts.

GROWTH OF PRINTING EXPENDITURES.

The cost of the government printing in 1840 was approximately $200,000. About this time Congress apparently began to give serious attention to these expenditures. But the expenditures showed not only a rapid but continuous growth until they amounted in 1905 to $7,084,670, almost equal to those of the great Department of Agriculture; more than the federal funds appropriated for the maintenance of the District of Columbia government; double the amounts carried in the diplomatic and consular appropriation acts.

The Government Printing Office was established in 1861, when the cost of the public printing was approximately $850,000. It was established to meet the requirements of Congress, and resulted in improved conditions. The annual expenditures had increased in ten years, under the contract system, more than 150 per cent, and were characterized by public scandals and numerous investigations. In the earlier years of its history the work of the Government Printing Office was chiefly for Congress. The official in charge of the office is appointed by the President, as are the Librarian of Congress and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds. All are required to report directly to Congress. The Government Printing Office has been nominally under the supervision of Congress through a committee representing both Houses, but Congress has been neglectful of its duty in having failed to provide for efficient supervision.

The revision of 1895 was followed by the most remarkable growth in expenditures found in the entire history of the public printing and binding. As above stated, the expenditures for 1905 exceeded those of 1895 by $3,577,048, an increase of 102 per cent. The increase from 1850 to 1860, as shown by the expenditures for those respective years, was 151 per cent, but in dollars and cents it amounted to approximately $500,000.

The expenditures for the public printing and binding, as shown in tables submitted herewith, increased from $344,831 in 1850 to $7,084,670 in 1905. The population had increased less than fourfold. The public printing had increased more than twentyfold. There had been an uninterrupted increase, the expenditures for decennial years showing an average increase of more than 70 per cent. The work of the commission began in 1905. The expenditures were increasing at the rate of nearly half a million dollars per year, and for the ten years immediately preceding, the increase had been 102 per cent. The commission has not only stopped this increase, but has driven the expenditures backward for the first time in the history of public printing, every year of its work showing a decrease in the expenditures compared with 1905, the average annual decrease for the last three years exceeding 10 per cent, notwithstanding the establishement of new bureaus and many new requirements for printing. Under the ten-year ratio of increase, from 1895 to 1905, the expenditures for 1908 would have been $9,493,457 instead of $6,774,267, or $2,719,190 more than they actually were.

The following tables illustrate this growth from 1850 to 1905 and the effect of the legislation formulated by the commission:

INVESTIGATIONS OF THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

There have been since 1840 17 congressional investigations in relation to the public printing. In almost every instance some radical abuse was discovered and reported upon, but the remedies were left for a succeeding Congress to discover. These inquiries usually related to charges of extravagance or maladministration, not infrequently involving the official integrity of the Government Printer, and in at least one instance that of the chief ministerial officers of the Senate and House of Representatives. In addition there have been at least four investigations by the executive branch of the Government.

Congress, instead of making such provisions as would insure efficient supervision and enable its committees and the Public Printer to carry forward a policy at once consistent and progressive, has, in effect, left each new committee to take up the subject for themselves, not where the work of the retiring committee ended, but where it began.

The subject was complex, in some respects technical, and the committee which attempted to master it found little time, if any, for other work. In this connection the commission has found nothing in the records which better describes its own experience than the remarks of Mr. Gorman, a Representative from Indiana, in the debates of July 15, 1852, in the course of which that gentleman, addressing the Chair, said:

"I hope, sir, that after having disposed of this public printing I shall be permitted to withdraw from this vexed question. I have never in my life had a public duty to perform in which I had so many conflicting elements to meet. I have never discharged a public duty with a more conscientious regard for the public weal and the service. * * * After I have discharged my duty and get the public printing once fixed upon a permanent basis, I shall ask the kind indulgence of the Chair to discharge me from further service on that committee. It is a committee upon which any gentleman who discharges his duty lays himself open to the constant criticism of his kindest and best friends."

In view of the many subsequent investigations which have occupied the attention of Congress, it is but fair to assume that Mr. Gorman was overconfident in his belief that he would in fact settle this problem.

SURPLUS COPIES OF PUBLICATIONS.

The commission found at the beginning of its work an enormous surplus of publications in practically every executive establishment, as well as under the distributing offices of Congress. Lack of proper supervision over matters of public printing seems to have been equally apparent in the legislative and executive branches of the Government. Careful measurements and computations, conducted by competent engineers, showed in storage in February, 1906, more than 9,500 tons, much of which was entirely worthless except as waste, and there were large quantities of surplus printing which it was not possible to include in these computations. These facts have been previously reported to Congress by the commission. For purpose of illustration, it may be stated that these documents, if their transportation had been necessary, would have required a train of ordinary freight cars approximately 3 miles in length. The commission, in order to stop this accumulation, recommended, and Congress enacted, a law providing for the printing of government publications in editions, as would be done by any private publisher, instead of printing a fixed number, as the law had previously provided. This enactment of 1906 empowered the Joint Committee on Printing to adopt and enforce such regulations as would make the law effective. Under the authority thus conferred the Joint Committee on Printing in the following year curtailed the printing of this surplus by nearly 300,000,000 printed pages; to be exact, 279,598,837, the equivalent of 559,197 volumes of 500 pages each. There was in connection with the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD alone a saving of $42,728, on the Yearbook a saving of $37,598.73, and on the publications of the Geological Survey, provided by law for distribution by Congress, a saving of $19,691.60. This last-named item last year was even more gratifying, amounting to $37,513.47, after allowing for the cost of all reprints. These results are all the more encouraging when it is remembered that these curtailments constituted what had been before an entirely undistributed surplus.

This surplus was further reduced by a joint resolution recommended by the commission and approved January 15, 1908. Prior to that date publications intended for distribution to depository libraries were withheld for binding and did not reach the libraries until from one to three years after the date of their publication. In the meantime Senators and Representatives and the various executive departments were called upon to supply copies to these libraries. Later, when the copies intended for them were received, the others were returned to the superintendent of documents.

Already approximately 3,000,000 volumes of surplus have been proposed for condemnation and sale as waste, having occupied valuable space and having constituted a menace to the safety of one of the buildings in which they were stored. It is proper, however, to state that these documents were first offered to approximately 8,000 libraries, to the various executive departments, and to the document rooms of the Senate and House of Representatives. This accumulation will be stopped through the operation of the legislation heretofore referred to.

BULK APPROPRIATIONS.

For more than thirty years the appropriations for the public printing and binding have been in bulk, without being limited to certain specific uses, as in the case of the appropriations for the various executive departments. This, in the opinion of the commission, has led to gross extravagance, if not to censurable abuse. There appeared to be no relation between the estimates submitted to Congress and the expenditures from appropriations based thereon, but made in connection with appropriations for other necessary expenditures without any of the usual limitations. In 1907 the estimates for machinery, etc., were $90,000, and the expenditures were $388.253.81. In 1908 the estimates were $80,000, and the expenditures in the first six months were $498,373.64, or more than six times the estimate for the entire year. The commission has recently recommended that in future appropriations for the public printing and binding there should be some approach in this respect to the limitations placed upon other appropriations.

In view of the condition above stated, the Joint Committee on Printing on May 25, 1908, adopted a resolution, which was certified to the Public Printer, requesting that in relation to purchases not included in annual contracts, when the estimated needs of his office exceeded the sum of $1,000 the Joint Committee on Printing be consulted in advance of purchase when Congress was in session and the Secretary of the Interior when Congress was not in session. This resolution, which related chiefly to purchases of machinery, and which specifically excepted contracts for illustrations, etc., was in harmony with existing provisions of law in relation to open-market purchases of paper.

SUPERVISION OVER MANUSCRIPTS.

Another glaring abuse was found in the fact that the various executive departments and government establishments to which appropriations and allotments of appropriations for printing were regularly made were permitted to transmit their reports to Congress and to have them first printed at congressional expense without charge to their own appropriations for composition, electrotyping, illustration, etc. They were transmitted without even a pretense of estimate of cost. Single reports costing in excess of $60,000 were printed for the departments by Congress, and even the heads of the bureaus from which they emanated, much less the heads of departments, had no knowledge and were not required to have knowledge of the original cost of these publications. Under the operation of the policy recommended by the commission many of the departmental publications have been reduced in volume more than one-half, and in other instances department heads have requested to be relieved of the further publication of certain reports.

The effect of this enactment may be further illustrated by the statement that the expenditures on account of composition and illustration of publications alone were reduced in 1907, as compared with 1905, by $287,435.18. And it may be further stated that the total expenditures on account of publications for the fiscal year 1907, the first year of the operation of these new provisions of law, were reduced approximately 19 per cent, or in excess of $800,000. This is the feature of the public printing with which the commission has chiefly dealt. These figures, in so far as they relate to printing for executive departments, are based upon official statements of the departments from bills rendered and, as far as they relate to the printing and binding for Congress, are based upon official statements of the Public Printer. It should be further stated in this connection that the printing expenditures for 1905 and for 1907 were measured by the same standard—namely, the schedule of charges which had not been changed. Owing to conditions over which the Joint Committee on Printing had no control no comparative statement of the product of the Government Printing Office for 1908 will ever be possible. This was due to the operations of The Audit System in the office, which were terminated by the commission. The Public Printer states, in his annual report for 1908, relative to certain tables, the following: "Owing to the manner in which the records of the office were kept under the direction of The Audit System it is impossible to make up the information for this table as heretofore submitted." This statement occurs in relation to four tables heretofore submitted with the report.

SCHEDULE OF CHARGES.

An act to provide for executing the public printing and establishing prices thereof, and for other purposes, approved August 26, 1852, fixed a scale of charges under which the public printing and binding was to be performed. The general provisions of this act were superseded by a joint resolution approved June 23, 1860, under the provisions of which the Government Printing Office was established. The official in charge of the Government Printing Office has ever since exercised without restraint discretion in fixing charges for the work performed. For twenty years prior to the last fiscal year the schedule of charges remained practically the same. Such changes as were made from time to time were imperceptible in their general effect and never seriously disturbed any appropriation or allotment of appropriation fixed by Congress. The total expenditures of the office, however, came to exceed the total charges for work performed. This excess for eight years, from 1900 to 1907, inclusive, amounted to $7,962,307.94, almost $1,000,000 per year, which in any commercial establishment would have been charged to the account of profit and loss, less the amount which might have been accounted for as plant improvements.

However, the largest expenditures properly chargeable to plant account in any one year occurred in 1904, amounting to $598,140.70. The average for the period above named was $323,287.11 per year. It has been customary for the executive departments to base their estimates for printing and binding upon the averages of their past experience. Congress, guided by the same policy, fixed the printing appropriations and allotments. The Public Printer, without notice to or consultation with any department or office charged with supervision over these appropriations or allotments, in November, 1907, arbitrarily changed the rate of charges, increasing them in some instances more than 50 per cent. Upon complaint of the departments an investigation was ordered and the report thereon directed attention to the matter of the importance to the departments of being thereafter advised of such proposed changes long enough in advance to readjust their estimates and secure a corresponding readjustment of appropriations. Subsequently, a more general investigation and report in relation to affairs of the Government Printing Office also directed attention to this subject, with a similar recommendation.

A change in the head of the office in June, 1908, after the appropriations for the current fiscal year had been fixed in the law, resulted in a further arbitrary exercise of this power conferred upon the Public Printer to fix upon the product of the office any charges which might suit his fancy. When this last change in the schedule of charges was proposed, the Public Printer was advised by telegram that the subject was regarded by the commission as one of such importance that the secretary of the commission had been directed to confer with him upon it. While the commission had no power to restrain the Public Printer, it indulged the hope that he might be persuaded to avoid the error which had within a year been so fatal to the administration of his predecessor in office. Notwithstanding the official reports on the subject heretofore referred to, and notwithstanding this kindly warning of the commission, the Public Printer proceeded without hesitation in the arbitrary exercise of his power. As a result, the integrity of every appropriation and allotment of appropriation fixed by Congress was destroyed. Appropriations and allotments of appropriations fixed by Congress were changed in some respects more than 50 per cent, and the average of these changes for the first three months of the fiscal year, as applied to the entire product of the office, was approximately 8 per cent. In the opinion of the commission the law which vests this power in the Public Printer without restraint in effect delegates to that official the power vested in Congress to fix appropriations. Necessarily Congress and its committees in dealing with problems so complex must insist upon conditions that will be as nearly stable and uniform as legislation and proper administration may afford. Congress has neither the time nor the opportunity to intelligently adjust the questions of dispute which must arise when an appropriation is thus unsettled. The commission, as well as the Committees on Appropriations, are asked from time to time to consider and adjust questions arising from these arbitrary changes which should not consume their time.

In order to afford even an approach to a continuous comparative record of the public printing and binding for the various departments and bureaus of the Government, and in order that Congress might intelligently consider future estimates, it became necessary for the commission to direct the Public Printer to supply to the commission the results of a comparative computation upon the entire product of the office, based upon the new schedule of charges and upon the schedule previously in force. Therefore, in the opinion of the commission, the schedule of charges in force at the Government Printing Office should not be entirely subject to individual discretion. These charges can not properly be determined in detail by statute, but they should be subject to such regulation and restraint as the Joint Committee on Printing may properly impose.

Congress, as well as the departments, should be forever protected against the possibility of a recurrence of these incidents of the past two years. The commission therefore recommends legislation which will provide for the establishment of a schedule of charges in relation to the principal items of cost of the public printing and binding, which shall be subject to regulation by the Joint Committee on Printing. The Public Printer would naturally be consulted to the fullest extent in the establishment and regulation of such charges, and the legislation recommended would, in the opinion of the commission, not only relieve Congress, but the Public Printer and the various executive departments from many questions of dispute which have heretofore needlessly consumed the time of all.

BINDING OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The commission in the course of its inquiry has received many communications from librarians in charge of the important libraries in relation to the binding of public documents and reports. Since the establishment of the Government it has been customary to bind these publications in leather bindings (principally sheepskin). Radical changes in the methods of tanning, which became general nearly fifty years ago, have been disastrous to the permanency of these bindings. Librarians and publishers have been gradually substituting other materials. Notwithstanding frequent and exhaustive discussions in the conventions of the American Library Association, and notwithstanding the frequent appeals for relief which came to Congress from those in charge of the official files of government publications distributed throughout the United States—publications which remained the property of the Government in the custody of the libraries—the law prevented any relief from this condition by reason of the fact that it specifically provided that these publications should be bound in sheepskin.

The commission, under date of February 5, 1907, addressed a communication to the librarians in charge of the principal libraries of the United States, as well as to others whose expert knowledge on this subject would afford the basis of an intelligent expression. The experts whose opinions were invited were unanimously in favor of some binding other than sheep. The librarians, who were not purchasers, but merely custodians, and who were specifically requested to disregard considerations of cost, were practically unanimous in their desire for a change to materials much less expensive. The cost of sheep binding applied to the publications intended for distribution to the depository libraries for the Fifty-eighth Congress, as shown by an estimate from the Public Printer, was $128,500, and the estimated cost of the binding which the commission finally recommended would have been $38,880. Legislation on this subject was secured by the commission and, under provision of a joint resolution approved January 15, 1908, conferring authority upon the Joint Committee on Printing to regulate this binding, the Public Printer has been directed hereafter to use buckram, after a sample agreed upon by representatives of the American Library Association in conference with representatives of the Library of Congress, the Director of the Bureau of Standards, who conducted the tests applied to various samples submitted, a representative of the commission, and others. The commission will report to Congress separately in detail upon this branch of its inquiry.

ANNUAL REPORT OF PUBLIC PRINTER.

The Public Printer is required by law to report annually to Congress upon the operations of his office. The annual report of this official has been in practically the same form for more than twenty years. A careful study of its contents leads to the unavoidable conclusion that it was originally designed to obscure rather than to enlighten. There is no information in any annual report of the last twenty years that will afford the slightest clew to the comparative product of the office, except as the charges to Congress and the departments for work performed will afford a basis of calculation. These charges were based upon a schedule that was fairly uniform for a considerable period. In other words, the yardstick of price is the only possible standard of measurement. In view of these conditions, the commission, after consultation with accountants of the Government Printing Office, suggested certain classifications calculated in their nature to afford a comparative analysis of the product of the office from year to year, as well as a comparative analysis by bureaus of the work executed for them.

In the meantime such data was obtained as would afford the possibility of comparison in many important respects of the printing of future years with that of the fiscal years 1905, 1906, and 1907. This proposed classification will not be a difficult task, and most of the information required has been carried in the records of the Government Printing Office for many years. With the beginning of the present fiscal year these records were so amended as to afford the opportunity for carrying what later, in the opinion of the commission, will afford a satisfactory statement of the annual product of the office. In relation to the year 1908 no comparison of the product of the office will ever be possible, owing to the operations of the Audit System. The commission in the legislation herewith recommended to Congress provides for a fiscal report, and for a statistical report by departments, from the Public Printer, which shall be submitted to Congress under such arrangement and classification as the Joint Committee on Printing may approve, and imposes at the time upon the various executive departments the necessity of supplying to Congress a report by bureaus upon their printing operations, to be supplied upon blanks which shall be also subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing. The object of the commission will be to relieve the Public Printer of the necessity of classification by bureaus and place upon the various departments the necessity of supplying these bureau reports, with a view to inducing a closer supervision by the departments themselves, and affording the heads of departments opportunity for intelligent analysis of the printing operations of their several bureaus. While placing upon the Public Printer the necessity of slight additional expenditures by reason of these requirements, it proposes in its recommendation to relieve him and the office of the superintendent of documents of the necessity of reporting in detail much that has been of no value either as information to Congress or as a check upon extravagance; so that in the end the clerical assistance necessary to conform with the requirements of the report which the commission has contemplated would, instead of being increased, be materially reduced. At the same time every safeguard has been carefully preserved.

A further advantage of requiring the form of this important report to be subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing will be to avert the possibility of a recurrence of the experiences of the last fiscal year which have rendered impossible any report upon many important operations of the office specifically required by law to be furnished, and from which requirements the Public Printer recently requested to be relieved. It will still further insure such adherence to fixed forms as will remove the chance of further reckless experimentation in bookkeeping and accounting methods based upon individual caprice, and insure such stability and uniformity in records as will afford the opportunity of analytical comparisons.

REIMBURSEMENT OF APPROPRIATION FOR THE PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

Section 87 of the general printing law approved January 12, 1895, directs that the printing of the various executive departments shall be performed at the Government Printing Office, "except in cases otherwise provided by law." The appropriations for the public printing and binding under control of the Public Printer are for wages, materials, etc. Credits thereunder are allotted to the various executive departments without reference to the several provisions requiring public printing carried in other appropriation acts. While it has been the practice to reimburse the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the cost of labor and materials necessary to the work executed on account of other appropriations, there is no specific provision under which this has been done; and although the comptroller has apparently never been called upon for a ruling on this practice, it is believed by the commission that if placed before him for decision there would not be found any specific provision of law under which the Public Printer could disburse the amounts received for such work.

There was performed at the Government Printing Office during the fiscal year 1907, under appropriations not under control of the Public Printer, but made to departments specifically for printing and binding, $243,754.29, and for printing chargeable to appropriations authorizing printing, but not made specifically therefor, $247,213.68, a total of $490,967.97; and these authorizations for printing required by law to be executed at the Government Printing Office, involving expenditures from appropriations made for wages, materials, etc., are found in the appropriations for almost every government establishment. There was also executed on private orders and for speeches, etc., under authority of law, work involving expenditures appropriated for wages, materials, etc., amounting to $67,635.76, but under a decision of the comptroller the amounts received for the latter-mentioned work were not available for disbursement by the Public Printer for labor, materials, or other expenses of the Government Printing Office, but were deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. If the disbursements of the office on account of wages, materials, etc., are to be compared with the product of the office, and if the charges for the product of the office upon this showing are to be compared with the charges for work performed by private establishments, the proceeds of this work should reimburse the appropriations for public printing and binding, and legislation in accordance with this principle is embodied in the recommendations of the commission.

SAVINGS EFFECTED BY COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

The performance of the supervisory duties imposed upon the Joint Committee on Printing under a resolution approved March 30, 1908, is effecting annual savings amounting to approximately $400,000. These savings relate entirely to surplus printing which has heretofore accumulated in warehouses to be eventually sold as waste. Under the operations of the act of March 1, 1907, much valuable time has been saved to both Houses of Congress in affording relief from the consideration of trivial matters of printing, and the printing requirements of Congress have been more promptly met and much surplus printing has been prevented. Under the provisions of the joint resolution approved January 15, 1908, regulating the binding for depository libraries, the committee effected savings exceeding $40,000 per year. In all, the Joint Committee on Printing, through its supervisory regulations alone, are annually saving to the Government considerably more than half a million dollars. And no Senator or Representative can say that the committee has robbed him of any discretion over a single copy of any publication which he had ever previously exercised.

RECOMMENDATION.

The commission respectfully recommends the enactment into law of the provisions embodied in the accompanying draft of bill.

Respectfully submitted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 9407) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Stephen M. Holt, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SUTHERLAND introduced a bill (S. 9408) granting an increase of pension to Frank Wilcox, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DEPEW introduced a bill (S. 9409) granting a pension to Carrie F. Wright, which was read twice by its title and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 9410) to amend the act entitled "An act to encourage the establishment of public marine schools," approved June 20, 1874, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 9411) to grant an honorable discharge to Dennis O'Brien, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 9412) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act amending section 4708 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to pensions to remarried widows,'" approved February 28, 1903;

A bill (S. 9413) granting a pension to Margaret Crawford Irwin (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 9414) granting a pension to Eliza A. Miller Bradley;

A bill (S. 9415) granting an increase of pension to Henry Wren (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 9416) granting a pension to surviving officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army who served in the Philippine Islands ninety days or more.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (S. 9417) authorizing the President to promote Lieut. Col. Wilson T. Hartz, U. S. Army, retired, to the grade of brigadier-general, retired; and

A bill (S. 9418) to grant an honorable discharge to Samuel Ruth (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 9419) for the relief of the owners of the ship Amelia, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan introduced a bill (S. 9420) to transfer Capt. John Clarke Wilson from the retired to the active list of the navy, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 9423) providing for participation in the Universal and International Exhibition, to be held at Brussels in 1910, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced a bill (S. 9424) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Madison Pruitt, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 9425) for the relief of J. A. Denny, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 136) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate two condemned cannon to the State of Nebraska, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DICK introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 137) making the 12th day of February a legal holiday, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $123,000 toward the construction of the fireproof buildings for committee rooms and offices of the United States Senate, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DEPEW submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 to enable the army and navy to participate in the Hudson-Fulton celebration to be held on the Hudson River, New York, September 27 to October 2, 1909, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to compensate Elizabeth G. Martin for the loss of her husband's life while in the employ of the Government on the Isthmian Canal, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment providing for the distribution of the reports of the United States circuit court of appeals and of the United States circuit and district courts to certain officers of the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TALIAFERRO submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for one steam revenue cutter of the first class for service in the waters of Key West, Fla., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ROE REISINGER.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Roe Reisinger, accompanying S. R. 13, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, subject to the provision of clause 2 of Rule XXX.

REPORT OF ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 292), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound in cloth 1,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Isthmian Canal Commission for 1908, with the accompanying illustrations, for the use of the Senate.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 293), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and hereby is, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to examine into all matters relating to the government of the District of Columbia, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recesses or sessions of the Senate, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such assistance as may be necessary, the expense to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

NATIONAL-BANK ACT.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the pamphlet entitled "National-Bank Act, as Amended, with Other Laws Relating to National Banks," which I send to the desk, be printed as a document, and that 250 additional copies be printed and bound in paper covers for the use of the Senate document room.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 250 additional copies of Senate Document No. 733, Sixtieth Congress, second session, "The National-Bank Act, as Amended," be printed, bound in paper covers, for the use of the Senate document room.

INDIAN LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 9039) to enable the Winnebago Indians to protect from overflow their tribal and allotted lands located within the boundaries of any drainage district in Nebraska, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 8356) to enable the Omaha Indians to protect from overflow their tribal and allotted lands located within the boundaries of any drainage district in Nebraska, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26394) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move the following as an amendment to amendment No. 5.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine offers an amendment to amendment No. 5 which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of amendment No. 5 the following words:

And hereafter no part of the public moneys or of any appropriation heretofore or hereafter made by Congress shall be used for the payment of compensation or expenses of any commission or any member thereof, unless the creation of such commission shall be or shall have been authorized by Congress.

Mr. LODGE. I thought that went out on a point of order.

Mr. HALE. It was a part of a provision that went out, but in itself it is only a limitation. It was not considered by the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I did not hear the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I had the impression that it was in the bill; I intended to offer it at the end of the bill. But if there is any objection to putting it on the bill at this time, I withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HALE. I move, then, that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. TILLMAN the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORT M'PHERSON MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CLAY. I was not present this morning when a report was made on the bill (H. R. 27864) granting a right of way over a strip of land along the eastern boundary of the Fort McPherson Military Reservation to the commissioners of Fulton County, Ga., for road purposes. It is a local matter, where the work needs to go on at once. It relates solely to my State. I ask that the bill be taken up and placed on its passage.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLAY. I ask that the Senate bill on the same subject be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senate bill was indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was indefinitely postponed on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CLAY. All right. I did not know it.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On February 18, 1909:

S. 8510. An act to extend the time of payments on certain homestead entries in Oklahoma;

S. 8422. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 8628. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 8629. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

On February 19, 1909:

S. 8898. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the late civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 8254. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE MERCHANDISE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24140) extending the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, concerning transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

Mr. PILES. I move that the Senate recede from its amendments to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

MAJ. G. S. BINGHAM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message of the President of the United States, which was read and, on motion of Mr. TALIAFERRO, was, with the accompanying bill, ordered to lie on the table:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of February 16, 1909 (the House of Representatives concurring), I return herewith Senate bill No. 6891, for the relief of Maj. G. S. Bingham.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 18, 1909.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 26203, the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LODGE. The motion is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not debatable.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood that, Mr. President. I rose to make a statement, which I know I can make only by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection. I do not understand what the Senator desires.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will state it very briefly, if I am permitted; otherwise I will wait until I can state it within the rule.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I rose just to say, Mr. President, that I am a member of the committee reporting this bill; that I was present during the consideration of the bill in the committee; that it is reported with an extended report explaining its provisions; and that it appropriates money to carry out existing law.

However, if any Senator on this floor desires that it shall go over one day that he may have an opportunity to examine it, I would be glad to join in such a request. Otherwise, I have no request to make in respect to its going over for a day, because I am familiar with its provisions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 26203) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the committee be considered as they are reached in the reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in the item for army and navy pensions, on page 2, line 5, after the word "separately," to insert the following proviso:

And provided further, That when an additional pension has been, or may hereafter be, granted by special act to a widow or guardian on account of a helpless child, such additional pension shall in no wise affect the rate of pension the widow may be entitled to independent of such additional allowance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 13, to strike out:

For salary of one agent for the payment of pensions, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 15, to strike out:

For clerk hire, and other services, in the pension agencies, $335,000: Provided, That the amount of clerk hire, and other services, and the salaries paid shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 20, to insert:

For salaries of agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,000 each, $72,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 23, to insert:

For clerk hire and other services, in the pension agencies, $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the amount of clerk hire and other services for each agency shall be apportioned as nearly as practicable in proportion to the number of pensioners paid at each agency, and the salaries paid shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 5, to insert:

For rent, New York agency, $4,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 7, to insert:

For examination and inspection of pension agencies, as provided by the final provision of the act of August 8, 1882, amending section 4766, Revised Statutes, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 17, after the word "vouchers," to insert:

And provided further, That hereafter the settlement of all claims for the reimbursement of expenses of the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners shall be under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions.

So as to make the clause read:

For stationery and other necessary expenses, $30,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall hereafter furnish free to all pensioners franked or penalty envelopes, properly addressed, to be used by said pensioners only for the return of their pension vouchers: And provided further, That hereafter the settlement of all claims for the reimbursement of expenses of the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners shall be under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think it appropriate to give a short explanation of some of these amendments before the Senate finally votes on them, and for the reason that I expect to ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon one of the amendments as it comes before the Senate.

Mr. President, the appropriation carried by the bill, as reported by your committee, is $2,000,000 less than last year for the payment of pensions, and that notwithstanding the fact that we added 38,682 new pensioners to the pension roll. It is $10,000 less for clerk hire at the various agencies; it is $100,000 less for fees and expenses of examining surgeons, and $35,000 less for stationery, making a total decrease in this bill over last year of $2,145,000.

There was added to the roll more than $38,000 by reason of the widows' pension act which was passed last year, and notwithstanding that addition there has been a decrease in the pension roll of nearly 16,000. This decrease in the last year is made up as follows:

By death, 50,676; by remarriage, 944; by minors arriving at age, 1,025; by failure to claim for over three years, 711; for other causes, 11,010; making a total of 54,366.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator if the decreased number from death of 50,000 includes survivors and widows and children that may be on the roll?

Mr. McCUMBER. It includes all who survive, including children.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator state, approximately, the number of survivors of the war who have died during the year?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I have it here. I will find it before I get through, but I can not recall it at the present time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to ask the Senator what is the net increase or decrease? We could not hear him on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. McCUMBER. The total decrease by death is 54,366. More than 38,000, however, have been added by reason of the special widows' pension act of last year.

The first amendment, Mr. President, is to cover this condition. The pension act of last year granted to all widows, irrespective of the amount of income, who were receiving less than $12 per month a rate of $12 per month. The construction given by the department was that a widow who was receiving $8 a month in her own behalf and also $8 a month for a dependent child was receiving over $12 per month and could not come under the provisions of the law. That was not the intent of Congress, and this amendment is to make certain that provision of the law.

The next amendment is the continuance of the eighteen agencies instead of reducing to a single agency, as is proposed in the bill as passed by the House.

The third change provides that the settlement of claims for reimbursement of expenses of last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners shall be under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions and that he shall be in charge. The existing law provides that such settlement shall be under the direction of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Interior Department, and much confusion has arisen because that department had not the complete files in each case. This amendment was made at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Pensions.

This covers the several amendments. There is one amendment with which we have had considerable trouble at each session of Congress, and that is the question of the reduction of the agencies. Your committee reported last year in favor of the continuance of the agencies as now provided by law. The report that was made at that time is very proper now, and I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The report of the House Committee on Appropriations gives the reasons which actuated that committee in recommending this reduction, and it is possible that its estimate—the savings of from $100,000 to $150,000 annually might result from the abolishment of the several agencies—may be correct; but in the opinion of your committee it is probable that these savings, which only amount to about 20 cents per annum for each pensioner, will be more than offset by the added inconvenience to the great army of pensioners. It may be added that from a statement furnished by the Commissioner of Pensions it appears that the cost per capita of the payment of pensions by a majority of the agencies is considerably less than the cost per capita by the Washington agency. Your committee is unanimously opposed to the centralization of this branch of the public service in the city of Washington. It is therefore recommended that the present agencies be retained and that the bill be amended in accordance with the existing law relative to the conducting of the agencies and the apportionment of the clerk hire.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I received in my mail yesterday a memorandum on the consolidation of the pension agencies prepared by one of the judges of our district court, which is so clear and so explanatory of the several questions which arise in the discussion of this proposition that I ask that the Secretary read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MEMORANDA ON CONSOLIDATION OF PENSION AGENCIES.

The Secretary of the Interior has recommended that the 18 pension agencies, now located in 16 States, be consolidated into one agency at Washington, D. C., presumably in the Pension Bureau. The House of Representatives has acted favorably thereon and the matter is now before the Senate committee.

It is claimed that the payment of pensions could be done efficiently from one office at Washington at a saving of from $200,000 to $250,000 per annum.

It may be admitted that the salaries of 17 pension agents, amounting to $68,000 annually, would be saved.

It may also be conceded, perhaps, that through capable reorganization and systemization following a union of agencies some saving of labor would ensue. One hundred thousand dollars, or about one-fifth of the total annual cost of all the agencies, would seem to be a liberal estimate for this.

Against the annual economy of $168,000 should be charged the difference between the average salary of the agency clerk and the Pension Bureau clerk at Washington. This item, calculated upon the whole number of agency clerks, amounts to about $125,000.

The payment of all pensioners from Washington would increase the mail to be handled at the post-office there probably 10,000,000 pieces annually, which would certainly increase materially the expense of that office, while the work of no post-office where an agency was discontinued would be reduced enough to lessen its expense. The item of expense thus created when charged against the alleged saving would leave little, if any, real gain, unless, as seems to be the general impression, the Bureau of Pensions, owing to the decline in its work of granting claims, has a surplus of employees whom it desires to employ with a large part of the agency work of disbursement, and thus dismiss many agency clerks from service.

The Commissioner of Pensions, in his last annual report, states that no reduction in the clerical force of the bureau has occurred, except through death, resignation, or for cause, and strongly indorses this practice in justice to the employees. No one is disposed to question the fairness or wisdom of his view, or that it should apply with less force to the pension-agency clerks, who are on no different footing, with reference to the civil-service laws, and who are doing equally efficient work on a much less average compensation and a longer average day.

With every executive department growing with the natural expansion of governmental affairs, there would seem to be no reason why competent clerks no longer needed in the Pension Bureau should not be transferred to other bureaus instead of admitting new and inexperienced service.

The chief objection, however, to the proposed legislation is furnished by the convenience and expeditious operation of the present agency system. It has been in use forty years. Its results are good. The great army of pensioners—nearly a million—and those interested in their welfare are satisfied, and this is worth more than any theoretical saving thus far estimated on paper.

Pension money is essentially an emergency asset. The great majority of pensioners spend it for current necessities. They anxiously await it, have immediate use for it, and many promise its payment in advance for urgent needs. In this sense, its peculiar character is quite generally recognized throughout the States by the statutory exemption of pension money and certain kinds of property purchased therewith from execution. So that to locate the disbursement of these enormous urgency funds on the edge of the continent, far remote from the great body of beneficiaries (and possibly further impede their circulation by red-tape methods, proverbially incident to departmental practice), seems, at best, but a doubtful reform. At present the agency points of distribution are reasonably near to the pensioners whose quarterly checks are promptly received. The thousands of imperfectly executed vouchers returned quarterly for correction cause no extreme delay and correspondence concerning payments is facilitated. In large cities like New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Chicago, and San Francisco, where pensioners are largely segregated, the matter of proximity is especially important. In fact, the economy in time is the valuable consideration under the present plan of payment, and this must be largely sacrificed by consolidation at a point so far from the center of both population and territory at Washington, D. C.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we had this same subject in conference between the two Houses for a great many days during the last session, even growing into weeks. The House finally agreed to the Senate amendment. The sentiment of the Senate may have changed since that time on some of these provisions, and I should like to have a yea-and-nay vote on concurring in the amendment relating to pension agencies, so that the committee may be informed as to the present sentiment of the Senate on that subject. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Is this to retain the present agencies?

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for a vote upon the committee amendment to the House bill and continuing the several agencies.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask that the question be stated. I was not able to hear the Senator from North Dakota, but I understand his reference was to the pension agencies. What is the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply want a yea-and-nay vote upon the question of concurring in the amendment continuing the present agencies.

Mr. McCREARY. Very well.

Mr. BURKETT. The vote will be on concurring in the amendment to continue the present agencies, as I understand?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. Then a vote "yea" will be in favor of the continuance of the agencies?

Mr. McCUMBER. A vote "yea" will be in favor of a continuance of the agencies.

Mr. BURKETT. And a "nay" vote in favor of a consolidation in Washington?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. McCREARY. Does the Senator from North Dakota move to strike out from the bill the provision of the House or to insert a provision?

Mr. McCUMBER. The motion, of course, would be not only to strike out the House provision but to insert in lieu thereof the Senate provision.

Mr. McCREARY. A "yea" vote, as I understand, is for the agencies to remain as they are.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from North Dakota state his proposition?

Mr. McCUMBER. The amendment is to strike out from line 14 to line 20, inclusive, on page 2, and to insert in lieu thereof lines 21 to 25, on page 2, and from line 1 to line 12, on page 3.

Mr. McCUMBER. To line 12, on page 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question will be upon concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, striking out the provision for one pension agency and inserting the provision for the continuation of the agencies as they now exist.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon the proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. FULTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I am told, however, that there is no objection to my voting, and I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the negative). I wish to withdraw my vote, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], with whom I am paired, being absent.

Mr. GALLINGER. The senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber, and authorized me to say that, if present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 67, nays 2, as follows:

YEAS—67.

Aldrich	Cummins	Gary	Penrose
Ankeny	Curtis	Gore	Perkins

So the amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the other amendments made, as in Committee of the Whole, will be concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 26915) making appropriations for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 26915) making appropriations for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill and read to the end of line 21, on page 2.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was out of my seat for just one moment when the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs called up the army appropriation bill. I wish to say, if I may interrupt the reading for just a moment, that I had made a request to have the bill go over for one day, and I know that other Senators have made the same request. I want now to inquire, if the consideration of the bill is to be forced to-day, whether the chairman will not make an extended and full explanation of all the changes of existing law, as well as all the increases made by the Senate committee over the appropriations made by the House committee, at the conclusion of the first reading of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall of course expect to hold myself in readiness to explain any of the provisions of and amendments to the House bill at the end of the reading or as we go along.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Office of the Chief of Staff," in the item for United States service schools, on page 3, line 7, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That from the enlisted force of the army now provided by law the President may authorize the organization of school detachments at each of the service schools, and may authorize the appointment therein of such noncommissioned officers, mechanics, artificers, farriers, horseshoers, and cooks as may be necessary for the administration of such school: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as to authorize an increase in the total number of enlisted men of the army now authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 16, to insert:

Contingent expenses at military posts: For the official entertainment of foreign military and naval representatives and other distinguished guests while visiting officially the military posts of the United States Army, to be expended by the Chief of Staff of the Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Under the Chief of Artillery," on page 4, line 10, before the word "school," to strike out "defense" and insert "artillery," so as to read:

Coast artillery school, Fort Monroe, Va.: For incidental expenses of the school, including chemicals, stationery, hardware.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Chief Signal Officer," on page 7, line 9, after the word "California," to insert "Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.," so as to make the clause read:

Annunciator buzzer systems at target ranges: For installation of annunciator buzzer systems at target ranges at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.; Fort Niagara, N. Y.; Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; Fort Riley, Kans.; Fort Sam Houston, Tex.; Fort Sheridan, Ill.; Presidio of Monterey, Cal.; Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.; and Fort William McKinley, P. I., $18,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 17, before the word "dollars," to insert "one hundred and eight thousand eight hundred," so as to read:

For pay of officers of the line, $7,108,800.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask the chairman the necessity for the increase.

Mr. WARREN. The increase is estimated for, and the information of the committee is that the present strength of the army will require fully as much as this, and perhaps more. We put it in here to avoid its coming in later as a deficiency. Last year there was more than $4,000,000 of army deficiency. As the Senator knows, the statutes provide for the pay of officers and men, and whether we appropriate enough or not, they have to be paid and will be paid just the same. So it is a question merely as to whether we will have it here in its proper place or be compelled to put it in a deficiency bill following next year. It is within the estimate, I will say to the Senator, and the estimate is cut to a little below, for that matter, the present strength of the army, and is believed to be as low as prudence will admit of its being cut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 17, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow payments for exercising higher command under the provisions of section 7 of the act approved April 26, 1898 (30 Stat. L., p. 364), which have been made between the date of the passage of said act and March 18, 1907, in accordance with the regulations and decisions then existing: Provided, also, That where disallowances have been made, the Auditor for the War Department is hereby authorized to reopen said settlements and credit to the claimants any sums which have heretofore been deducted under the head of increased pay for the exercise of higher command.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thousand" and insert "and thirty-two thousand seven hundred and eighty," so as to make the clause read:

For additional pay for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $1,632,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifteen million five hundred thousand" and insert "sixteen million seven hundred and forty-eight thousand and ten," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, $16,748,010.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This amendment seems to be an increase of $1,200,000 over the provision made for the pay of enlisted men in the bill as it passed the House. It seems to me it calls for some statement or explanation from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WARREN. The same general statement that I have heretofore made will apply to this item.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is it provided for in the estimates of the department?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. I will say to the Senator that the amendment upon which he requested information a moment ago was for the commissioned officers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. This is for the enlisted men of the line. It is within the estimate. The committee had before it the Paymaster-General, the Chief of Staff, and several other officers, and, after close questioning, it was believed that the estimate had been "cut to the bone," as they termed it, and we felt that we ought to put in here the estimate, which the House had failed to do. This, as in the case of the other item, is a matter of statute, and must be paid, and we either have to incorporate it here or we will be bound to pass it in the form of a deficiency.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Do I understand the Senator to say that this increase is in accordance with the estimates originally submitted to the committee?

Mr. WARREN. It is.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Did the House committee, if I may inquire further, if the Senator knows, have the same estimate before it?

Mr. WARREN. It did.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six hundred" and insert "seven hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

For additional pay for length of service, $1,750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 8, to insert:

Private secretary to Chief of Staff, $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 21, before the word "and," to strike out "forty-four thousand six hundred" and insert "forty-seven thousand," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $347,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three hundred thousand" and insert "four hundred and fifty-one thousand one hundred," so as to read:

Medical Department: For pay of officers in the Medical Department, $1,451,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after the word "dollars," in line 18, to insert:

Provided, That any major of the Medical Corps on the active list of the army who, at his first examination for promotion to the grade of lieutenant-colonel in said corps, has been or shall hereafter be found disqualified for such promotion for any reason other than physical disability incurred in the line of duty shall be suspended from promotion and his right thereto shall pass successively to such officers next below him in rank in said corps as are or may become eligible to promotion under existing law during the period of his suspension; and any officer suspended from promotion, as hereinbefore provided, shall be reexamined as soon as practicable after the expiration of one year from the date of the completion of the examination that resulted in his suspension; and if on such reexamination he is found qualified for promotion, he shall again become eligible thereto; but if he is found disqualified by reason of physical disability incurred in line of duty, he shall be retired, with the rank to which his seniority entitles him to be promoted; and if he is not found disqualified by reason of such physical disability, but is found disqualified for promotion for any other reason, he shall be retired without promotion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, in line 19, after the word "cents," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter when an officer of the line of the Regular Army, whose original commission in the army is dated prior to October 1, 1890, and who has been passed over by his juniors in length of commissioned service in the same branch of the line, is retired under existing law, he shall be retired with the rank and pay of the grade which he would have attained if promotion in the several grades from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive, had been carried out lineally and by seniority in the several branches of the line prior to the act of Congress approved October 1, 1890, regulating promotions: And provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to mitigate or remove loss of rank which any officer may have suffered by sentence of court-martial, action of examining board, or voluntary transfer: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to deprive any officer upon retirement of the rank he now holds, to which he may attain at any future time, or to which he may be entitled by law upon retirement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 16, to insert:

For pay of retired officers on active service, $150,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 18, to insert:

For additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $54,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 5, after the word "force," to insert:

And provided further, That any officer of the Medical Department, U. S. Army, below the grade of brigadier-general, who served creditably as an acting assistant surgeon in the army during the civil war prior to April 9, 1865, and has heretofore been, or may hereafter be, retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service, or on account of age, or after forty years' service, may, in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be placed on the retired list of the army with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the date of his retirement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 19, after the word "million," to insert "two hundred thousand," so as to read:

For pay of the enlisted men of the army on the retired list $2,200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 5, before the word "thousand," to insert "and twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

For mileage to officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law, $625,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 18, before the word "to," to strike out "including heat and light," so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence, mileage, and commutation of quarters to officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, $17,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Philippine Scouts," on page 23, line 24, after the word "appropriated," to strike out ", except the appropriation for mileage of officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law," and on page 24, line 1, after the word "miscellaneous," to insert "except the appropriation for mileage of officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law," so as to make the clause read:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the army and miscellaneous, except the appropriation for mileage of officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law, shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers of the pay department as pay of the army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and twenty-five" and insert "six hundred," so as to make the clause read:

Encampment and maneuvers, organized militia: For paying the expenses of the organized militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia, which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments as may be established for the field instruction of the troops of the Regular Army, as provided by sections 15 and 21 of the act of January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," to be immediately available and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1911, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead, on page 25, line 12, after the word "enlistment," to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of War may authorize the temporary appointment of such number of sergeants and corporals in the companies at the general recruiting depots as may be necessary for the proper control and instruction of the varying number of recruits attached to such companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 22, after the word "army," to insert "for extraordinary expense of subsistence of West Point cadets while attending inaugural ceremony, to be immediately available, $1,587."

Mr. WARREN. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment by adding, after the word "available," in line 24, the words "and to be expended from this appropriation."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 14, after the word "men," to insert "for officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools," so as to read:

Regular supplies: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks, and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States military prison; also ranges and stoves, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men, for officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 8, after the word "expenses," to strike out "Cost" and insert "Postage; cost," so as to read:

Incidental expenses: Postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the army; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for horses for cavalry, artillery, and engineers, on page 34, line 8, after the word "purposes," to strike out:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any horses below the standard set by army regulations for cavalry and artillery horses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 17, after the word "War," to strike out "and the Auditor for the War Department is authorized and directed to remove any suspensions of accounts of quartermasters for the fiscal years 1907 and 1908, for the purchase of furniture where the same has been or may be approved by the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two million five hundred thousand" and insert "four million," so as to read:

Provided further, That the number of and total sum paid for civilian employees in the Quartermaster's Department, including those paid from the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks, and quarters, army transportation, clothing, camp and garrison equipage, shall be limited to the actual requirements of the service, and that no employee paid therefrom shall receive a salary of more than $150 per month, except upon the approval of the Secretary of War, $4,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 16, after the word "college," to insert:

Provided further, That $15,000 of this sum may be used for the construction of a chapel on the military reservation at Fort Des Moines, Iowa: And provided further, That $1,700 may be expended for the completion of stable at the engineer post, Washington Barracks, D. C.

Mr. WARREN. As a committee amendment, in line 20, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

Of the foregoing total amount.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for transportation of the army and its supplies, on page 39, line 5, after the word "million," to strike out "two hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and insert "six hundred and thirty-two thousand eight hundred and forty-six dollars and fifty cents," so as to read:

In all $12,632,486.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 9, after the word "construction," to insert "and repair;" and in line 15, before the word "dollars," to insert "one hundred and fifty thousand," so as to make the clause read:

Roads, walks, wharves, and drainage: For the construction and repair by the Quartermaster's Department of roads, walks, and wharves; for payment of extra-duty pay to enlisted men employed in opening roads and in building wharves; for the pay of employees; for the disposal of drainage; for dredging channels and for care and improvement of grounds at military posts and stations, $1,150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 23, to insert:

Construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Alaska: For the construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails in the district of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the board of road commissioners described in section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905, and to be expended conformably to the provisions of said act, $350,000, to remain available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven hundred" and insert "three hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

Barracks and quarters, Philippine Islands: Continuing the work of providing for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including repairs and payment of rents, the acquisition of title to building sites and such additions to existing military reservations as may be necessary, and including also shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes, $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifty-five," and in line 9, after the word "Mexico," to insert "and that $45,000 may be used for the construction of a hospital at Fort Yellowstone, in the Yellowstone National Park," so as to make the clause read:

Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including also all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, $455,000: Provided, That $85,000 of this sum may be used for construction of additional ward buildings for the United States Army General Hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., and that $45,000 may be used for the construction of a hospital at Fort Yellowstone, in the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. WARREN. In line 10, after the word "dollars," I move to insert the words "of the foregoing total amount."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 23, before the word "and," to strike out "fifty-five thousand five hundred" and insert "eighty-two thousand one hundred," so as to read:

Shooting galleries and ranges: For shelter, shooting galleries, ranges for small-arms target practice, repairs, and expenses incident thereto, such ranges and galleries to be open, as far as practicable, to the National Guard and organized rifle clubs under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, $182,176.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for shooting galleries and ranges, on page 43, line 7, after the word "available," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That $18,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available for the purchase of 1,400 acres of land, more or less, adjoining the military reservation of Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., as an addition to the rifle range: And provided further, That $3,600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available for the purchase of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter and the east half of section 2, in township 1 south, range 1 east of the Salt Lake meridian, as an addition to the target range of Fort Douglas Military Reservation, in the State of Utah: And provided further, That $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available for the repair and improvement of the United States rifle range and wharf at Pensacola, Fla.

Mr. WARREN. In line 7, on page 43, after the word "That," I move to insert "of the foregoing total amount;" in line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert the same language; and in line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert also the words "of the foregoing total amount."

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask the chairman of the committee to state the reasons for this change.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator state what he desires?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire some information in respect to this entire provision.

Mr. WARREN. The addition of rifle ranges or hospitals?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The necessity for incorporating the provision in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. As to hospitals or rifle ranges?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senate amendment.

Mr. WARREN. On page 43?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 43.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, on account of the adoption of smokeless powder and of new arms which carry projectiles very much farther than the old, the target ranges of some of the posts have been found too restricted. The consequence has been that the live stock of farmers and neighbors has been killed, and we have had large damages to pay on account of the rifle practice. So these are additions sufficient in size to insure the use of rifle ranges that otherwise would be practically useless with the present arms and the present explosives used.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 6, to insert:

Buildings on Corregidor Island, Philippine Islands: For the construction on Corregidor Island, Philippine Islands, of storehouses for the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Ordnance, and Medical departments of the army, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 11, to insert:

Hereafter whenever pressing obligations are required to be paid by a disbursing officer of the Quartermaster's Department and there is an insufficient balance to his official credit under the proper appropriation or appropriations for the purpose, he is authorized to make payment from the total available balance to his official credit, provided sufficient funds under the proper appropriation or appropriations have been apportioned by the Quartermaster-General for the expenditure. When such disbursements are made, the accounts of the disbursing officer shall show the charging of the proper appropriations, the balances under which will be adjusted by the disbursing officer on receipt of funds or by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Medical Department," in the item for the medical and hospital department, on page 46, line 10, after the word "Arkansas," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter all persons admitted to treatment in the Army and Navy General Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., shall, while patients in said hospital, be subject to the rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Engineer Department," on page 47, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eleven thousand five hundred" and insert "twenty thousand," so as to make the clause read:

Engineer depots: For incidental expenses of the depots, including fuel, lights, chemicals, stationery, hardware, machinery, pay of civilian clerks, mechanics, and laborers, extra-duty pay to soldiers necessarily employed for periods not less than ten days as artificers on work in addition to and not strictly in the line of their military duties, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, draftsmen, printers, lithographers, photographers, engine drivers, telegraph operators, teamsters, wheelwrights, masons, machinists, painters, overseers, laborers; repairs of, and for materials to repair, public buildings, machinery, and unforeseen expenses, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. At an early hour I shall ask unanimous consent to fix a time for a vote on the bill, but for the present I ask that it may be laid aside temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," on page 50, line 4, after the word "service," to insert "and ammunition, targets, target material, and other accessories may be issued for small-arms target practice and instruction at the educational institutions and state soldiers and sailors' orphans' homes, to which issues of small arms are lawfully made, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, provided the total value of the stores so issued to the educational institutions does not exceed $30,000;" and, in line 12, before the word "thousand," to insert "and thirty," so as to make the clause read:

Small-arms target practice: Ammunition, targets, and other accessories for small-arms and machine-gun target practice and instruction; marksmen's medals, prize arms, and insignia for all arms of the service; and ammunition, targets, target material, and other accessories may be issued for small-arms target practice and instruction at the educational institutions and state soldiers and sailors' orphans homes, to which issues of small arms are lawfully made, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, provided the total value of the stores so issued to the educational institutions does not exceed $30,000, $1,330,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "nine," so as to make the clause read:

National trophy and medals for rifle contests: That for the purpose of furnishing a national trophy and medals and other prizes to be provided and contested for annually, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, said contest to be open to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the National Guard or organized militia of the several States, Territories, and of the District of Columbia, and for the cost of the trophy, prizes, and medals herein provided for, and for the promotion of rifle practice, the sum of $9,000, to be expended for the purposes hereinbefore prescribed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the unexpended balance of the sum of $165,000 appropriated for range finders and other instruments for fire control in field batteries in the act approved May 11, 1908, entitled "An act making appropriation for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909," shall be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 6, after the word "equipments," to insert "to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911," so as to make the clause read:

Automatic rifles: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of automatic rifles, including their sights and equipments, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 9, to insert:

Ordnance contracts: Hereafter whenever contracts which are not to be performed within sixty days are made on behalf of the Government by the Chief of Ordnance, or by officers under him authorized to make them, and are in excess of $500 in amount, such contracts shall be reduced to writing and signed by the contracting parties with their names at the end thereof. In all other cases contracts shall be prepared under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to have some explanation of the amendment. I will withhold a point of order until I hear it explained.

Mr. WARREN. The Ordnance Department have asked some relief in a situation where, it seems to me, they ought to be afforded relief. Under the statutes all purchases must first be advertised for and bids must be submitted, and then a contract, in duplicate or triplicate, must be signed by contracting parties and by bondsmen, and so forth. It is found that in matters of small purchases of $3 or $4 or $15, or sometimes as high as $100 each, after the bids are submitted the bidders refuse to enter into the trouble and "red tape" of a contract and give bond for so small an amount.

Mr. KEAN. That is not the point I am asking the Senator about. It is in regard to the appropriation of the money at the bottom of page 52, in line 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 19, after the word "stores," to insert "excepting firearms and ammunition," so as to make the clause read:

Sales of ordnance stores, excepting firearms and ammunition, are authorized to civilian employees of the army and to The American National Red Cross under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 22, to insert:

Hereafter whenever pressing obligations are required to be paid by a disbursing officer of the Ordnance Department and there is an insufficient balance to his official credit under the proper appropriation or appropriations for the purpose, he is authorized to make payment from the total available balance to his official credit, provided sufficient funds under the proper appropriation or appropriations have been allotted by the Chief of Ordnance for the expenditure. When such disbursements are made the accounts of the disbursing officer shall show the charging of the proper appropriations, the balances under which will be adjusted by the disbursing officer on receipt of funds or by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. WARREN. That, Mr. President, is to fix the different allotments of funds so that one can borrow from the other temporarily, practically, but not so fully, as is done in the pay department. For instance, there may be allotted for one class of powder a certain amount of money and for another class a certain amount. Say the first allotment from the appropriation——

Mr. KEAN. I thought one of the things we were trying to prevent was taking money which had been appropriated for one purpose and expending it on another.

Mr. WARREN. We do not do that. It is simply that when an appropriation is made, we will say, for smokeless powder of $100,000, the first allotment to the ordnance officer may be $10,000, and if there should be another appropriation of $100,000 for black powder, of which he may have an allotment of $10,000, in expending the first $10,000 it might be possible for the first amount received to overrun a little, and he would have to wait for requisitions and for the action of the Treasury Department, sometimes for ten days or a month.

This provision permits him, where the money is appropriated and a part allotted and more is coming, to temporarily pay for one allotment from the amount for another.

I think it is in the interest of economy and in the interest of good management.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 10, to insert:

Hereafter officers serving by detail in the Ordnance Department under the acts of February 2, 1901, and June 25, 1906, shall take rank in their respective grades from the dates of their rank under their original detail in said grades.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 15, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to acquire title to the United States, by gift or donation, and not otherwise, of a strip of land lying on the southwest side of the roadway now under construction to the Salisbury National Cemetery for sidewalk purposes. And the sum of $1,600, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated for the completion of said roadway and sidewalks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 23, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey to the owners of premises which encroach upon the military reservation of Fort Marion, in the city of St. Augustine, Fla., all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the portions of the reservation which have been occupied by them, under license or claim of title, upon the payment by said owners of such sums of money as the Secretary of War, upon consideration of all the circumstances, shall determine proper to be paid for the said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 7, to insert:

For the construction of a public road, under the supervision of the Secretary of War, from a point near the southern end of the new Highway Bridge across the Potomac River to a convenient point on or near the southern boundary line of the Arlington Reservation and following said boundary line as near as practicable to the old county road which passes centrally through the Arlington Reservation; thence along said road, improving and repairing it, to the northern boundary of said reservation; said road shall not be less than 40 feet wide and shall be macadamized to a width of not less than 24 feet, $44,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the foregoing, of which sum not exceeding the sum of $5,000 may be expended for the acquisition of additional land for right of way.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to explain the necessity for making that expenditure at this time. I have been able to read the bill only as it was being considered. It seemed to me that I noticed other places where considerable money is to be expended in building roads. This road from the bridge to Arlington is desirable and under some circumstances would be very proper; but with the growing deficiency of the Treasury, with the probability that the income of the Government will be decreased very much the next year, I would ask the chairman to make some statement showing the necessity for that and other like appropriations in the bill at this time.

Mr. WARREN. This particular road is asked for by the War Department on account of the bad roads and bad communications we now have between the national capital and the national cemetery and Fort Myer. This is to build a new road direct from the Highway Bridge, which has been constructed lately, to Arlington Cemetery and the military post, avoiding the high grades and avoiding other inconveniences that surround the old road.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I interrupt the Senator? It has been some little time since I visited Arlington by the road to which he refers as the old road, but my recollection is that the road from Georgetown to Arlington is a very excellent roadway.

Mr. WARREN. The road is passable, as the Senator says.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It seems to me it is much more than passable. Is it not a good macadam road all the way?

Mr. WARREN. No; it is not a good macadam road all the way. The old road, the present communication between those two points, is over the route that goes out from Georgetown, and it is not a good macadamized road. I think that perhaps the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] can state the condition of the road.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would be very glad to hear from the Senator from Virginia. He will know the situation exactly.

Mr. MARTIN. The only approach to the national cemetery and Fort Myer is a very circuitous one. You have to go through Georgetown and over the Aqueduct Bridge and over a road that is by no means a good one. This road has been time and again recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the present road? Is it not a macadam road all the way?

Mr. MARTIN. It is not. I have not traveled over it recently, but——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My recollection is that it is a good macadam road. It has been some time since I passed over it. I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. MARTIN. I am sure it was not macadamized. A good part of the way the grade is very bad, and the report of the Secretary of War in relation to this very provision is that the road is bad.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no doubt, if the Senator will permit me, that it would be very desirable to have a better road there; but we have gotten along for many years without it, and I wish to know whether that is an indication of many of the appropriations in this bill. I want to get some definite statement which would be something of a guide to me to form a conclusion as to whether the bill has been increased quite largely for such reasons.

Mr. MARTIN. I think that if the Senator will examine this matter he will find the reasons are urgent, both as a military road and as a proper approach to the national cemetery. Few people come to Washington who do not take an interest in Arlington. The distinguished soldiers of the country who are interred there naturally interest all visitors to the national capital. It does seem to me it is as little as this Government can do to afford a decent approach to such a cemetery as there is at Arlington. The Secretary of War recommended it, not only on that account, but as a military road leading to a military post. Now we have to go several miles out of the way and to go over a bad road. The matter has been thoroughly investigated by the War Department. Surveys have been made and estimates of the cost have been made.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the estimate, if the Senator will please state it?

Mr. MARTIN. Other Senators are more familiar with the matter. I would not like to make a statement under the circumstances; I might not be accurate. I have driven over the road many times and would not be willing to make a statement of the distance; but my impression is that you have to go to Georgetown. That is a circuitous route, whereas you go by the proposed route from the new Highway Bridge and have a short, direct, and practicable road to the national cemetery and to the military post. It saves a great deal of time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator state how much shorter the route that is proposed here would be?

Mr. MARTIN. I might be inaccurate about it. Perhaps a couple of miles. I hesitate to make a statement. Other Senators are more familiar with the road. Perhaps the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] can state how much shorter it is. I know he remarked in the committee meeting the other day that he has ridden over it within a month and knows it is of urgent importance. He may know more about the distance than I do.

Mr. FORAKER. Of course, there is a road that can be easily traveled, that is reached by crossing the Aqueduct Bridge, but that is very inconvenient for everybody in this part of the city. The road from the new bridge, which this road is designed to be an improvement of, is a very bad road. I undertook to go over it about a year ago, but I found it so difficult to travel that I never tried to pass to Arlington that way again. I think that this is a very appropriate improvement to make, and I was glad to favor it in committee, because I think there is but one Arlington in the United States, and that there ought to be a suitable approach to that cemetery, not only from the Georgetown point of approach, but also from this other equally important point of approach.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, can the Senator from Ohio inform me how much saving in distance it will be?

Mr. FORAKER. I can not tell. I never studied the matter in any way until it came up in committee, but I thought that it would be a very appropriate improvement to make, and I know, without stopping to make any calculations, that for everybody in the lower part of the city it would be a saving, I should think, of 5 or 6 miles in going to Arlington—at least that much. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the department has estimated for this road, and it is much shorter, without giving the exact number of feet or miles or fractions of miles that would be saved. I will ask at this point to insert the report made in the other House on this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (No. 1207) to accompany H. R. 18795.

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18795) authorizing the Secretary of War to have constructed a direct road leading from the southern end of the new highway bridge across the Potomac River to the national cemetery at Arlington and Fort Myer, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

After the word road, in line 4, page 2 of the bill, add the words "from the new highway bridge to the Arlington Reservation."

This proposed highway has been surveyed by the War Department, and the Quartermaster-General, in his annual report for 1906, page 24, uses the following language:

"More direct route to Arlington National Cemetery.—The department is now engaged in extensively enlarging and beautifying this national cemetery, and is interested in having it made as directly accessible as possible for funeral processions and to visitors at Washington desiring to go there, and also that the route be through inviting surroundings. At present approach to the cemetery from this city is by circuitous route in many ways objectionable, through unattractive localities, and numbers of persons are deterred from visiting it on this account."

The same officer, in his annual report for 1907, reiterated the same language and says further, as follows:

"Road from the new Highway Bridge to Arlington.—With a view to securing a shorter, more convenient, and attractive route to the Arlington National Cemetery, the construction of a new road from the Virginia end of the bridge to the government reservation has been considered, surveys made, and cost estimated. This route would avoid the long trip through Georgetown and across the Aqueduct Bridge, be shorter and more pleasant in every way, and its construction is recommended."

The chief reasons why this road should be established by the Government are as follows:

Because the present public road from the south end of the new Highway Bridge to Arlington is long and circuitous, running through the brickyards and by the abattoir, and is a narrow, ordinary country road over which the United States Government has no jurisdiction whatever. This county road is always crowded with brick wagons, meat wagons, and wagons bringing in country produce of all kinds, often loaded with hay, taking up the entire roadway; and this road itself in winter is deep in mud, and in summer overhung with an almost perpetual cloud of brick and brown dust, ruinous to clothing and comfort and filling the nostrils, ears, and eyes with unhealthy and filthy dust; and besides this the present road for 300 feet skirts the steam railroad track and the bed of the electric car line, which runs parallel for a part of the way along a curve and at a point where another steam railroad, the Pennsylvania Railroad, crosses the Southern Railway, thus making the route extremely dangerous for all vehicles and teams.

These disadvantages render the present route impracticable for any use by the United States Government in connection with the Arlington Reservation—either the cemetery, or the experimental farm, or the military post thereon.

The new road contemplated by the bill would open a direct route to the southeast corner of the Arlington estate, and, following the southern boundary of said property, lead directly through the experimental garden farm of the Government and directly to the cemetery and the military post. And, again, the construction of this new road as designed by the bill would place it at a considerable distance north of the brickyards and abattoir and north of the present country road, above referred to, and free from all the disadvantages and drawbacks as herein indicated.

The proposed road would form a splendid and beautiful driveway, in connection with the Highway Bridge, from the Agricultural and War Departments in Washington to the experimental garden farm and national cemetery and military post on the Arlington Reservation, consisting of 1,175 acres, now owned and controlled by the United States Government through the Agricultural and War Departments.

Should the Aqueduct Bridge (now old and antiquated and weak and dilapidated), which is some 3 miles distant up the river, become inoperative for the transmission of the United States troops or ordnance or military escorts from Fort Myer and Arlington, the new Highway Bridge would furnish the only quick and direct route to get to the National Capital; and this proposed road, in case of riot or war or other emergency, would be a public necessity.

In thus constructing this proposed road to connect with the driveway across the Aqueduct Bridge, it would furnish a complete link to a beautiful and useful circular boulevard around the Arlington Reservation and back into Washington City.

It would open up to public view and notice and bring into prominence the improvements on the Arlington estate, the experimental garden farm, and the beautifying of the western part of the city of Washington along the Potomac by the National Government.

Mr. WARREN. As the department states, there are 1,175 acres in the Arlington Cemetery and the military post. This road would make a direct route of perhaps two-thirds the distance, and would go over the new Highway Bridge and across grounds owned by the Agricultural Department, and across grounds of the post and cemetery. It would be better for freight, better for moving troops, and better, as remarked in the statement from the department, for carriage driving, funeral processions, and so forth, that may go over it, not to mention the fact that it would become one of the most beautiful drives near Washington.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator from Wyoming before he takes his seat can do so, I would be glad to have him state how much is appropriated altogether in this bill for the construction of roads in connection with military posts.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this and another appropriation of a few hundred dollars to complete a road are about the only sums, except the appropriation for Alaska, that are specified in addition to the regular annual appropriation for the Quartermaster's Department under the heading, "Roads, walks, wharves, and drainage." We have added $350,000 for the construction of roads in Alaska, such construction to be under the direction of the War Department, and through the commission which was formed some years ago for that purpose, and under which we have expended perhaps $600,000 already. The $350,000 is expected to complete the work and connect all of our posts, telegraph stations, and other military points throughout Alaska. The provision was inserted in the House; it was a part of the original bill, but under the rules of the House it went out on a point of order upon some Member making the point. We have inserted it here as it was estimated for, and the papers we have describe very fully this appropriation of $350,000.

Then there is $44,000 for the Washington-Arlington road, and I think sixteen hundred dollars besides to complete an entrance to a national cemetery. Those are all the specific appropriations for roads, I think.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator from Wyoming repeat the statement with respect to the completion of the Alaskan roads? I mean especially whether this appropriation will complete the road building there so that nothing further will be required to connect the military posts.

Mr. WARREN. Major Richardson, who has charge of the work, has stated to the department, and the department states in its estimate, that it is believed the sum estimated will complete the work. Of course, in an undertaking of that kind and in the expenditure of that much money in a distant country, we are not able to say whether it will entirely complete it or not; but so far the statements made by that commission and by Major Richardson, in charge, have been fully justified, and those who have considered the subject have confidence that, unless some unforeseen difficulties are encountered, this $350,000 will complete the roads. Of course, we are asked——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WARREN. I will yield if the Senator will let me finish one statement.

We are asked at present to appropriate $1,000,000 for Alaskan roads. Boards of trade and chambers of commerce in that northwestern country, not only in Alaska, but in the States of Washington and Oregon, have asked us to appropriate a million dollars for building roads in Alaska. They ask it on the ground that they have no state or territorial government, and are themselves unable to provide for road facilities. They have no sufficient form of government, even if they had the money to invest in that way.

They have asked the Government to do the work and bear the expense because the land belongs to the Government and the development is entirely in the interest of the Government of the United States; but we have considered that in this bill we had no right to expend further than the needs of the army and the necessities of the military establishment require. We believe that this sum, added to the amounts that have heretofore been appropriated—I should say, without looking, we have perhaps expended $600,000—will complete that road which extends all the way around, connecting all the posts in Alaska, and following the line of our military telegraph and postal routes in that district.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator in his provision use the words "for completion?"

Mr. WARREN. We do not.

Mr. HALE. Well, then, I will venture to warn the Senator that, unless he uses those words in the appropriation, he will be very certain next year to be urged to make another appropriation for as much as this.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say, in connection with that, that we were asked by a member of the committee to appropriate a certain sum for the survey of other roads, and asked to appropriate a million dollars for roads; but it was insisted in the committee that this would complete the project of the roads, and that was understood to be the end of it. I want to say for one that I shall never agree to appropriate any more money for building roads in Alaska unless some unforeseen emergency should arise.

Mr. HALE. Then, why not put in the words "for completion?"

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it would be a good thing to put those words in.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from Wyoming had better add those words.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to the insertion of those words.

I have here a letter from the Secretary of War——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I was going to suggest to the Senator having the bill in charge that I do not believe these roads can be completed for that amount of money, and I do not think the words suggested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] ought to be inserted. I think this is a perfectly legitimate appropriation. I think it ought to be made. I think these roads ought to be built, and I think that there ought to be appropriated as much money as may be necessary to connect all the forts or the military reservations of that country. It is very difficult to get from one place to another.

Mr. OVERMAN. Unless we do put in those words, I suggest there will be a demand for another $350,000.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to say that I have been memorialized by nearly every chamber of commerce in my State asking me to vote a million dollars for this purpose. They are selling goods; they have business there; and they seem to be very greatly interested in it. I think that $350,000 are enough for this year, and I think next year you will, perhaps, have to appropriate more.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood when we first appropriated for these roads they were to cost something like $350,000, but that has been spent, and now there is another $350,000 to be appropriated. Unless we have some language like that which has been suggested there will be another $350,000 asked for. This will go on until we have macadamized roads all over Alaska. North Carolina would also like to have a few macadamized roads.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is, I think, mistaken. I never heard any representation that $350,000 would entirely build and complete the Alaskan roads.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not think there has been any misrepresentation about it by anybody. There has not been so far as I am aware. I think it is a perfectly appropriate use to make of the public funds in that country, taking the situation into account. Alaska is a great way from here, but it is a great country.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. FORAKER. In a moment, if the Senator please. Great results have come to us from Alaska; and I do not think we ought to hesitate to do whatever may be necessary to enable us to develop it in a way in which it ought to be developed, so far as this Government has a duty to perform.

Mr. WARREN. In relation to that, the chairman of the committee stated that he would be willing to accept an amendment of that kind for two reasons: First, the estimate is made with confidence on the part of the officials of the War Department that they will be able to complete the work; and, second, all Senators know that, whatever language we may put in the bill, it will not necessarily close the matter, and that if more money is needed in Alaska at some other time to complete these roads we will have to appropriate it.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President, I was merely going to suggest to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] or the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], which is practically the same thing, that the exigencies of the service in the future might require the establishment of a new military post; and if so, it might be necessary then to connect that new post or posts with other roads, so that I do not think we ought to take any action here that would positively estop us in the future from providing for necessary military contingencies.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator would prefer to wait until I have read a letter from the Secretary of War upon this subject, which was written since the estimate was made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 8, 1909.

SIR: On page 196 in the Book of Estimates for 1910 will be found an item of $350,000 for continuing the construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails in Alaska. The necessity for this amount is fully explained in the footnote by Maj. Wilds P. Richardson, president board of road commissioners for Alaska, and it will enable the board to complete the system of military and post roads according to the plan upon which they have been engaged during the past three years, so far as conditions at present justify.

This subject-matter was fully considered by the House Committee on Military Affairs, and the provision for this amount was included in the army appropriation bill; but in consideration of the measure, this item was stricken out on a point of order in the House of Representatives.

These roads have a distinct military value, as affording a means of communication between the open ports of the coast and the interior of Alaska and an aid to the maintenance of the military telegraph lines, as well as being available for the transportation of the mails. They afford the only routes by which troops could be moved in winter in certain sections of the interior in the event of there being a call for aid in the enforcement of the civil law in disturbed mining districts. Such a condition existed for some weeks about a year ago in the town of Fairbanks, due to a strike, and troops at Fort Gibbon were under orders to proceed to that town. The fact that they could have been moved within a very short time over one of these roads probably had the effect of preventing more serious trouble and of rendering the actual movement of troops unnecessary.

To carry on work economically in Alaska it is necessary to make certain arrangements many months in advance, and already quantities of forage, staple food supplies, tools, and other equipment have been purchased and are now being shipped and distributed along the winter road at various places where it is intended to carry on work next summer, and a failure to secure the appropriation would be a distinct loss to the Government. As a portion of the work in contemplation must be done during the winter season, and it is desired for considerations of economy to make the work continuous through the next winter and following summer, if found necessary, the appropriation is asked to run two years, or to the end of the fiscal year 1911.

As appears above, the appropriation asked for is to enable the department to continue and substantially complete work which has been in progress for several years, and it is earnestly hoped that the amount asked for will be appropriated, and to that end I request that you will take the matter up with the Senate Military Committee with a view to restoring this provision to the bill. Major Richardson is on temporary duty at the department, and I shall be glad to have him appear before your committee, if desired, to give any further explanation of the bill your committee may wish to have.

Very respectfully,

LUKE E. WRIGHT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have here an estimate which definitely states what points are to be connected, and I ask unanimous consent that it be read from the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NOTE.—The sum estimated is based upon the work proposed on the following routes, amounting practically to their completion:

Valdez-Fairbanks route, with improvement of the winter mail trail from Fairbanks to the Seward Peninsula.

Fort Seward-Chilkat road.

Fort Egbert-Fortymile route.

Fort Gibbon mail trail to the Koyukuk, and for the cutting of a winter mail trail from the head of Cook Inlet to the Yukon, connecting for St. Michael, Fort Davis, and Nome on the Seward Peninsula.

The larger part of the amount estimated is intended to be expended on the road from Fort Liscum and Valdez to Fairbanks, making it available for summer travel. This is the most important line of overland travel and communication in the Territory, connecting the town of Valdez, the most northerly open port in southern Alaska, with Fairbanks, the head of navigation on the Tanana River, except for small, light-draft steamboats. It follows the line of the military telegraph, and over it are transported in winter all the mails for the interior, except for Eagle and Fortymile, as well as for western Alaska and the Seward Peninsula.

Road houses are located along the entire route at intervals of 12 to 20 miles, which furnish convenient and comfortable stopping places for travelers. The owners of these road houses have in most instances made homestead entries and are beginning to cultivate gardens and fields. An abundance of fresh vegetables of excellent quality was found at nearly every stopping place. These places will become small centers of settlement and supply, from which people will explore and prospect adjacent country.

This route is of the highest importance in the development of the Territory, and the time is believed to have arrived when the entire distance should be improved so as to permit ordinary wheeled traffic during the summer season. By this it is not meant a road over which heavy tonnage could be hauled, which would cost a great deal of money and still not be as good as the frozen road of winter, but one over which buckboards and wagons with small outfits could readily pass and over which the mails could be transported to advantage. Many persons traveled the route during the past season, both on foot and horseback, and three droves of cattle were taken from Valdez to Fairbanks, arriving in excellent condition. (W. P. Richardson, major, Thirteenth Infantry, president Board of Road Commissioners for Alaska.)

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say a few words in reference to this appropriation. To my mind it is one of the most important and most needful appropriations contained in this bill. The conditions in Alaska are unique. It is a country of 590,000 square miles. Practically, there are no railroads there. There are two little stub roads in the Territory, but there are no wagon roads except those that have been built by the Government.

Alaska has no system of government. There is no county government, and no government of any kind, except through the district judges. Alaska constitutes but one judicial district, consisting of three divisions, with a judge in each division. That judge appoints commissioners in his district. Those commissioners are ex officio court commissioners, ex officio judges of probate, ex officio recorders, ex officio notaries public, ex officio coroners, and ex officio justices of the peace. The whole government is through that system and that method. They have no officials there through whom they can levy and collect taxes to build roads.

Four or five years ago, I think, Congress passed an act providing that certain taxes, in the form of occupation taxes, being paid by the people of Alaska outside of the incorporated towns should be set aside as a special fund for the benefit of the people of Alaska to aid them in building roads and trails. That law provided for the appointment of an army commission, consisting of three army officers, one an engineer officer, who were to have charge of the matter of constructing these roads. It is this commission that is building the roads referred to in this appropriation bill.

It is really a very important matter. If you will glance at a map of the country, you will find that on the south side is Valdez, on the Gulf of Alaska. That town can be approached at all times during the winter season by navigation. But across the country in the interior, on the great Yukon River, is a country that can not be reached at all during the winter, except by going distances of between three and four hundred miles over the country. We have a military station at Valdez, on the Pacific; we have a military station at the mouth of the Tanana River, on the Yukon, called "Fort Gibbon;" and we have another military station on the upper Yukon, just across the boundary line from British territory, called "Fort Egbert." These places can only be reached in winter by means of land transportation either by a dog trail, a horse trail, or by sleds, and to some extent in summer by wagon roads.

The commission has been at work for the last four years in building roads. A portion of the roads they have built are wagon roads that can be utilized in the summer. A large part of the roads are what are called "winter roads," running over muskegs and swamps, which the Government has cleared out. Over these lines all the mail and supplies for the military stations in the interior, especially for Fort Egbert, Fort Gibbon, and the fort at Nome, have to be carried.

Besides that, we have a military telegraph line along this route to all these posts, and all the supplies, all the food, and everything that is needed for the men operating and having charge of that military telegraph must pass over these lines.

Unless the Government takes up this task and carries it on as it has been doing for three or four years, the people of Alaska will be utterly helpless.

I ask Senators to remember that Alaska is contributing immensely to the resources of this Government. We derive a good deal from the salmon fisheries; we derive a good deal from the fur seal fisheries; and the gold supply of Alaska is immense. If we take into account everything that Alaska furnishes and produces for our country, this appropriation is only a small contribution. The people there have nothing with which to help themselves, except through the machinery provided by the Federal Government.

I take it that this appropriation will finish the road from Valdez, by way of Fairbanks and Fort Gibbon, and will also make a collateral trail over the Fortymile country to Fort Egbert, on the Yukon. I can conceive that in the future it will be necessary to connect and make a road over to the fort at Nome, on Seward Peninsula, but that will not be for some time.

The chairman of the committee has expressed an inclination to limit this appropriation by inserting the words "for the completion of the work." While he has intimated that this appropriation will finish the work, I do not think it will complete all that the Government ought to do in the way of building military and post roads in Alaska. However, as the Senator has said, future Congresses can remedy that evil; but I hope the Senator will treat Alaska liberally and fairly, because that country is yielding us more revenues and resources than most of us imagined would ever be possible when we acquired that country.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not advised as to the condition of what is known as the "Alaska fund." Has the Senator any information as to what that fund produces?

Mr. NELSON. I can not give the exact figures. My impression is that that fund now produces somewhere around $125,000 to $150,000 a year. I want to tell you that that fund was crippled some years ago. As the law originally stood, it gave to that fund all money derived from what are called "occupation taxes."

Mr. HEYBURN. And liquor licenses.

Mr. NELSON. Liquor licenses and trade licenses; but included in that was a tax upon the salmon canneries, which amounted to a great deal. A year or two after we passed that law a bill amending the fisheries law was put through by which the fish companies, instead of paying their taxes as they were required to do under the law, can turn in certificates for fish fry that they put in there. Through that legislation the fund was really deprived of about $50,000 income a year.

Mr. HEYBURN. So the Senator thinks the fund is now about $100,000 a year?

Mr. NELSON. I say about a hundred thousand. I can not give the exact figures. The fund is about $125,000, but certainly not exceeding $150,000 a year.

Mr. HEYBURN. And I understand this appropriation is merely to reimburse or rather to reenforce that fund.

Mr. NELSON. To reenforce that fund. Senators must remember that in Alaska they can only work from three to four months in a year, and that everything costs three to four times what it does in any of the other States or Territories of the Union. It is a very expensive place in which to live. What you can do in Idaho for $5 will inevitably cost you in Alaska $15. So, while this amount may seem large to Senators, when you consider the expensive character of the work and the fact that the country is frozen and tied up with snow eight or nine months in the year, you can see the difficulties that prevail there, and you can see that the same amount of money does not go so far there as it does in other parts of the country.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. If my recollection is correct, the Senator came before the committee at a previous session with Mr. Richardson, who is the engineer. We made at that session, I think, an appropriation of $150,000. My recollection is that it was estimated that it would take $150,000 to build these roads. We gave that amount. Since that time we have been making appropriations every year, and now it has reached $375,000. There ought to be some stop to it. My recollection is that when the Senator came before us we agreed to appropriate $150,000—all that was asked. Now they have started on a great scheme of roads, and unless we put in the bill the limitation suggested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] there is no telling where we are going to end.

Mr. NELSON. That was for a trail from Eagle to Fort Egbert, on the Yukon.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a part of the same scheme.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; that place is hundreds of miles away from Fort Gibbon, at the mouth of the Tanana River, and that has become a most important point, because on the way of that post route is the leading town in Alaska, the leading mining camp of Fairbanks.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was very much impressed by what the Senator said. I think he knows more about Alaska than anybody here. He knows the needs of Alaska. I remember that the sum I mentioned was then advocated for road purposes—I do not say for what particular road—but since that time we have been making additions and they have been growing greater, until they have now reached $375,000. The Senator told us in the committee that the sum appropriated was sufficient to complete the roads, and the chairman says it is sufficient. Why not put the suggested limitation in the bill?

Mr. NELSON. Alaska is such a big country that building a piece of road in one direction can not satisfy the wants of all that immense domain.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no doubt, if we are going to satisfy the people out there, we shall have to appropriate much more.

Mr. NELSON. The only approachable port of Alaska in the winter season in our territory is at Valdez, on the south side. From there up to Fort Egbert, on the Yukon River, is a distance of nearly 400 miles. A part of that distance, about half of it, can be on the same route as the route from Valdez, by way of Fairbanks, to Fort Gibbon. Fort Gibbon is a military post on the Yukon River, at the mouth of the Tanana River, and on that river, at the head of navigation, is Fairbanks, 200 miles above. They have built from Valdez over toward Fairbanks and Fort Gibbon.

A part of it is a summer wagon road; a large share of it is a winter road; and they intend to complete it so as to be in direct communication with that country.

The only way they can send their mails to the interior points and to the forts is over this route, and every time we improve the road we lessen the expenses of the Federal Government in carrying the mails into that country. I can not give the exact figures, but by means of the roads we have been building within the last four or five years we have saved thousands of dollars in the matter of the transportation of the mails.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the committee inserted this item as a matter of military necessity and economy, and that it incidentally promotes the development of Alaska is a pleasant thing to contemplate. But I contend for military purposes alone we need this road. We can not carry the supplies to our posts, thousands of miles, upon the backs of animals—pack mules, and so forth—without very great expense. By building these roads we transport our supplies in the season of the year when we can transport them by wheel at small cost; we encourage settlement; and, as Major Richardson has stated, it has caused settlers to locate at points 15 or 20 miles apart along the road, where they will raise vegetables and grain and other supplies which can be furnished to the army at slight cost, and which otherwise they would have to do without entirely or bring from distant places at great cost.

We find that Alaska has always been a paying investment. We paid $7,000,000 for it, and have reaped many times that in return. We have put up a cable and telegraph line, and the receipts from commercial business are such that we have paid for that line and are extending it continually with the proceeds of its earnings, and therefore the Government has nothing to pay and no expense whatever for its own business over the telegraph, telephone, and cable lines. This road will earn, or save, which is the same, for the Government, in reduced transportation charges and reduced subsistence and other charges, more money than we will expend on it altogether.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this appropriation is not entirely for military roads. The original purpose of the act of May 14, 1906, was far more comprehensive than that of building military wagon roads. The greatest purpose served in Alaska is the construction of wagon roads other than military roads, and the purpose of Congress in the enactment of that law was to provide a fund to do that which in the country generally is done by taxation, because there was no property appropriate to be taxed for the purpose of building roads, maintaining schools, and such things; and it would be a mistaken impression to send out that it is because of military necessity that we make this appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. It is true that in creating the commission to build roads we had other purposes in view, but I maintain that with our posts in that country it is necessary to have roads connecting them, and therefore it is incumbent upon the Government to construct roads, since the Government, through its military forces, is the beneficiary of the roads to a greater extent—far more—than all the others put together.

Mr. HEYBURN. But it was enumerated in the original act that the roads should be constructed to mining camps, settlements, and to open up industries and interests not of a military character; and in making this appropriation, if it were to be gathered from reading the proceedings when the bill was under consideration, that this was an appropriation for military purposes, it might have some weight in determining the character of the expenditure. The people who are interested in Alaska must have roads—wagon roads, trails—and unless the Government makes that property available for taxation the Government must build the roads if the people are to have them.

Now, to avoid the necessity of making yearly appropriations for this class of work, Congress wisely provided that the taxes collected from saloon licenses, outside of incorporated cities, and from business licenses should constitute a permanent fund for that purpose. It can not be diverted.

Mr. WARREN. It was for other purposes as well—for the care of the insane, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Three purposes—25 per cent for schools, 5 per cent for the insane, and the balance for the building of roads.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say, if the Senator will allow me, that with that fund, distinct from the other, the road commission has been building side trails out to the mining camps from the main trails.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and they will continue from year to year, so long as that act of Congress remains unrepealed, to have this fund, a permanent fund practically, which takes the place of a road tax in a measure. That is wise legislation, because there are no receipts from taxation, except from occupation and licenses, and we must provide for those things.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I presume the Senator and other Senators have noticed that this sum is an appropriation for two years. It is available for a period extending over two years, and is to be expended under supervision of the commission to which the Senator refers.

Mr. HEYBURN. And for the purposes——

Mr. WARREN. And for the purposes——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mentioned in the existing law. That is proper, and I was only speaking in support of this measure, and making the suggestions which I have made, in order that the impression might not go out that we were here initiating a system of expenditure for military roads in Alaska. We are doing nothing of the kind. There is nothing in this amendment which provides that the money shall be used for the construction of military roads.

Mr. WARREN. It states that it shall be—

For the construction and maintenance of military and post-roads, bridges, and trails in the district of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the board of road commissioners described in section 2 of an act entitled, etc.

Mr. HEYBURN. Which is merely stating that it shall reenforce the existing road fund in Alaska.

Mr. WARREN. But it includes, as I said before, the construction of military and post roads.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and so does the original act.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. It simply reinforces that fund, except as to the schools and insane. In the original act it was provided that the insane and the schools should share in the proceeds, but this merely reinforces the fund for road building in that country, which is most important.

The tonnage over the road from Valdez to Fairbanks would justify the construction of a high-grade railroad. But it is an expensive proposition and not very desirable because of what you may call "dead country" between the productive sections of it. They will probably never be able to raise the money, at least until after these wagon roads shall have been built and the country developed, to build those railroads by private enterprise. But just so soon as this wagon-road system is developed to an extent that will enable those people to demonstrate the profitable income to be derived from the building of railroads, the railroads will come, and these wagon roads will not be so necessary then. But you can not obtain the money to build railroads until you have developed the country by a system of wagon roads as a pioneer means of exploiting the country.

I make these suggestions that the broad scope and character of this enterprise may be understood, and that it may not go out that it is merely in the interest of building military roads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 22, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept any or all of the land embraced in sections 13, 14, and 15, in township 2 north, range 12 west of the Indian meridian, State of Oklahoma, which may be donated and duly conveyed to the United States by the city of Lawton, Okla., for the use of the Government as a part of the Fort Sill Military Reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 4, to insert:

For the acquiring of water rights and necessary lands therewith connected for a permanent water supply for Fort William Henry Harrison, in Montana, the amount of $20,000 appropriated therefor by the act approved May 11, 1908, entitled "An act making appropriation for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909," is hereby made available, and $40,000 additional, or so much thereof as may be necessary for said purposes, including the acquiring of water rights and lands for intakes and right of way for pipe lines from such intakes to said fort, is hereby provided, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to acquire such rights and lands by purchase or by condemnation proceedings.

Mr. WARREN. The committee offers as an amendment, in line 12, after the word "hereby," to insert "reappropriated and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. BACON. I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk. I will state that I do not indicate the point in the bill at which it is added. That can be arranged afterwards. I had to describe the former bill, because it is not in sections, as it is in the revised code; but all that can be changed if necessary. I simply wish to use language which will indicate now the law sought to be amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the act approved May 11, 1908, for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, in so far as it relates to the payment of six months' pay to the widow of an officer or enlisted man, etc., be amended as follows: Strike out the words "contracted in the line of duty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not the result of his own misconduct."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will send to the desk the section as it will appear as amended, and then I wish to say a word or two.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest that the Senator have the section read as it is now and as it will read if amended.

Mr. BACON. I will do that. The suggestion of the Senator is correct.

At the last session of Congress, when the army bill was before the Senate, there was added a section which reads as follows:

That hereafter immediately upon official notification of the death from wounds or disease contracted in line of duty of any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the army, the Paymaster-General of the Army shall cause to be paid to the widow of such officer or enlisted man, or to any other person previously designated by him, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by such officer or enlisted man at the date of his death, less $75 in the case of an officer and $35 in the case of an enlisted man.

The amendment I offer is to strike out the words "contracted in the line of duty" and insert "not the result of his own misconduct," so that the section, if amended, will read:

That hereafter immediately upon official notification of the death from wounds or disease, not the result of his own misconduct, of any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the army, the Paymaster-General of the Army shall cause to be paid to the widow of such officer or enlisted man, or to any other person previously designated by him, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by such officer or enlisted man at the date of his death, less $75 in the case of an officer and $35 in the case of an enlisted man.

Mr. President, I wish to say this: I had the honor to offer the amendment to the last army bill which embodied the section as it is now found in the statute books as a part of the law. I used the words "contracted in the line of duty" not knowing that they would be construed in a technical sense and not knowing that those words were words which had previously been construed in that technical sense by the auditor's office, I think, and also by the Pension Bureau, and if there was in the use of such words the failure to express exactly what I intended or what I understood Congress to intend the fault was mine.

Now, as a result of that the War Department construes that language in the technical sense in such a way that if an officer or a man legally absent on furlough dies while on furlough, his widow and children are not entitled to the payment of six months' pay provided for in the law.

I have had prepared in the War Department, by an officer of the department, at my request, a statement of the facts as to the construction of the War Department. I will ask the Secretary to read it. I will state that the necessity for the amendment is, I think, disclosed by the matter which I have asked to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

A decision was rendered in the following case:

Capt. John K. Moore, Fifteenth Infantry, about to be ordered home from the Philippines, took a leave of absence and returned by way of Suez. His leave would have expired on October 24, 1908. He reached Fort Leavenworth, Kans., in August, and on August 23 consulted a doctor, and by his advice entered the post hospital at that post. On August 25 his case was diagnosed as typhoid fever, and he died September 8, 1908.

The War Department decided that the heirs of Captain Moore were not entitled to the benefits of the act, as follows:

"It is established that Captain Moore did not contract the disease at Fort Leavenworth, and it is the view of the Surgeon-General that it was contracted at some date, not precisely ascertainable, between July 9 and August 15, 1908. Between those dates Captain Moore occupied the status of leave of absence; he was traveling between the Philippine Islands and the United States, but not traveling on public business, the journey having been undertaken while he was enjoying the indulgence of a leave of absence.

"The law and regulations contemplate in behalf of commissioned officers a status of duty and a status of leave of absence. Each of these is well defined, each is independent of the other, and there is no common ground between them which may lawfully be occupied by an officer of the army under the ordinary conditions of service.

"The allowance conferred upon the widows of deceased officers and enlisted men in the act of May 11, 1908 (35 Stats., 108), is conditioned and made to depend upon the fact that the disability to which the death of the officer or soldier is attributed was incurred in the line of duty.

"As it clearly appears from the papers in reference that the disability in Captain Moore's case arose while he was on leave of absence, it is the opinion of this office that the act of May 11, 1908, has no application to his case, and that his widow is not entitled to the benefits thereby conferred."

Mr. BACON. That is the end of the quotation from the decision. What I now ask the Secretary to read is a part of the paper which was sent to me by an officer of the War Department at my request.

The Secretary read as follows:

Several analogous cases of enlisted men can also be quoted.

This decision limits duty to actual presence with the troops or presence at the actual work on which the officer or soldier is detailed, and it but follows the construction put on duty by the Treasury Department and the Pension Bureau.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, while that particular instance is the one which brings the point before the Senate, it will be seen that a construction such as that which has been put upon the language by the War Department will limit to an extremely narrow scope the rights of the widow and children of an officer to the six months' pay. It is sought to limit it to a case where an officer or a man is strictly engaged in the discharge of duty. In other words, if he is off duty, his widow is not entitled to the pay.

I will say for myself that in offering the amendment which was afterwards embodied in the statute as a law, and in using the words "contracted in the line of duty," my idea was that any officer or man was entitled to the six months' pay who was occupying that legal status on the active list, if he was engaged in a way that was recognized by the law as the correct way for him to be occupied; and the fact that he is on leave of absence does not destroy his relation to the army.

Under the present construction, if an officer on active duty is stationed in the neighborhood of a city, for instance, and takes leave of absence for two hours to attend to any matter or to pay a social call, and if he happens in that time to be killed, without any misconduct on his part, his widow and children are deprived of the benefits of this provision of the law.

I will give another illustration. We have a number of officers who are on duty in Washington. If two of them go out to lunch, which I suppose would be considered as a necessary thing in the line of duty, and after lunch one of them starts back to his office and the other one goes to attend to some little matter of business, such as every man has to attend to daily for the comfort of his family, and to make proper provision for them, and both are killed, the officer who was returning to his office would be considered to be in the line of duty, and his widow and children would be entitled to this pay; and the heirs of the other officer, although he was simply engaged in what everybody has to do every day and would still be occupying the legal status of an officer, would be deprived of its benefits.

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. BACON. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask a question and then to make a statement.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator has taken too narrow a view, and if that view is entertained in the department I shall be glad to know it. Has the Senator in mind any instance where the department has refused to pay a claim of that kind under such circumstances as he has narrated, where a man has been away for an hour or two?

Mr. BACON. No; there is no case arising under those particular circumstances.

Mr. WARREN. As I understand—and I want the Senator to correct me if I am wrong—they have paid in all of the cases, except where an officer or a man was off on a time furlough, where it would be perhaps for a month or two.

Mr. BACON. Very well; I am glad that they have even gone to that extent; but I can not see why the reason would not apply to one as well as to the other. If there is to be a technical construction of it, an absence of six hours is just as much within the law as an absence of a month, if each one is a legal absence. The sole question to my mind is whether it is an absence recognized and permitted by the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, I will yield to him with pleasure.

When an officer is on leave of absence, he is none the less an officer; he is none the less subject to the rules and regulations of the department, and the Articles of War, so far as they are applicable. He has the same privileges; he has the same immunities. He is compelled to demean himself as an officer. He is in as legitimate a position when he is on leave of absence as he is when in line of battle fighting the enemy. There is not a particle of difference so far as the legal status is concerned.

I now yield with pleasure to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think the Senator's amendment is a very proper one. The same technical rule has applied to the matter of pensions. If a soldier was on furlough, it has been decided over and over again he was not in the line of duty.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. And so I apprehend it would apply to officers in the same way.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The illustration that the Senator from Georgia made, as the Senator from Wyoming suggested, probably would not apply, if he is simply an hour or two away from his office, the presumption being——

Mr. BACON. Suppose he was on special leave for a day?

Mr. GALLINGER. If that was construed to be a furlough, I think probably the widow would lose the pension.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the reason for this law was a very apparent one. I want to say that nothing has ever been done in regard to this matter which has been the result of any instigation or any suggestion by any officer of the army. At the time I introduced the amendment a year ago, no officer, no human being, had ever suggested the matter to me. It had been suggested to me by an occurrence which had come within my own personal knowledge and which affected me somewhat closely. But no officer had ever suggested it, and no human being had ever suggested it, and at the time I offered the amendment I had never stated to a human being that I intended to offer it. In the same way this amendment has not been suggested to me by anyone except by my own invitation. The fact of this construction being put upon it by the authorities of the War Department came to me altogether accidently. I want to trespass upon the time of the Senate simply far enough——

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator desires to interrupt me I will yield with pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I do not desire to interrupt the Senator. I thought the Senator was about to yield the floor, and I want to say a word.

Mr. BACON. I am nearly through. I want to show what was the reason why Congress thought it was proper to make this provision of law.

As I said, no officer ever suggested the matter to me. I make that statement for the purpose of adding that after the act was passed I had from a great many officers, both from personal interviews and by letter, an expression of their very great gratification at this act of generosity, or justice, I would call it, on the part of the Government, and they have narrated to me circumstances and facts which show the great necessity for this law.

I have had numbers of officers state to me that it was an ordinary occurrence when an officer died in the army for his brother officers to have to take up a collection to bury the officer in a style which was becoming to his office and station. While the Government provided $75, everybody, of course, knows that that will not pay the expenses of the funeral of an officer; and there was no provision made whatever for the maintenance and support, and even the temporary comfort, of an officer's widow. It was a great reproach, Mr. President, that this should be the case with those who were in the employment of the Government in a position peculiarly hazardous, and that if an officer of the army was killed in battle, the moment the bullet struck him and ended his life his pay stopped.

Mr. President, the great necessity for the legislation was due to the fact, as stated in the former debate, that officers are not in a position to accumulate any money. They are not in a position to make any income outside. In fact, it is an impossibility with them. Their pay is of a character, even with the increase which was given to them, to make it impossible for them to lay by any part of it for the necessities which would arise, and the necessity of their families upon the occasion of their death.

That reason is just as strong, just as urgent, and just as imperative upon the consideration of the Government when an officer dies while he is enjoying a legal furlough as it is if he dies while he is actually fighting the enemy.

I do hope that the amendment will commend itself to the Senate and that it will be adopted. I think it is nothing but an act of justice. It is a tremendous hardship upon an officer to say that he can only take a legitimate legal furlough at the risk, if he should die in the interval, that his family would not have even the means to bury him, to say nothing of the means to put bread in their mouths for the few months which would immediately elapse succeeding his death.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, when the Senator presented the amendment a year ago it will be remembered with what alacrity it was accepted by the chairman of the committee, and the evident sentiment of the Senate in favor of it.

Now, as to this action in the department and its ruling, I think under the law the department is compelled to rule that way; and since the first generous as well as just provision, as the Senator terms it, has been adopted, I am willing that the Senate shall vote upon the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have no complaint to make of the ruling of the department. We will assume that it was correct under the law. But I think the result is a hardship in many cases, and I do not know of any case better to illustrate the hardship than the one the Senator had read, which he showed me a moment ago, where an officer got a leave of absence to return from the Philippines, his regiment having been ordered home, and while on the way contracted typhoid fever, from which he died shortly after his arrival here. He was cut off from all the benefits provided. I think there ought to be an amendment to include the heirs of an officer who dies from disease contracted or injury sustained not through his own fault, or something of that nature.

Mr. BACON. That is the amendment which I offer, to strike out the words "contracted in the line of duty."

Mr. FORAKER. Then I hope the amendment will be adopted, because, while the department ruled correctly, I think, under the law, yet the hardship is illustrated by the case mentioned, and I hope we will correct it.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand the Senator from Georgia to propose to amend the general law?

Mr. BACON. It is to amend the law which was enacted last year by an amendment to the army appropriation bill.

Mr. KEAN. It is all right. I only wanted to know the way in which he proposed to do it. It seems to be a rather loose way to amend the law by just striking out words and inserting others.

Mr. BACON. The law is on the statute books and the law is now designated, and the amendment designates the words to be stricken out and the words to be inserted in lieu thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair suggests that perhaps it had better come in as an independent section.

Mr. BACON. I am glad to adopt the suggestion of the Chair.

Mr. WARREN. I was about to suggest that it should come in on page 9, after the items for "pay of enlisted men," since that is where it occurred in the original appropriation act.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be inserted at that point.

Mr. WARREN. I have an amendment to offer in the way of a transposition. On page 53, after line 15, insert the last paragraph of the bill, lines 19, 20, 21, and 22, on page 55, striking them out where they now occur.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following:

For the construction of a national road or highway in St. Louis County, Mo., extending from the southern limits of the city of St. Louis, Mo., to the national cemetery in Jefferson Barracks Reservation, in St. Louis County, Mo., on and over such right of way, not less than 100 feet wide, as shall be approved by the Secretary of War, and as shall be provided and dedicated in perpetuity to the Government of the United States of America for that purpose by St. Louis County or the citizens thereof, $127,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEAN. Is there an estimate accompanying the amendment?

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. WARNER. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri if that road does or does not extend over private property?

Mr. WARNER. It will not extend over private property, for the amendment provides by express terms that a right of way is to be given by the county of St. Louis or by private citizens. Private property will abut upon a part of the road.

Mr. WARREN. How much of the road would be abutting on private property?

Mr. WARNER. Fully one-half of it. If it is the purpose of the Senator from Wyoming, which I hope it is not, to raise a point of order with reference to the amendment, for the reason that it is new legislation or general legislation, I hope he will withhold it.

Mr. WARREN. I fear I shall be compelled to make a point of order, but I will withhold it until after the Senator from Missouri has explained the matter.

Mr. WARNER. The "Senator from Missouri" is not especially anxious to be heard, but it is pertinent to the question asked by the Senator from Wyoming whether the road is through private property or whether private property abuts upon the road. I think there are numerous instances in which appropriations have been made which run through private property. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to the fact that the Government, at a cost of $125,000, built a roadway, 4¾ miles in length, from Mound City, Ill., to the national cemetery; that the Government, at an expense of $100,000, built a national road, 3 miles long, from Springfield, Mo., to the national cemetery; and that the Government, at an expense of $60,000, built a national road, a distance of 1½ miles, from Fort Scott, in Kansas, to the national cemetery.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask the Senator as he goes along if the appropriations which he enumerates were made in the supply bill—that is, the army appropriation bill—or were they in separate measures?

Mr. WARNER. My understanding is that the one at Mound City, Ill., was in the regular supply bill, though I have not had time to examine that fact. But we have a precedent for doing this.

Mr. President, Jefferson Barracks, through the grounds of which this road is proposed to be built to the national cemetery, contains about 1,300 acres close to the city limits of the city of St. Louis. Beyond the government grounds there is a national cemetery containing of the Nation's dead some 12,000. The purpose is to build a highway from the city limits of St. Louis to Jefferson Barracks and through the Jefferson Barracks grounds to the national cemetery.

I believe the RECORD will bear me out in the assertion that there have been fewer appropriations asked for the national cemetery in the county of St. Louis than any other in the country of like proportion, and I had hoped that this request, being so modest in the amount asked for and so worthy for the purpose to be obtained, the Senator in charge of the bill would not see fit to interpose an objection in the way of a point of order.

I will say in conclusion, Mr. President, as I do not wish to take the time of the Senate, that the amount asked for, $127,000, is the amount estimated and reported by the Quartermaster-General of the army. In this connection, I desire to send to the Secretary's desk to have printed in the RECORD, I do not care to have it read at this time, the report of the Quartermaster-General, and also to have incorporated in the RECORD, without reading, a letter from the secretary of the Civic League of the city of St. Louis.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 8, 1908.

Hon. LUKE E. WRIGHT,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to herewith hand you a letter from the Civic League of St. Louis, Mo., which is self-explanatory. The subject-matter of this correspondence has been extensively discussed and the proposition to connect Jefferson Barracks and the national cemetery by a highway seems to be favored by all interested parties.

I am willing to introduce a special bill in the House, but, of course, would like to have more detailed information as to the amount of money required, and would therefore respectfully request, pursuant to the suggestion of the Civic League, that the commanding officer at Jefferson Barracks be called upon for the information necessary for this purpose.

Thanking you in advance, I am,

Very respectfully, RICHARD BARTHOLDT.

NOTE.—The papers mentioned by the Quartermaster-General (14512 W. D. and 13 inclosures) were forwarded to the chairman of the Senate Military Committee (Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN) by Secretary Taft's letter of March 28, 1908.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 8, 1908.

Hon. RICHARD BARTHOLDT, Congressman from Missouri, forwards letter from the Civic League, St. Louis, relative to the construction of a highway from Jefferson Barracks and the national cemetery to the city limits.

[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, December 17, 1908.

Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

December 18, 1907, a letter was received in this office from Congressman BARTHOLDT, inclosing a letter from the Civic League of St. Louis, Mo., relative to the construction of a roadway at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., running through the reservation to the national cemetery, the Civic League expressing a desire to have a bill introduced in Congress for an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose.

By an indorsement dated December 21, 1907, the papers were forwarded to the Adjutant-General, recommending that the post authorities at Jefferson Barracks be called on for the proper plans and estimates, and they were received with the original papers March 7, 1908, and then returned to the Adjutant-General March 12, 1908.

The report by the quartermaster at Jefferson Barracks showed that, in accordance with estimate No. 1, the construction of a roadway 100 feet wide, with two 24-foot driveways and flanked with four rows of trees, a length of 17,250 feet outside the Jefferson Barracks Reservation, would cost $100,600; that the portion of the road inside the Jefferson Barracks Reservation—9,900 feet—would cost $27,000; total amount of this estimate, $127,600.

Estimate No. 2, for a roadway 60 feet wide with one 30-foot driveway, would cost $62,380 for that portion of the driveway, etc., outside of the Jefferson Barracks Reservation and $15,240 for that portion within the reservation, making a total cost of $77,620.

The papers were taken to the Senate Military Committee in March, 1908, and were returned to the Assistant Secretary of War March 27, 1908.

The part of the road outside the reservation could not properly be undertaken unless authorized by a special appropriation, and no part of this road was considered in submitting the 1910 estimates. It is therefore recommended that any special bill for the construction of the road should include the entire cost.

J. B. ALESHIRE,
Quartermaster-General, U. S. Army.

[Second indorsement.]

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, December 18, 1908.

To the Assistant Secretary of War.

[Third indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, December 19, 1908.

Respectfully returned to Hon. RICHARD BARTHOLDT, House of Representatives, inviting attention to the report hereon of the Quartermaster-General of the Army.

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Assistant Secretary of War.

THE CIVIC LEAGUE OF ST. LOUIS,
St. Louis, February 17, 1909.

Hon. WILLIAM WARNER,
Senator from Missouri, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have word from Mr. David R. Francis, who saw you in Washington the other day concerning the appropriation for a highway from the city limits of St. Louis to the national cemetery in Jefferson Barracks, that you did not have sufficient information concerning the proposition. I hasten to send you photographs of the proposed highway, a map of the city and its surroundings, and the following statement concerning the plans of this organization for that improvement.

The tract of land belonging to the Government and known as "Jefferson Barracks" contains over 1,300 acres of fine wooded land, in the southern portion of which is located one of the largest national cemeteries in the country, where 12,104 soldiers have been buried. At present the reservation and the cemetery are practically inaccessible from the city because of the lack of a good public highway leading from the barracks to the city limits. The records, I think, will show that less money has been spent by the Federal Government on this cemetery than upon any other in the country. The city of St. Louis is building the Kingshighway boulevard, some 19 miles in length, as indicated on the map inclosed, and will gladly connect this boulevard with the proposed highway, if the Government can be induced to build the portion in the county.

The War Department, through the Quartermaster's office, has had estimates made of the cost of this highway. These estimates are now in the files at Washington. Congressman BARTHOLDT introduced a bill in the lower House some time ago, calling for the appropriation of $100,000 for this proposed improvement, but there is little likelihood, as you know, of a special bill of this kind passing. Our only hope, therefore, is to have it tacked onto the general appropriation bill in the Senate.

If the Government makes this appropriation, the people of the county will donate the right of way, about 80 feet wide and 3 miles in length, for the highway.

There are plenty of precedents for this action on the part of the Government, and I need refer only to three such roadways in the vicinity of St. Louis.

The Government built a roadway, 80 feet wide and 4¾ miles long, from Mound City, Ill., to the national cemetery near that city at a cost of $125,000.

A national road, 80 feet wide and 3 miles long, was built from Springfield, Mo., to the national cemetery in the vicinity at a cost of approximately $100,000.

A roadway, 80 feet wide and 1½ miles long, was built from Fort Scott, Kans., to the national cemetery in the vicinity at an approximate cost of $60,000.

These are only a few of the illustrations which can be used as precedents in this matter.

The Civic League has been urging this appropriation for two years, and we earnestly hope that you and Senator STONE will be able to have the $100,000 included in the appropriations.

If you need further information, kindly let me know.

Very truly, yours,

MAYO FESLER, Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to add just a word to what my colleague has said.

The city of St. Louis is now engaged in the construction of an extensive system of boulevards. One of the principal of those boulevards is along what is known as "King's highway," running very nearly through the heart of the city a distance of 19 miles. It terminates on the south at the city limits, just across what is known as "Carondelet Park." From that point to the thirteen hundred and odd acres embraced in the barracks reservation the distance is about 3 miles. This is one of the most beautiful spots of ground to be found in all that region. It is a beautiful park and a very large and handsome cemetery. In addition to that, Jefferson Barracks is one of the largest in the military establishment of that kind.

There is no way ordinarily of reaching the barracks from the city except by rail, steam or electric. The roadways are not well improved. It seems to me that under these circumstances, added to what my colleague has said, it would be an exceedingly appropriate and proper disposition of this small sum of public money to connect that great city with the cemetery and with the barracks.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. How many miles is this road in length?

Mr. STONE. Approximately 3 miles.

Mr. GALLINGER. And is there any land to be purchased?

Mr. STONE. The amendment offered by my colleague provides that the entire right of way is to be donated to the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked that question for the reason that my attention was attracted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] to the list of roads he read which had been constructed by the Government. I noticed that they cost in some instances $40,000 a mile. I do not know what road materials you have in Missouri, but I do know that the very finest macadam roads in New England are built at an expense of not exceeding $5,000 a mile, and I wondered why it cost $40,000 a mile in Missouri. It looks to me like an extravagance. I do not interpose any objection to the amendment; my attention was only attracted to that point.

Mr. WARNER. Will my colleague permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. The Quartermaster-General gives the estimate in the paper I sent to the desk and makes the cost for the distance $127,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is at the rate of over $40,000 a mile.

Mr. WARNER. Yes; that is a matter of mathematics. I take it the Quartermaster-General was possibly making a correct estimate; I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. My notion is, if we are paying $40,000 a mile to construct roads, the Government of the United States is making a very poor bargain with somebody.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that in the Quartermaster-General's estimate he is doubtless estimating on the kind of a road that they asked to have—that is, 100 feet wide, and so forth.

Mr. WARNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARREN. The estimate, I understand, is an old estimate, not made by the present Quartermaster-General, but his predecessor, and made upon maps and plans that were submitted by those who were interested in the road.

Mr. WARNER. If my colleague will permit me a moment, I may say that I understand from the indorsement of the estimate of the Quartermaster-General it is to make a continuation of the road in keeping with the boulevards of the city, with which it connects, which would seem to be proper to be done.

Mr. STONE. It ought to be done.

Mr. WARNER. It ought to be done.

Mr. STONE. There ought to be one continuous line.

Mr. WARNER. With a proper driveway; a proper space on the side. It should be 100 feet wide, with a proper setting-out of trees.

Mr. STONE. At all events, Mr. President, if the appropriation should be put in the bill, the construction of the road would not cost to exceed the sum named, to be built under the auspices and direction of the federal authorities. If it does not cost that much, then that amount will not be expended. The amendment is intended merely to cover the estimate, and I felt no desire to add to it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to stand in the way of a proper connecting road between the points named, but it is a large amount, nearly $50,000 a mile, and more, I believe, than is necessary, although we shall probably at some time provide sufficiently for this road. We have not before us an estimate of recent date; nor have we an official estimate at all; that is, an estimate from the Secretary of the Treasury, upon which we base this appropriation. So we have no real estimate, and the appropriation has not been recommended by any committee. I regret very much that I shall have to make a point of order upon that ground. I hope in the meantime the Senator from Missouri will take the matter up and ask for a revision by the people there, so that we may get it within the lines of other appropriations we have made, and in the next bill have it properly indorsed.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I was about to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether it would not be proper to submit the question to the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. I will withdraw the point of order and let it go to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming withdraws the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FORT KEOGH MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unless there is an appropriation bill ready, I am going to venture to ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected House bills on the calendar.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to have the Senator withhold his request for a moment. This morning I objected to the consideration of a brief bill reported by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] from the Committee on Military Affairs. It is on the desk. I should like to ask that it be considered during the afternoon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. CARTER. I withdraw my objection to unanimous consent and ask that House bill 24149 be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24149) granting to the Montana, Wyoming and Southern Railway Company a right of way across the Fort Keogh Military Reservation in Montana.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by adding at the end of the bill the following as an additional section:

SEC. 3. That there is hereby granted to the incorporated city of Miles City, Mont., 160 acres of land along the easterly line of said Fort Keogh Reservation immediately adjoining Miles City, the same to be selected by the mayor of said city, subject to survey and approval by the Secretary of War: Provided, By the acceptance of said grant the said Miles City shall undertake full charge of and responsibility for straightening of the channel and the control of the waters of Tongue River to the west of the town site of said city.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I move to add, after the amendment just adopted, what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 4. That permission is hereby given to the Custer County Fair Association, of Custer County, Mont., to use 160 acres of said Fort Keogh Military Reservation for the purposes of conducting and maintaining thereon a county fair, the said land to be selected as near as may be practicable in square form and the land as selected to be surveyed and approved by the Secretary of War, and all rights under this permission shall cease when said association discontinues the use of the aforesaid land for county-fair purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15442) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, and June 27, 1898, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to further amend section 18 of an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by the act approved February 21, 1893, and by the act approved June 27, 1898, so that the first clause of the section shall read as follows, namely:

That all claims arising under either of the two next preceding sections of this act shall be filed with the surveyor-general of the proper State or Territory before the 4th day of March, 1910, and no claim not so filed shall be valid.

It further provides that the extension herein granted shall not apply to lands within the limits of a confirmed grant or embraced in any entry completed under the public land laws prior to filing of a claim hereunder, nor shall its provision extend to persons holding under assignments made after March 3, 1901.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITY AND SUBURBAN AND OTHER STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 20837) to authorize certain extensions of the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 3, to strike out section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the City and Suburban Railway of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to operate over its tracks cars for the conveyance of parcels, milk, ice, light freight, and of fuel for the use of such company: Provided, That such cars shall be operated only during the hours between 12 o'clock midnight and 5 o'clock a. m., and shall be subject to such regulations as may be made by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 4. That the City and Suburban Railway of Washington and all other street railway companies in the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to operate over their respective tracks cars for the conveyance of parcels, milk, ice, light freight, and of fuel for the use of such companies: Provided, That fuel cars shall be operated only during the hours between 12 o'clock midnight and 5 o'clock a. m., and shall be subject to such reasonable and usual regulations as may be made by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after section 4, to insert as new sections the following:

SEC. 5. That section 18 of an act authorizing the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company, of Maryland, a corporation created by the laws of the State of Maryland and authorized by an act of Congress approved February 18, 1907, to extend its line into the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. That the construction of the said extension on the lines of said railroad company within the District of Columbia shall be commenced within six months from the passage of this act and shall be completed and cars in operation within one year from the passage of this act, in default of which this act shall be void and of no effect: Provided, That the tracks of the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad shall be located, approximately, in the middle of Bladensburg road, as the same shall be ultimately widened to a width of 90 feet; and that the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company shall, in conjunction with its track construction, grade and macadamize to such section and profile as is approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia a width of 15 feet on both sides of its track construction; and that the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company shall bear and defray all costs of this widening, which shall be done to the entire satisfaction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That all the rights, duties, obligations, and requirements as to permits and deposits contained in the act of February 18, 1907, authorizing the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia shall, in conjunction with this amendment, remain in full force and effect."

SEC. 6. That section 826a of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia be, and the same hereby is, amended so that it shall read as follows:

"SEC. 826a. Offenses against property: Whoever shall knowingly connect or disconnect any electrical conductor belonging to any company using or engaged in the manufacture and supply of electric current for purposes of light, heat, and power, or either of them, or makes any connection with any such electrical conductor for the purpose of using or wasting the electric current; or who in any wise tampers with any meter used to register current consumed; or who interferes with the operating of any dynamo or other electrical appliance of such company; or tampers with or interferes with the poles, wires, conduits, or other apparatus used by such companies, unless such person or persons shall be duly authorized by or be in the employ of such company; and whoever shall knowingly make use or take advantage of any connection or disconnection so made, or meter, dynamo, other electrical appliance, pole, wire, conduit, or other apparatus so tampered or interfered with, by whomsoever done, for the purpose of cheating, circumventing, or defrauding such company, shall, for each and every such offense, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize certain extensions of the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and to amend 'An act authorizing the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia,' approved February 18, 1907, and for other purposes."

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, has my request been agreed to that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected House bills on the calendar?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected House bills on the calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

DEPOSIT SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, MOBILE, ALA.

The bill (H. R. 3760) for the relief of the creditors of the Deposit Savings Association, of Mobile, Ala., was announced as first in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] heretofore objected to that bill.

Mr. KEAN. I think the Senator from Rhode Island has since then examined the bill and withdrawn his objection to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What was the statement of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LODGE. That it is all right.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Deposit Savings Association, of Mobile, a body corporate under the laws of Alabama, be, and it is hereby, relieved of all liability for the tax of 10 per cent on the amount of its own notes used for circulation and paid out by it previous to the 3d day of March, 1875, under the provisions of section 6, acts of March 3, 1865, and July 13, 1866, and of section 3412 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal receiver of the Deposit Savings Association the sum of $7,394.73, this sum being the amount of money heretofore made and collected by the United States of and from the property of said association on account of the liability of said association for said 10 per cent tax.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay or refund to the legal receiver of the said Deposit Savings Association the sum of $5,100, that being the purchase money of certain real property situate in the port of Mobile, which was, on August 20, 1874, as the property of said association and on account of its liability to said tax of 10 per cent, sold at public outcry, and afterwards by deed conveyed to the use of the United States, and subsequently, to wit, on the 12th of September, anno Domino 1881, sold by the United States for the said sum of $5,100; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the said legal receiver of said association the sum of $1,857.77, which sum was collected by the United States as rent for said property from 1875 to 1881, inclusive.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARCELLUS BUTLER.

The bill (H. R. 17960) for the relief of Marcellus Butler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Marcellus Butler $100 for services rendered to the Committee on Invalid Pensions from March 5, 1901, to December 1, 1901.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDGES FOR HAWAII, ALASKA, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 21896) to amend section 86 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, to provide for additional judges, and for other judicial purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, that is a very long bill.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to make a statement?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this is an important bill. It is one of the omnibus bills that came from the House at the close of the last session. It provides for an additional judge for Hawaii, an additional judge for Alaska, an additional judge for New Mexico, and for a term of court in a new judicial division in Alabama. I will say there is nothing objectionable in the bill.

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that the reason I was going to object to the bill was because it contains so much.

Mr. NELSON. As it came to the Senate in that form, the Senate is not to blame. At the close of the last session, the House, being in a commotion, sent to the Senate an omnibus bill which embraced three or four bills, some of them Senate bills and some of them House bills. This bill has been considered by the Judiciary Committee, and unanimously reported by the chairman of that committee. In his absence, I desire to express the hope that the Senate will give consideration to the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the word "judges," to insert "and who shall each receive an annual salary of $7,500," so as to read:

That section 86 of the act approved April 30, 1900, entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 86. There shall be established in the said Territory a district court, to consist of two judges, who shall reside therein and be called district judges, and who shall each receive an annual salary of $7,500. The said court while in session shall be presided over by only one of said judges. The two judges shall from time to time, either by order or rules of court, prescribe at what times and in what class of cases each of them shall preside. The said two judges shall have the same powers in all matters coming before said court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 24, after the word "law," to insert "and appeals and writs of error may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from said district court in cases where appeals and writs of error are allowed from the district and circuit courts of the United States to the Supreme Court," so as to read:

Writs of error and appeals from the said district court shall be had and allowed to the circuit court of appeals for the ninth judicial circuit in the same manner as writs of error and appeals are allowed from circuit courts to circuit courts of appeal as provided by law, and appeals and writs of error may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from said district court in cases where appeals and writs of error are allowed from the district and circuit courts of the United States to the Supreme Court, and the laws of the United States relating to juries and jury trials shall be applicable to said district court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, on page 2 I observe that the United States marshal——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow us to get through with the amendments reported by the committee? Then the Senator can make any suggestion he desires.

Mr. KEAN. This is evidently a mistake. It makes the term of the judges, district attorney, and marshal six years instead of four.

Mr. NELSON. That is a mistake. It should be four years.

Mr. KEAN. Then, I ask to have that correction made now. I move that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 2, line 9, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert "four," so as to read:

The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, shall appoint two district judges, a district attorney, and a marshal of the United States for the said district, and said judges, attorney, and marshal shall hold office for four years unless sooner removed by the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 1, page 3, line 17, after the word "annum," to insert:

Provided, That writs of error and appeals may also be taken from the supreme court of the Territory of Hawaii to the Supreme Court of the United States in all cases where the amount involved, exclusive of costs, exceeds the sum or value of $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 10, line 3, after the word "fees," to strike out "earned" and insert "received," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That section 11 of chapter 1, title 1, of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. That an accurate detailed account of all fees received and expenses incurred by commissioners and deputy marshals shall be prepared in duplicate quarterly, duly verified by the oath of the commissioner or deputy marshal rendering the account, and forwarded to the clerk for the proper division of the district court and approved by the judge thereof, if found to be in accordance with law. After approval by the judge the original of each such account shall be forwarded by the clerk of the Department of Justice for revision and the duplicate filed in the court. All net fees earned in excess of the sum of $3,000 per calendar year or in excess of that rate for a less period, by any commissioner or deputy marshal, shall be annually paid to the clerk of the proper division of the court to be available for incidental expenses of the district court of the proper division, such payment of such incidental expenses to be accompanied by a verified detailed statement of said clerk."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 3, to strike out section 11, as follows:

SEC. 11. That with the approval of the Attorney-General the governor shall appoint and at pleasure remove the commissioners in and for the district, who shall have the jurisdiction conferred by law in any part thereof, but who shall, during their term of office, each reside at the place in the district designated in the respective orders of appointment; but the district judges may, in cases of emergency, temporarily fill vacancies in the office of the commissioner. New offices of commissioners may be created by the governor with the approval of the Attorney-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, as a substitute for section [15] 14 in the bill. It relates to New Mexico.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 7, it is proposed to strike out:

SEC. [15] 14. That the judicial districts in New Mexico be divided and assigned as follows: First district to consist of the counties of Santa Fe, Rio Arriba, Taos, and San Juan; second district to consist of the counties of Bernalillo, McKinley, and Sandoval; third district to consist of the counties of Dona Ana, Sierra, and Luna; fourth district to consist of the counties of San Miguel, Mora, Colfax, and Union; fifth district to consist of the counties of Eddy, Roosevelt, and Chaves; sixth district to consist of the counties of Otero, Lincoln, Guadalupe, Quay, and Torrance; seventh district to consist of the counties of Socorro, Grant, and Valencia.

And in lieu thereof insert:

SEC. 14. That the Chief Justice and his associates are hereby vested with power and authority, and they are hereby directed, to divide said Territory into seven judicial districts and make such assignments of the judges provided for in section 12 of this act as shall, in their judgment, be meet and proper: Provided, That one of said judges shall preside and hold a district court in the city of Roscoe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section [16] 15, page 13, line 18, after the word "That," to strike out "the said district court shall have jurisdiction, and the same is hereby vested, to hear, try, and determine all matters and causes that the courts of the other districts of the Territory now possess; and for such purposes;" in line 22, after the word "annually," to insert "within each of said districts;" and on page 14, line 1, after the word "them," to strike out "and grand and petit jurors shall be summoned therein in the manner now required by law," so as to make the section read:

SEC. [16] 15. That two terms of said court shall be held annually within each of said districts at such places within said district as may be designated by the chief justice and his associates, or a majority of them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [19] 18, page 14, line 20, after the word "years," to strike out:

Provided, however, That suitable rooms and accommodations are furnished for holding of said courts free of all expenses to the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [22] 21, page 16, after line 12, to strike out:

Such salaries shall be paid out of the Treasury as the salaries of other like officers are paid; and each of said officers shall receive their expenses and subsistence when necessarily employed in the performance of their official duties in like manner and to the same extent as are allowed to other like officers.

Such officers shall receive such salaries, respectively, and such expenses and subsistence from the time they entered upon the discharge of their duties.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 21. That the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Oklahoma shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, payable monthly, in 12 equal installments.

The United States district attorney for the western district of Oklahoma shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, payable monthly, in 12 equal installments.

The United States marshal for the eastern district of Oklahoma shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, payable monthly, in 12 equal installments.

The United States marshal for the western district of Oklahoma shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, payable monthly, in 12 equal installments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that to-morrow morning, at the conclusion of the morning business, if agreeable to the Senate, I shall call up the Indian appropriation bill.

HERMAN LEHMANN.

The bill (H. R. 2635) for the relief of Herman Lehmann was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Herman Lehmann $128 for the loss of personal property sustained by him while in the service of the United States as clerk in the Quartermaster's Department, U. S. Army, by reason of the burning of the government warehouse at Seattle, Wash., on May 7, 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT BURLINGTON, IOWA.

The bill (H. R. 26466) to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Burlington, Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

S. R. HURLEY.

The bill (H. R. 17276) for the relief of S. R. Hurley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to S. R. Hurley, of Grundy, Va., $615, or so much thereof as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury was properly incurred, for expenses incident to defending an indictment made in Pike County, Ky., and Covington, Ky., for the murder of A. C. Centers while attempting to make an arrest for violation of the internal-revenue laws of the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN SHULL.

The bill (H. R. 4286) for the relief of John Shull was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "three hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to John Shull, of Perry County, State of Pennsylvania, the sum of $150, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in payment for timber cut and used by the United States topographical survey in building and construction of a tower on the summit of the Tuscarora Mountain, in the State of Pennsylvania, for the use of the Government of the United States, in the year 1904.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DRAMATIC ORDER KNIGHTS OF KHORASSAN.

The bill (H. R. 23707) to incorporate the Imperial Palace Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUCKET SHOPS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 20111) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," relative to gambling, bucket shops, and bucketing, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the last section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after line 13, on page 5, as follows:

SEC. 869e. That the courts having jurisdiction shall charge their grand juries, each term, to investigate violations of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ROCK RIVER (ILLINOIS), BRIDGES.

The bill (H. R. 26482) to authorize the construction of two bridges across Rock River, State of Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

MONONGAHELA RIVER (PENNSYLVANIA) BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 26829) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved April 23, 1906, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYEES ON ISTHMIAN CANAL.

The bill (H. R. 22340) relating to injured employees on the Isthmian Canal was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that nothing contained in the act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment shall prevent the Isthmian Canal Commission from granting to its injured employees, whether engaged in a hazardous employment or otherwise, leave of absence with pay for time necessarily lost as a result of injuries received in the course of employment, not exceeding in the aggregate thirty days per annum.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. HILL.

The bill (H. R. 18600) for the relief of John M. Hill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John M. Hill, late register of the United States land office at Walla Walla, Wash., $750, the amount paid by him out of his own funds for clerk hire during his term of office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. J. B. NEWCOMBE.

The bill (H. R. 8558) for the relief of R. J. B. Newcombe, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. BURKETT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL BEATTY, DECEASED.

The bill (H. R. 13777) for the relief of the estate of Samuel Beatty, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $100 to J. M. Beatty, administrator of the estate of Samuel Beatty, deceased, of Lee County, Ky., in full compensation for one horse sold to the Army of the United States during the year 1862.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORFEITURE OF CERTAIN RIGHTS OF WAY.

The bill (H. R. 24833) to declare and enforce the forfeiture provided by section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEAN. Let the report be published in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be published in the RECORD.

The report (No. 961) submitted by Mr. FLINT on the 10th instant is as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24833) to declare and enforce the forfeiture provided by section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

A part of this report is included in the report of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives, which gives full information as to the necessity of the enactment of this bill, as follows:

"The committee having had under consideration H. R. 24833, a bill to declare and enforce the forfeiture provided by section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled 'An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States,' report the same back with the recommendation that the same do pass.

"Under the right-of-way act of 1875 railway companies may file plats and select their routes over and across the public lands of the United States. The plats, when approved in the Land Department, constitute a cloud upon the title, whether the roads are built within the time required by law or not. The forfeiture declared in the statute because of failure to build the road is not self-executing. Either a congressional or judicial forfeiture must be declared.

"Many of these plats are now on file and have not been followed by the construction of the proposed railways.

"This bill expresses an affirmative declaration of forfeiture against all the old unused selection of rights of way where they are more than 5 years old. The bill only deals with these old, abandoned, and unused filings, leaving future Congresses to declare future forfeitures.

"Some years ago the unearned railway land grants were declared forfeited, and the same policy should now be adopted as to the unearned and unused rights of way.

"This bill is a copy of the law of June 26, 1906, and the passage of the bill is necessary at this time by reason of the fact that there are a considerable number of rights of way which have become subject to forfeiture since the passage of that act by reason of noncompliance with the conditions, and which should be cleared from the records of the Land Office.

"There is appended hereto and made a part of this report a letter from the Secretary of the Interior on the bill in question."

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 11, 1909.

SIR: In response to request for a report on H. R. 24833, entitled "A bill to declare and enforce the forfeiture provided by section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled 'An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States,'" I have the honor to report that the provisions of the law are in accordance with former legislation and that there is no objection to its passage.

Very respectfully, JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

Hon. F. W. MONDELL,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR ROBINSON, ILL.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 241) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish one condemned bronze cannon and cannon balls to the city of Robinson, Ill., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. DE COSTER.

The bill (H. R. 5728) for the relief of James H. De Coster was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to reimburse the sum of $465.95 to James H. De Coster, postmaster at Mechanic Falls, Androscoggin County, Me., for postage stamps and post-office funds stolen from the post-office at Mechanic Falls.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the consideration of the bill, but I do wish to call the attention of the Senate to what seems to me to be a bad practice. This is a claims bill, pure and simple. It should have gone to the Committee on Claims. It is impossible to observe any regular practice or any policy if bills of this character are referred to different committees. I think the Senate should insist that all bills of this character should go to one committee, in order that a regular and uniform practice can be established and followed.

The Committee on Claims does have a policy in regard to these matters, and it endeavors to conform to it; but when bills of the same character are referred to other committees, it is impossible to observe any settled policy.

Mr. BURKETT. The calendar does not indicate that there is a report accompanying the bill. If there is one, I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. Then, I ask that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

JOHN W. WOOD.

The bill (H. R. 15603) for the relief of John W. Wood was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill is precisely similar to the one which was just objected to, and I ask that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

E. J. REED.

The bill (H. R. 4307) for the relief of E. J. Reed was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to E. J. Reed, postmaster at Danby, Vt., $301.20, the sum of money and stamps stolen from the post-office at Danby, Vt.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. CURRY.

The bill (H. R. 17171) for the relief of Benjamin F. Curry was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Postmaster-General to allow on the accounts of Benjamin F. Curry, postmaster at Hamlin, W. Va., a credit of $189.99 for money stolen from that office by burglars December 27, 1905.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN ANDERSON.

The bill (H. R. 19762) to reimburse the postmaster at Sandborn, Ind., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay John Anderson, postmaster at Sandborn, Ind., $450.43, being the amount burglarized from the post-office safe at said place February 18, 1907.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN T. RIVETT.

The bill (H. R. 23699) to grant to John T. Rivett privilege to make commutation of his homestead entry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAROLE OF JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 16269) authorizing the extension of Ninth street NW. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 17303) authorizing the extension of Girard street NW. from its western terminus to Fifteenth street NW. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 12678) for the widening of Twentieth street NW., District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONDADO BAY BRIDGE, PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. I am directed by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 26838) to authorize Behn Brothers, of San Juan, P. R., to construct a bridge across a portion of the Condado Bay, at the eastern extremity of San Juan Island, Porto Rico, to report it favorably without amendment; and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGNES M. HARRISON.

The bill (H. R. 21019) to reimburse Agnes M. Harrison, postmaster at Wheeler, Miss., for loss of money-order remittance was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Agnes M. Harrison, postmaster at Wheeler, Miss., for money-order remittance lost in transit November 12, 1907, without fault on her part, the sum of $56.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. L. SIMPSON.

The bill (H. R. 3844) for the relief of E. L. Simpson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to E. L. Simpson $88.90 to reimburse him for money stolen from the post-office at Carrollton, Ill., January 2, 1897, by burglars.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. C. HAGGARD.

The bill (H. R. 15755) for the relief of J. C. Haggard, of White County, Tenn., was announced as the next business in order on the calendar, and was read.

Mr. BURKETT. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

VALDEZ, MARSHALL PASS AND NORTHERN RAILROAD.

The bill (H. R. 25823) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the time for the completion of the Valdez, Marshall Pass and Northern Railroad, and for other purposes," approved February 21, 1907, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go over, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

DANIEL W. ABBOTT.

The bill (H. R. 26516) authorizing Daniel W. Abbott to make homestead entry was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 24835) authorizing the necessary resurvey of public lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 4, after the word "made," to strike out "in the manner" and insert "as he may deem wise under the rectangular system;" and in line 1, on page 2, before the words "per centum," to strike out "twenty" and insert "five," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, cause to be made, as he may deem wise under the rectangular system now provided by law, such resurveys or retracements of the surveys of public lands as after full investigation he may deem essential to properly mark the boundaries of the public lands remaining undisposed of: Provided, That no such resurvey or retracement shall be so executed as to impair the bona fide rights or claims of any claimant, entryman, or owner of lands affected by such resurvey or retracement: Provided further, That not to exceed 5 per cent of the total annual appropriation for surveys and resurveys of the public lands shall be used for the resurveys and retracements authorized hereby.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. This seems to be rather an important bill, and I should like the Senator from Oregon to explain it. Does it contemplate a general resurvey of all the public lands in the United States?

Mr. FULTON. Oh, no; only where the corners have been lost, where the marking has been lost, by either the tree or other monument being removed, and where it becomes necessary to retrace the line.

Under the present holding of the Interior Department, retracing or resurveys can not be made after the original survey has been accepted. The result is that innumerable special bills have to be passed providing for retracing and resurveys. The pending bill authorizes the Secretary to have it done, if after examination it seems proper and necessary, and the bill limits the amount that may be expended to 5 per cent of the appropriation.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator if he has any idea what the total expense under the bill will be?

Mr. FULTON. I think the total appropriation for surveys is $300,000, as I recall, and the bill allows 5 per cent of it to be used for this purpose.

Mr. KEAN. At the present time?

Mr. FULTON. At the present time.

Mr. KEAN. But the expenditure you are indulging in will be from ten to fifteen million dollars, will it not?

Mr. FULTON. Oh, no.

Mr. KEAN. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. FULTON. It is asked for by the department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BURKETT. Let me say a word to the Senator from New Jersey before he insists upon his objection.

I have had occasion to introduce here several bills to straighten out certain portions of the survey in Nebraska. The survey was made many years ago. Some of the land has been taken up, and it is impossible for the settler to find his land. Some of the corners can not be found. There is no way to get the settler on the land, or to find where the land is. It is here and there. Sometimes we have to survey a whole county. On two occasions I have had a whole county in my State resurveyed. Sometimes it is a smaller amount.

Mr. KEAN. Then the county ought to bear the expense. It is not for the United States Government.

Mr. BURKETT. It is government land.

Mr. FULTON. It is government land.

Mr. BURKETT. It is government land. It is not county or individual land.

I will say to the Senator that all the private-owned land has at one time or another been surveyed, and a great deal of it has had to be resurveyed by private parties; and the government land is in exactly the same position as the private-owned lands.

Mr. FULTON. The bill specially limits to public lands. It does not apply at all to lands which have passed into private ownership.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey insist upon his objection?

Mr. KEAN. I do not insist upon it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from New Jersey will not object to the bill. It simply provides for doing in a general way what we have already had to do many times in individual cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his objection.

Mr. KEAN. I do not approve of the bill. Nevertheless, I do not object to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ESTATE OF SARAH J. MONTGOMERY.

The bill (H. R. 13712) for the relief of the legal representatives of Sarah J. Montgomery, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the proper legal representatives of Sarah J. Montgomery, deceased, late of Terrebonne Parish, State of Louisiana, to bring suit in the Court of Claims for the recovery of the net proceeds of 125 bales of cotton alleged to have been taken from Oak Point plantation, Madison Parish, La., by the Army of the United States about the year 1863.

Mr. WARREN. According to the calendar, the bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands. I dare say that that is an error. Probably it was reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FULTON. It was referred to the Committee on Claims and reported from the Committee on Claims, as is shown by the report and as a matter of fact. It is simply a misprint in the calendar.

Mr. WARREN. It makes no difference as to the calendar; but if there is a record of it, that ought to be corrected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The record is correct.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNERSHIP OF LANDS IN CANAL ZONE.

The bill (H. R. 18694) relating to the use, control, and ownership of lands in the Canal Zone, Isthmus of Panama, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals with an amendment, on page 2, after line 23, to strike out section 4, in the following words:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of adjusting claims for lands occupied or necessary to be occupied by the canal and the Panama Railroad and appurtenant works the President is authorized to convey the title of the United States to such portions of the public lands in the Canal Zone as by him may be deemed advisable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TELEPHONE SYSTEM ON ISLAND OF OAHU.

The bill (H. R. 25139) to amend an act entitled "An act to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, to authorize and provide for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a telephone system on the island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii," approved June 20, 1906, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND ENTRIES.

The bill (H. R. 26734) to permit change of entry in case of mistake of the description of tracts intended to be entered was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UTE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 19606) to provide for the granting and patenting to the State of Colorado desert lands within the former Ute Indian Reservation in said State was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERMAN ANDRAE ELECTRICAL COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 8947) for the relief of the Herman Andrae Electrical Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., was announced as the next House bill in order on the calendar.

Mr. BURKETT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

C. L. HUEY.

The bill (H. R. 7029) for the relief of C. L. Huey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to C. L. Huey, of Bloomingdale, Ind., $96.40, being for loss of private property at Cavite Naval Station, P. I., as found due him by a board of survey at Manila, P. I., by Special Orders, No. 272, paragraph 2, dated headquarters First Brigade and post of Manila, November 17, 1903.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. N. NEWKIRK.

The bill (H. R. 21167) to reimburse J. N. Newkirk, postmaster of SanDiego, Cal., for moneys lost by burglary, was considered as in Committee of Whole. It proposes to repay to J. N. Newkirk, postmaster at San Diego, Cal., $234.17 to reimburse him for key deposit funds lost by burglary on February 26, 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINERAL SURVEYS.

The bill (H. R. 25396) for relief of applicants for mineral surveys was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay, out of the moneys heretofore or hereafter covered into the Treasury from deposits made by individuals to cover cost of work performed and to be performed in the offices of the United States surveyors-general in connection with the survey of mineral lands, any excess in the amount deposited over and above the actual cost of the work performed, including all expenses incident thereto for which the deposits were severally made or the whole of any unused deposit; and such sums, as the several cases may be, shall be deemed to be annually and permanently appropriated for that purpose. Such repayments shall be made to the person or persons who made the several deposits, or to his or their legal representatives, after the completion or abandonment of the work for which the deposits were made, and upon an account certified by the surveyor-general of the district in which the mineral land surveyed, or sought to be surveyed, is situated and approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill explain it. The money, I understand, is deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. The money is turned into the Treasury Department by the government officers. This is to refund it in certain cases. The bill was referred to the department, and my recollection is that the department favorably reported it.

Mr. KEAN. What is the amount of money involved in the bill?

Mr. CARTER. When an individual applies for a patent for a mining claim, a deposit is required at a United States depository in the sum, I believe, of $30, to pay for the clerical work connected with the survey. It so happens that this is an amount in excess now and then of the actual and necessary disbursement in connection with the application.

As I understand the bill, which has not heretofore been called to my attention, the purpose is to direct that the excess over and above the actual cost shall be refunded to the party who placed the same on deposit. It is an equitable measure, and I think it should be passed.

Mr. KEAN. Is not the excess used to pay the expenses of the Government of the United States?

Mr. CARTER. The Government of the United States is paid so much per acre for each acre of land embraced in the claim. That is the amount contemplated by law to compensate the Government for the land. In connection with the acquiring of patent, there is certain clerical work to be performed, certain surveying to be done. The individual applying must, in the first place, make the deposit to which I have referred to reimburse the Government for the clerical service. The applicant must also pay for the surveying of the mining claim.

Thus it happens that the Government is not burdened with either clerical service or survey fees of the mining claims as in the case of agricultural claims. When the claim has been regularly surveyed and all the clerical work performed and the point reached where a final receipt is issued, the individual pays $5 per acre in the case of a quartz claim and $2.50, I believe, in the case of a placer claim, thus paying all the clerical work of the survey fees and the statutory price prescribed for the land embraced in the survey.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to quote a short paragraph from the report of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. This is the final part of his letter:

The proposed legislation is urgently needed, as the sums which accumulate by these deposits are neither funds of and available to the United States nor, under the present conditions, repayable to those rightfully entitled to them.

Mr. KEAN. But if they are covered into the Treasury they are funds of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. But they do not go into the Treasury of the United States as a part of the funds. They are special deposits made when persons apply for patents, and the United States can not use the money except to reimburse it for the expense. They are accumulated and unavailable in the general funds of the United States. I will read this again:

The proposed legislation is urgently needed, as the sums which accumulate by these deposits are neither funds of and available to the United States nor, under the present conditions, repayable to those rightfully entitled to them.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This completes the calendar of unobjected House bills.

JOHN H. LAYNE.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 9402) for the relief of John H. Layne.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

It provides that in the administration of the civil-service laws John H. Layne shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company G, Nineteenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, on the 19th day of December, 1898, by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not quite understand the phraseology of the bill—the words "in the administration of the civil-service laws."

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The bill takes the place of one that was vetoed by the President the other day. It comes with a favorable report from the Committee on Military Affairs. The language of the bill was suggested by The Adjutant-General to cure the difficulty with the former bill which the President vetoed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to object to the bill, but what attracted my attention is the idea that the civil-service laws have anything to do with the military arm of the Government.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Except that under certain conditions ex-soldiers have a preference under the civil-service law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; that explains it.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The bill is so drawn for the purpose of reaching that law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK WYMAN.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 9348) to reimburse Frank Wyman, postmaster at St. Louis, Mo., for embezzlement of money-order funds by clerk at said post-office.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate, for the reimbursement of Frank Wyman, postmaster at St. Louis, Mo., for money-order funds embezzled by Elmer Smith, clerk at Stoddard Station and Station No. 9, of the post-office at St. Louis, Mo., in the years 1904 and 1905, the sum of $4,139.13.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. R. HOLZHEID.

Mr. WARREN. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 706) for the relief of A. R. Holzheid, who sustained loss of property in the San Francisco fire of April, 1906.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay $1,097.50 to Armin R. Holzheid, chief clerk headquarters of the Department of California, on account of loss of personal property burned in the Hotel Renton, No. 712 Sutter street, San Francisco, Cal., in the fire of April 19, 1906, and during his absence attending to his official duties at the Phelan Building and at Fort Mason.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to hear some explanation of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. This is for the relief of the chief clerk at the headquarters of the department of California under General Funston. He left his own personal affairs and effects and worked in the fire which followed the earthquake, and he has no chance for reimbursement for his losses except through Congress. If he had been an enlisted man or officer or other than a civilian employee, the property could be paid for under the general law. But inasmuch as he is a civilian employee this claim should be paid as all others of this kind have been paid. He might have saved his property, the commanding-general stated, had he not obeyed orders and remained at his post of duty.

Mr. BURKETT. Do I understand that it is the case of an enlisted man boarding at a hotel? I do not know about this bill. As I caught the reading, the man lost his personal property in a hotel.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator places too much stress upon the word "hotel." It was his home, where he lived. That was his barrack or quarter for the time. It would have been the same had he been in a private house or in a government building. When a soldier is serving under orders, if he loses his private property while he is doing duty at another point to save government property it can be paid without referring it to Congress.

Mr. BURKETT. The amount involved is a thousand dollars.

Mr. WARREN. It is a little over a thousand dollars.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to have the report read. It seems to me that this is an entirely different kind of a bill from those we have heretofore passed.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator had observed it, we passed three almost together not two weeks ago to cover similar cases.

Mr. BURKETT. In those cases the property was lost on a boat.

Mr. WARREN. They were all of them government employees, who lost their belongings by earthquake or fire while they were doing their duty at some other point.

Mr. BURKETT. I did not observe a provision like this in those bills or I certainly would have raised some question about it. I should like to have the report read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report of the committee at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KEAN. If the bill is going to take up so much time, I think it had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

PROBATION OFFICERS OF COURTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 8905) for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the report on the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted the following report (No. 890) to accompany S. 8905.

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8905) for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The advantages to be derived from the probation system proposed by this bill are clearly set forth in the following extract from the report of the commissioners appointed under the act approved May 26, 1908, "making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes," to investigate the jail, workhouse, etc., in the District of Columbia. (S. Doc. No. 648, 60th Cong., 2d sess.)

We are woefully and shamefully in need of this. Except in the juvenile court, we have nothing of the sort. Some of our judges have entertained such views of the law that they have felt justified in suspending sentence in some cases after a plea of guilty, or conviction by the jury, and have allowed the offender to go on his own or other recognizance. Others of our judges have entertained such views of the law that they have not felt themselves empowered to do this. But even if we accept the view that courts have authority indefinitely to suspend sentences, notwithstanding the express mandate of the legislature that upon conviction a prescribed punishment shall follow, we are still in this position—that there is no officer in whose care the released person can be placed; there is no system for following up his subsequent career and informing the court whether he should be left at liberty or brought back and sent to prison; and there is no system by which he can be warned, guided, encouraged, and assisted to become a good citizen instead of relapsing into crime.

The probation theory does not tend to minimize the offense. It rather magnifies it by restricting the liberty of the offender, and perhaps for a longer time than if he were confined in prison. It takes away many of his rights. The court prescribes what he may do, where he may go, with whom he may associate, and how he shall conduct himself. It requires him to shun evil companions, to abstain from drink, to keep away from the saloon, to work steadily for the support of those who are dependent upon him. One of the chief advantages is that it keeps the probationer in right relation to his family; if imprisoned, he is for a time relieved of the obligation to support them and discovers perhaps that they can get along without him. Probation lays its hands upon him and compels him to support them. That is a condition of his liberty. In this way it tends to reformation without actual imprisonment.

But the system of probation ought not to be considered by itself. It must be considered in contrast with its alternative, imprisonment. Even in institutions where care is taken to separate the beginner in crime from the hardened offender it is not possible entirely to prevent contact. Some contamination is inevitable.

Even at its best, imprisonment is better calculated to develop than to arrest evil tendencies. The man who has been in prison has at least two terrible disadvantages. He comes out with the stigma of the prison, which hinders him from getting employment and heavily handicaps him in his struggle for a living. This stigma attaches to his innocent wife and children as well, who often suffer more than the guilty husband and father. The second is that prison acquaintances constitute an obstacle to a new and respected life. In prison he has come in contact with men who have no desire to reform and who are willing to drag others down to their own level. He can not always avoid them when he meets them out of prison. If they can not persuade him to go with them into new crime they may keep him in constant fear that they will bring to light the past he is trying to live down. From both of these dreadful disadvantages he may be saved by the probation system. It is worth noting that in the competition between imprisonment and probation, probation has been subjected to tests which have never been applied to imprisonment. It has been demanded that probation should prove that it reforms, but it has never been required of imprisonment that it should show that it has reformed. (See Report of Committee on Probation, National Prison Association, Albany, 1906, p. 85.)

Such a system need not be expensive even in the first instance, and such expense as may necessarily attend it will most certainly be overbalanced even in dollars and cents by the saving to the public which will result from the continuance of the probationers in industrial occupation instead of being supported in public institutions and by the permanent transfer of some of them from the criminal to the law-abiding class. The results already achieved by the system as it now obtains in our own juvenile court have demonstrated the correctness of this position.

We do not mean to put our recommendation of a probation system wholly or necessarily upon a mere monetary basis. Neither do we put it on the ground of a humane and philanthropic duty on the part of government toward its disobedient members. We believe there is a safer and an impregnable basis to be found in the prime duty of society to provide for its own welfare and protection. We look upon such a system as a practical method of recruiting the ranks of law keepers from the number of those who would otherwise join the ranks of the enemies of government and order. No reasonable pains or expense should be spared to secure so desirable a result. And when we find, as we do, that the system, so far from proving a financial burden upon the community, actually pays for itself several times over even in the money point of view, we feel that the proposition ought to commend itself to conservative minds of every cast.

Our study of the working of probation systems in other jurisdictions, and, so far as made use of in our own, our reading upon the subject, and the testimony we have received from experts in this branch of penology has left us without a doubt that we should have such a system here.

The District of Columbia ought not to be put off in this matter by reason of any consideration Congress may be giving to the subject of a general probation law for all federal courts. Our situation is peculiar. The offenses dealt with in our courts are not merely such offenses as are cognizable in other federal courts, but include crimes of every character. In this respect, although all offenses committed in the District are offenses against the United States (since there is here no other sovereignty), yet they are, almost all, exactly such offenses as when committed in a State are offenses against the State in distinction from offenses against the United States. Indeed the number of strictly federal prisoners from the District of Columbia is less than 30 out of a total of more than 1,400. Practically, for the purpose of dealing with this problem, we are to be regarded as a State by ourselves. We should have a system adapted to our own special needs.

When sentence is to be pronounced and it appears to the court that the case may be one calling for the use of the probation system, there should be an officer to whom the matter may be referred by the court and by whom the necessary information may be furnished. Such an officer would investigate the circumstances if they were not fully brought out at the trial (and the most frequent use of the system will be in cases where there has been a plea of guilty and no trial at all), the previous record and conduct of the person to be sentenced, and all other facts which ought to be considered in determining the question. That question should be whether there is a reasonable probability that, if he should be given another chance under the restraints and encouragement of the probation system, he would never again break the law, but would ally himself permanently with the forces of order instead of becoming their enemy. If the court is convinced that such is the case, there should be at hand a wise and judicious officer in whose watch care the offender should be placed under prudent restrictions and conditions especially adapted to his case—an officer who will keep in touch with his charge and personify to his mind the kindness and also the severity of the law, an officer to whom reports must be frequently made by the subject, and who will keep the court informed of the subsequent course of the probationer. All this requires careful provisions by statute and a well-planned but not too complex system of procedure.

The question whether the probationer has broken the conditions of his release or should, on the other hand, be finally discharged from probation, must ultimately be decided by the court; but the court may be greatly aided and enlightened by the reports and recommendations of such an officer. The officer should be in closest touch with the court and in all respects subordinate to it. In our opinion, he should be appointed by it, and be subject to discharge whenever the court shall feel a want of confidence justifying such action. While some of such officers ought to devote their whole time to the work and be paid a proper salary, provisions ought to be made for the employment of unpaid volunteer assistants who will devote a portion of their time, or take charge of given cases under the supervision of the chief officer. It is hoped and believed that there will be found not a few tactful and philanthropic citizens, men and women, who will be willing to give a portion of their time to so humane and practical a service. It is easy to see that there would be certain advantages in a common board of probation, having under its observation and subject to its regulating control all probation cases in the District. This we have not overlooked. But we believe that, on the whole, the advantage of having the probation work of each court done under the supervision of, and in fulfillment of the conditions imposed by, the court which is responsible for the case outweigh these advantages, and that each court should appoint and control its own probation officers. The general plan of probation work should, however, be laid down by the statute, leaving to the court only the duty and province of applying the principles adapted to the individual case before it.

RECORDS OF INTERSTATE CARRIERS.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 27894) amending "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend paragraph 7 of section 20 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906, so that the paragraph will read as follows:

PAR. 7. Any person who shall willfully make any false entry in the accounts of any book of accounts or in any record or memoranda kept by a carrier, or who shall willfully destroy, mutilate, alter, or by any other means or device falsify the record of any such account, record, or memoranda, or who shall willfully neglect or fail to make full, true, and correct entries in such accounts, records, or memoranda of all facts and transactions appertaining to the carrier's business, or shall keep any other accounts, records, or memoranda than those prescribed or approved by the commission, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subject, upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, to a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or imprisonment for a term not less than one year nor more than three years, or both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That the commission may, in its discretion, issue orders specifying such operating, accounting, or financial papers, records, books, blanks, tickets, stubs, or documents of carriers which may, after a reasonable time, be destroyed, and prescribing the length of time such books, papers, or documents shall be preserved.

Mr. KEAN. The only change made in the existing law is the proviso at the end of the paragraph. It is recommended unanimously by the Interstate Commerce Commission and is absolutely necessary for the transaction of the public business.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Committee on Revision of the Laws—a joint committee—has proposed to both Houses, and both Houses have favorably acted upon, a change in the system of minimum punishment. They are abolished. I would suggest to the Senator that there is no occasion for a minimum punishment in this case.

Mr. KEAN. There is no change in the minimum punishment. That is in the existing law.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely called attention to it because it will be desirable hereafter to have uniformity in legislation in regard to penalties.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES A. WINDSOR.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5092) to remove the charge of desertion against the military record of James A. Windsor.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion against the military record of James A. Windsor, late of Company C, Eighth Maryland Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge to date from April 9, 1865, but no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADOLPHUS ERWIN WELLS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the bill (S. 9355) for the relief of Adolphus Erwin Wells be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

DAMAGES TO OWNERS OF LIGHTER NO. 128.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8424) for the relief of the owners of lighter No. 128.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that the claim of the owners of lighter No. 128 against the United States for damages caused by collision between such lighter and the United States Quartermaster's Department tug General Joseph E. Johnson in the waters of the East River, harbor of New York, on December 23, 1907, may be sued for in the United States district court for the southern district of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such courts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 20, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 19, 1909.

[Continuation of legislative day of Monday, February 15, 1909.]

The recess having expired, at 11 o'clock a. m., the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DALZELL.

CONSTITUTION ISLAND, NEW YORK.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on House joint resolution 219, to accept the gift of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, New York, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman calls up the conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 219) to accept the gift of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, New York, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following:

"That the United States accepts with gratitude and appreciation the gift of Constitution Island so graciously and patriotically donated to the Government by Miss Anna Bartlett Warner and Mrs. Margaret Olivia Sage; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to receive a deed from Anna Bartlett Warner and Margaret Olivia Sage for the lands constituting Constitution Island, situated on the east side of the Hudson River, in Putnam County, N. Y., opposite the military reservation at West Point: Provided, That the lands so donated and deeded shall be assigned in perpetuity to the use of the United States Military Academy and shall form a part of the military reservation at West Point, N. Y., and no part of the said lands shall ever be used as a public picnic or excursion or amusement ground operated by private enterprise, individual or corporate, for profit: Provided also, That Miss Anna Bartlett Warner shall be permitted to reside on said island in full possession of her dwelling and the gardens and buildings appurtenant thereto during her natural life, and shall continue in the enjoyment of the privileges to which she is now entitled in virtue of her ownership."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

A. B. CAPRON,
JOHN C. CHANEY,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. C. LODGE,
H. A. du PONT,
MURPHY J. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question about this. What changes does this make? It simply changes a plain resolution of thanks to "we accept with gratitude," and what else?

Mr. CHANEY. It simply changes the resolution we passed here by adding the details of the transfer, and describes how it shall be made.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does it not strike out the ordinary verbiage of giving people thanks, and by some kind of legerdemain insert in it that we accept with gratitude?

Mr. CHANEY. The word "thanks" is changed to the word "gratitude."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is just beating the devil around a stump, is it not?

Mr. CHANEY. That has this explanation. Whenever anybody is publicly thanked on the floor of Congress, it authorizes their admission to the floor of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, what is the reason that these women do not have just as much right to the floor of the House under a resolution of thanks as if they had been two men?

Mr. CHANEY. They have every bit as much reason to have the right to the floor, I take it, but that is the idea of the Senate, and therefore we concluded that the expression "with gratitude" would be sufficient to meet all the courtesies between us and the donors. We therefore agreed to that modification.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me it is a matter of peanut legislation.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio, by direction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported the bill (H. R. 28243) to provide for the repair, preservation, and maintenance of public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report (H. Rept. No. 2197), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the bill.

PULP AND PAPER INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present and have read at this time the report of the Select Committee on Pulp and Paper Investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows (H. Rept. No. 2206):

The select committee appointed under House resolution No. 344, to make investigations concerning pulp wood, pulp, and paper, beg leave to report as follows:

Papers are made from a large number of different materials originating from the fibrous portions of plants. The materials used are, generally speaking, in the nature of waste products. Linen and cotton rags, old papers of various sorts, straws, and the products of the forests not commercially profitable for the manufacture of lumber furnish in the main the raw materials from which paper-making pulp is manufactured. Linen rags in the main constitute the material from which the highest grades of paper are made, cotton rags from which lower qualities of paper are made, and different kinds of wood producing different characters of wood pulp out of which lower grades of paper are manufactured. The refuse material, such as straw, from various of the annual farm crops is also used to a large extent in the production of low grades of paper and strawboards.

There are three processes generally used in this country for the production of pulp or fiber from wood. These are the ground-wood process, sulphite process, and the soda process. The cheap production of the lower grades of paper depends largely upon the cheapness of the ground-wood process. Practically only one kind of tree is used to much extent in the ground-wood process, and that is the spruce tree, including its various varieties.

The ground-wood process consists in pressing a 2-foot stick of spruce wood by hydraulic pressure against a revolving grindstone, the power used being entirely water power capable of operating under favorable conditions twenty-four hours per day. By this process about a ton of ground wood can be obtained from a cord of spruce wood.

The sulphite process consists of a chemical treatment of chipped spruce or hemlock wood with sulphurous acid, by which 1,000 to 1,200 pounds of sulphite fiber may be obtained from a cord of wood.

The soda process consists of the chemical treatment of chipped woods of various kinds, including both soft and hard woods, with caustic soda, by which process about the same number of pounds of soda fiber can be produced from a cord of wood as in the case of the sulphite process.

The ground-wood process is by far the cheapest process known for producing pulp from raw material, and, in addition to being the cheapest process, it produces a larger quantity of pulp than can be produced by any other process from raw materials.

The cheaper grades of paper are usually produced by mechanically mixing ground-wood pulp with other kinds of pulp in different degrees of percentage. The ordinary news-print paper is generally produced by the use of about 80 per cent of ground wood and about 20 per cent of sulphite fiber, though the exact percentages differ in different papers and in different mills, it depending somewhat upon the character of the paper to be produced and somewhat upon the character of the ground wood and the sulphite fiber used. Whether other kinds of wood besides spruce can be profitably used for the production of cheap print paper is a matter concerning which there is some difference of opinion, but as a matter of fact practically all of the ground wood manufactured to-day is manufactured by the aid of water power from the different varieties of spruce, with a slight admixture of balsam.

So far as the investigations of the committee can indicate, it would seem that the production of news-print paper or the other very cheap grades of paper are to-day dependent upon the continuation of cheap ground wood produced from spruce trees, and that condition is likely to continue to prevail in the future. The amount of spruce forests throughout the world is, of course, limited. The largest spruce forests are in the United States, Canada, Norway, and Sweden. Spruce is used not only for the production of ground wood, but is also the material generally used for the production of sulphite fiber. Not only is this the case, but the best spruce trees of saw-log size are worth more for manufacture into lumber than they are for manufacture at present prices into pulp or fiber.

The amount of spruce consumed in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains during the year 1907, the last year for which we have complete reports, was about 1,200,000 cords for ground wood, about 1,420,000 cords for sulphite fiber, and about 1,300,000,000 feet b. m., equal to about 2,600,000 cords, for lumber, making a total of about 5,280,000 cords. The amount of spruce imported from Canada into the United States for paper making during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, is stated at about 920,491 cords. The amount of standing spruce in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains is variously estimated, with very rough estimates or guesses, at about 35,000,000,000 feet, equal to about 70,000,000 cords, and the total annual production is estimated at about 770,000,000 feet, or about 1,540,000 cords. The amount of standing spruce in the Dominion of Canada can not to-day be safely estimated with any considerable degree of accuracy based upon our present knowledge.

The cheapness of ground wood depends upon cost and convenience of spruce wood, water power, established mills, and transportation. It is quite evident that there is not to-day enough spruce forests standing in the United States to furnish a future constant supply based upon the present methods of manufacture, the probable needs of the future, and the present methods of forest conservation and waste.

Your committee believe and recommend that both the General Government and the state governments, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions, should endeavor to encourage the production of spruce forests, both by giving a more adequate fire protection and by exempting as far as can be young forests from the ordinary rates of taxation. If adequate protection can be given from the danger of fire losses and young spruce forests can be exempted from taxation, private owners may be led to use lands which would often otherwise run to waste for the production of forests. The benefit to be obtained from continued production of spruce in the future will not go only to those who may own the forests, but the benefits through the cheapness of paper will be received by the entire population. A private owner can not in general afford to grow a crop which will not mature within from fifty to a hundred years, paying taxes each year upon the value of the ground and the crop and running the risk all the time of having his entire crop swept away by a forest fire started without his fault and against which his efforts are in vain. There should be organized fire protection in every considerable forest in the United States.

It would be quite possible for the National Government to start large tracts of young spruce forest. If our country should be shut off from the utilization of its present water powers and mills in grinding spruce wood imported from Canada, it would, we think, be the duty of the General Government or of the different state governments to organize, own, protect, and control large areas of young spruce forests, ready to furnish an adequate supply of spruce wood when the existing forests shall have in the main been exhausted.

It is highly probable, however, that there exists sufficient spruce forests and spruce forest lands in the United States and Canada which, if protected by any reasonable conservation and reproduction methods, will furnish a sufficient supply of spruce wood for paper making for all time to come.

We believe and recommend that the tariff on ground wood coming into the United States be removed and ground wood admitted free under certain conditions. Practically, the question relates in the main to our relations with Canada. In some of the provinces of Canada pulp wood can not now be exported from the Dominion if cut upon the public lands, and in other provinces there is a higher charge for pulp wood cut upon the public lands if such pulp wood is to be exported. We, therefore, recommend that in revising the tariff there be inserted the following schedule:

"Mechanically ground wood pulp, one-twelfth of 1 cent per pound, dry weight: Provided, however, That mechanically ground wood pulp shall be admitted free of duty from any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government which does not forbid or restrict the exportation of or impose any export duty, export license fee, or other export charge of any kind whatsoever, either directly or indirectly (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee, or otherwise), upon mechanically ground wood pulp or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp.

"Chemical wood pulp, unbleached, one-sixth of 1 cent per pound, dry weight; bleached, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound, dry weight: Provided, That if any country, dependency, or province shall impose an export duty or other export charge of any kind whatsoever, either directly or indirectly, on pulp wood exported to the United States, the amount of such export duty or other export charge shall be added as an additional duty to the duties herein imposed upon wood pulp when imported from such country, dependency, or province."

It can not be expected that Canada or its provinces will remove the present discriminations as to the exportation of pulp wood to the United States or cease from adding additional discriminations unless we also lessen the tariff on the cheap paper which is made mainly from spruce wood.

The United States is amply able to protect its future supply of cheap paper and its future supply of spruce wood by undertaking the production of new spruce forests and the conservation and reproduction of existing spruce forests, but a very large proportion of the spruce forests of Canada, consisting of small, black spruce timber, is practically valueless for manufacture into lumber and profitable to cut only for the manufacture of ground wood and cheap paper. It would seem desirable, both for our own country generally, for the pulp and paper mills of our country now largely dependent upon the Canadian pulp-wood supply, as well as as a matter of neighborly courtesy and interest, if we endeavor to utilize in our country with its great reading population those Canadian forests of spruce which if shut out of our country would be of little value; and we believe and recommend that in the long run it will be mutually profitable, both to the publishers and other users of cheap paper in the United States, to the mills producing print paper, to the owners of American spruce forests, to the owners of the Canadian spruce forests, and to the mutual good feeling and respect of our two countries, if a considerable reduction be made in the tariff on the cheaper grades of print paper, dependent, however, upon receiving from Canada (so far as the supply comes from her) the removal of all discriminations now existing in that country or its provinces against the exportation of pulp wood into the United States and the prevention of future discriminations in the exportation of either ground wood or paper. We therefore recommend that in the revision of the tariff the following schedule be inserted:

"Printing paper, unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for newspaper and books, valued at not above 2½ cents per pound, one-tenth of 1 cent per pound; valued above 2½ cents and not above 2½ cents per pound, two-tenths of 1 cent per pound; valued above 2½ cents per pound and not above 3 cents per pound, five-tenths of 1 cent per pound; valued above 3 cents and not above 4 cents per pound, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound; valued above 4 cents and not above 5 cents per pound, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound; valued above 5 cents per pound, 15 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That if any country, dependency, or province shall impose an export duty or other export charge of any kind whatsoever upon pulp wood, wood pulp, or printing paper, exported to the United States, or if any country, dependency, or province forbids or restricts the exportation of pulp wood, wood pulp, or paper to the United States in any way there shall be imposed upon printing paper, when imported from such country, dependency, or province, an additional duty of two-tenths of 1 cent per pound, if valued at 2½ cents per pound or less, and in addition thereto the amount of the export duty or other export charge imposed by such country, dependency, or province upon the printing paper imported from such country into the United States."

The present tariff on print paper valued at 2 cents per pound or less is three-tenths of 1 cent a pound; valued at over 2 cents a pound and not over 2½ cents a pound, four-tenths of 1 cent a pound. The schedule we propose is one-tenth of 1 cent a pound on paper valued at not over 2¼ cents a pound, and two-tenths of 1 cent a pound on paper valued above 2¼ cents and not above 2½ cents per pound. This, in the main, is a reduction in the tariff on ordinary news print paper from $6 a ton to $2 per ton.

The retention of a duty of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound, as suggested, is justified both on the principles of a tariff for revenue and a tariff for protection. It is not desirable to strike down or injure the present paper mills in the United States. To do so would not only be very expensive to the present paper-mill owners and employees, but would probably in the future enhance the cost and price of paper. The duty proposed is about equal to the additional cost of labor in the United States and the additional cost of materials used by the paper mills caused by other tariff provisions.

The committee also recommend that the Bureau of Plant Industry make investigations in the procurement and breeding of annual and perennial plants in the endeavor to find either some new plant or some existing plant which through breeding to that end can be profitably used for the commercial manufacture of paper, not believing, however, that it is possible to find or produce any annual or perennial plant which can successfully compete with spruce ground wood in the production of the cheaper grades of print paper. We recommend also that the Forest Service investigate the question of the production of ground wood and sulphite fiber from other kinds of wood than those now used. It is not unlikely, in our opinion, that by a difference in the mechanical treatment or by some other slight treatment it will be possible to successfully manufacture a good cheap grade of news printing paper by the ground-wood process from other than spruce.

That there is an enormous waste in the forests is conceded by everybody familiar with the facts. Much of what would otherwise be waste is now absorbed in pulp manufacture. A large proportion of the spruce wood used in the United States for ground wood would be valueless if not so used, and the same is true to a much greater degree in the case of woods used for sulphite and soda fiber. In many places in the Eastern and Southeastern States, and in some cases in Western States, practically all of the waste from lumbering is saved and used in the production of either sulphite or soda fiber. This saving should be encouraged in every way practicable. In some of the eastern mills where the trees are cut into saw logs and manufactured into lumber the slabs and edgings, limbs and tops, in the proper kinds of wood, are used in the manufacture of sulphite, and the same is true of other kinds of wood which are manufactured into soda fiber. The manufacture of sulphite and soda from fibers is not overly profitable under existing conditions, and as the main competition with these products is from mills in Europe, where the labor is much cheaper and many of the articles which are used in the processes are much cheaper, we do not think that the present rate of duty on chemical pulp, consisting, in the main, of sulphite and soda fiber, and also a sulphate fiber, should be disturbed, and in the recommendation we have made above we have recommended that the existing rates of duty upon chemical pulp should not be disturbed as they now exist.

Your committee has taken a vast amount of testimony, which is acknowledged to be of great benefit in the pulp and paper trade. We have collected a large amount of information which, both at present and in the future, will prove of immense service to those who are interested in the use or production of pulp or paper. Your committee personally has visited and inspected carefully a large number of pulp and paper mills, have inspected and examined forests, both in the United States and in Canada, have given long study to the woods used, have considered every phase of the subject concerning which information was available, and have reached the conclusions hereinabove stated. It is not practicable, or, in the opinion of your committee, necessary for the committee in this report to set forth in detail or even in a general way the results of the information obtained.

The committee has obtained from a large number of newspaper publishers of the United States schedules showing the cost to them of paper through a series of years, which schedules have been tabulated and published in the committee's hearings.

The committee has also obtained schedules from the pulp and paper manufacturers of the United States, giving information concerning the capital invested, the cost of production, the percentage of cost paid in wages, the selling price of the articles produced, the quantity of production, etc., which schedules have been reduced to general tabulations and the tabulations published in the hearings.

The committee has also carefully investigated, through schedules and through the aid of the Department of Labor, the percentage of wages going into the cost of production of pulp and paper and the cost of labor per unit both for pulp and paper, including the cost from the forest to the finished product, all of which tables are published in the hearings.

The committee has also investigated, through statements obtained from manufacturers in Canada and through personal investigation by the Department of Labor, the wage cost in Canadian mills. The committee has also obtained information concerning the wage cost and cost of production in Sweden. The committee has also obtained, through the Treasury Department, full information as to the importations of pulp wood, wood pulp, and print paper into the United States from different places and at different ports of entry. The committee has also obtained full and complete information as to the exportation and importation of paper and paper-making materials from and to the different countries of the world. All of this information has been published in the hearings of the committee, comprising between 3,000 and 4,000 pages of printed testimony, and all of which has been carefully and conscientiously considered by the committee in forming its decision.

The members of your committee, when appointed, had no special or general knowledge of the subject. They have labored diligently and as effectively as they could. The effort of your committee has been to arrive at facts and just conclusions, regardless of personal bias or partisan considerations. The recommendations which the committee present are the unanimous views of the entire membership of the committee. In making its report to the House, the committee begs leave to express its thanks and appreciation for the services rendered to the committee by the President, by the State Department, by the Census Office, by the Bureau of Statistics, by the Bureau of Corporations, by the Bureau of Labor, by the Forest Service, and by the Bureau of Plant Industry. We also beg to acknowledge the courtesy of information freely and voluntarily furnished by many of the mill owners and by the American Pulp and Paper Association, as well as the American Publishers' Association, and the chairman of its committee on paper.

While your committee does not feel that it has exhausted the subject it can only say it has done as well as its members knew how.

Your committee begs leave to state that unless otherwise directed by the House it will continue and complete the work of publishing and indexing the tabulations prepared and the evidence taken by the committee.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JAMES R. MANN.
JAMES M. MILLER.
WILLIAM H. STAFFORD.
HENRY T. BANNON.
THETUS W. SIMS.
WILLIAM H. RYAN.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the report be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the report be printed as a House document and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I wish to say a word, Mr. Speaker. In presenting this report, which is a unanimous report of the committee, I only wish to say that in our opinion it will meet with the approval of both the Republican and Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means, with the approval of the publishers of the country interested in the subject on one hand and of the mill owners and paper manufacturers on the other hand; that it will meet with the approval generally of the people of the United States on one side of the line and of the people of the Dominion of Canada on the other side of the line.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I notice in this report you extend the specific rates on paper down to the last analysis and then put an ad valorem rate of 15 per cent. As it is necessary under the clause that you recommend to ascertain the value of the product in any event to place the specific rate, why has not your committee recommended an ad valorem rate all the way through?

Mr. MANN. The question is quite proper. On the higher grades of paper the committee have taken, so far as rates of duty are concerned, simply the existing rates of duty in making the paragraph without intending to express any decided opinion concerning the tariff upon those papers. Nothing has been brought to our attention asking or warranting a change in the tariff on those grades of paper.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I wanted to bring out as to whether this committee specifically considered the question of whether it was wiser to levy this duty as a specific rate or as an ad valorem rate all the way through.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman frankly we did not consider that. We considered that was a question to be determined by the committee making up the tariff bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, as a minority member of this committee I wish to state that the investigation has been just as full as hard work could make it, hard work mentally and physically and for many months' duration. I want to say on behalf of the chairman [Mr. MANN], the gentleman from Illinois, that in making this investigation so far as it was possible to determine from the manner of the investigation I could not tell whether he was a protectionist or a free trader, whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, because he has strived to get at the facts and let the facts speak for themselves. I want to say on the part of those who represent the idea and contention for lower duties on pulp and paper, that we feel that we have gained a great victory. Pulp will now come in free, provided Canada does not bar it by her own act. The duty on newsprint paper used in this country has been reduced by this recommendation, if adopted by the Committee on Ways and Means, 66⅔ per cent, from $6 a ton to $2 a ton which does not exceed 5 per cent ad valorem, which is a very reasonable revenue tariff. The duty left on chemical fibers and paper made from them is nothing more than a reasonable revenue duty, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the great Committee on Ways and Means, of which the present occupant of the chair is a leading member, will be enabled to see this matter as we have. We have tried to do justice to all interests and we feel if our recommendations are adopted that it is about the best possible solution which can be made. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the great value of a unanimous report, and I think this is a report that any Democrat can indorse and which I hope no Republican or protectionist will repudiate. [Applause.]

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE MERCHANDISE WITHOUT APPRAISEMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (H. R. 24140) extending the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, concerning the transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments to the bill that has just been read.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear what the gentleman said.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington moved that the House disagree to the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 25155) to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act to temporarily provide for the administration of the affairs of the civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the reason for giving this power to change the date?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The reason is this: I will preface my answer by saying that the legislation is asked for by both houses of the Philippine legislature, which, the gentleman from Missouri knows, includes the commission, and by both the Resident Commissioners of the Philippines in this country. The organic act of July 1, 1902, fixed the date for the first meeting and all subsequent annual meetings of the Philippine legislature as the first Monday in February. It has been ascertained that the weather following that date is apt to be very hot and unpleasant for members of the commission and also for members of the lower house. They ask, therefore, that the law be amended so that the legislature may fix some other day than the first Monday in February for the beginning of the regular annual sessions. Until they do so fix it, the date fixed by the law of July 1, 1902, will remain the date for the beginning of the annual sessions. The Senate amendments do not at all change the effect of the House bill, but simply strike out the preamble and put one of the provisos in another place, but the legal effect is the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ADOLPHUS ERWIN WELLS.

The SPEAKER. The House, by concurrent resolution, authorized the Speaker to vacate his signature to the bill (H. R. 10752) to correct the military record of Adolphus Erwin Wells, which the Speaker now does.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a letter from the chairman of the Printing Investigating Commission, transmitting a report on the work of the commission and making certain recommendations in relation to the revision, codification, and amendment of the laws relating to the public printing and binding. The report is accompanied by a draft of a bill embodying the recommendations of the commission, and I ask that the report and the bill be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire that to be printed as a public document?

Mr. LANDIS. I do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not hear what the gentleman's desire was.

Mr. LANDIS. To have printed a report from the chairman of the Printing Investigation Commission.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much of a report is it?

Mr. LANDIS. Oh, it is a report of possibly 15 or 16 pages.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection; but there has been a great deal of printing done that ought not to be done.

Mr. LANDIS. This report will pay its way all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The report will be printed (H. Doc. No. 1464) and referred to the Committee on Printing.

BRIDGE OVER THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, KEITHSBURG, ILL.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 7829.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 7829) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Keithsburg, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road," approved April 26, 1882.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act approved April 26, 1882, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Keithsburg, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road, be, and is hereby, so amended as to permit, in rebuilding and in relocating the bridge, the construction of a lift draw span of not less than 220 feet in the clear in place of the existing swing draw span having two openings each 160 feet in the clear; and also to permit the adjoining span to be 205 feet in length instead of 250: Provided, That the bridge shall be rebuilt in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable streams," approved March 23, 1906: And provided further, That the right reserved in section 6 of said act is also reserved as to this amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

SITTINGS OF UNITED STATES COURTS AT YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 27139, with an amendment, which is a substitute for the original bill. I ask that the substitute be read instead of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 27139) to provide for the sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the northern district of Ohio at the city of Youngstown, in said district.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That from and after the passage of this act there shall be held at the city of Youngstown, in the northern district of Ohio, a term of both the circuit and district courts of said district on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in March of each year.

SEC. 2. That grand and petit jurors summoned for service at the terms of either of the courts aforesaid to be held at the city of Cleveland, may, if, in the opinion of the judge holding court in said division, the public convenience requires it, be directed to serve also at the term then being held, or herein authorized to be then held, at the city of Youngstown.

SEC. 3. That prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in any part of the eastern division of said district shall be cognizable at the terms aforesaid of either of the said courts having jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 4. That any judge of the United States holding court in the eastern division of the northern district of Ohio in pursuance of existing laws may cause to be held, at the city of Youngstown, the trial of any suit now pending or hereafter brought in the court wherein he shall be so, as aforesaid, sitting.

SEC. 5. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such consistency, but not otherwise.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARLIN. What does the substitute do?

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. The substitute makes no change save in the date, and that at the suggestion of the district judge sitting in that district.

Mr. CARLIN. Has the committee ever considered the substitute?

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. They have not had a meeting since the suggestions have been made.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that there is a misprint in the 15th line of the second page. The word "consistency" should be "inconsistency."

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. I ask leave that the error may be corrected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the last line of the proposed amendment change the word "consistency" to "inconsistency."

Mr. KIMBALL. I would like to ask the gentleman the purpose of having this migratory, circulating grand jury of this court, to be carried from Cleveland down to Youngstown at the option of the judge.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Both Cleveland and Youngstown are in the same district, and it will not be necessary to have grand juries in more than one place. The grand jury would be impaneled to inquire into offenses for the whole district, and the purpose of providing that a jury could be brought from Cleveland to Youngstown was for the reason that it is not contemplated to have a deputy clerk at Youngstown.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendment to the substitute was then agreed to.

The substitute as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 26305. An act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 9316. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish a condemned cannon to the State of Delaware;

S. 9017. An act for the establishment of a subport of entry at Ranier, Minn.;

S. 8192. An act permitting Salmon M. Allen to make a second homestead entry; and

S. R. 132. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to donate two condemned cannon to the city of Wheeling, W. Va.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 9316. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish a condemned cannon to the State of Delaware—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 8192. An act permitting Salmon M. Allen to make a second homestead entry—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 8376. An act providing for the reappraisement of unsold lots in town sites on reclamation projects, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

S. R. 132. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to donate two condemned cannon to the city of Wheeling, W. Va.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ALASKA CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 27068) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Central Railway, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for filing the map of definite location of the Alaska Central Railway, as required by the provisions of chapter 299 of the Laws of the United States, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for the right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1898, be, and the same is hereby, extended for three years from the date of the passage of this act, and that the time for completion of said Alaska Central Railway be, and the same is hereby, extended for three years from the expiration of the period provided for in the act entitled "An act to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Central Railway, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906.

Mr. WATSON. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask whether this is the bill that has been under consideration before the Committee on the Territories?

Mr. LLOYD. It is not the bill which the gentleman has in mind. It is an entirely different bill.

Mr. WATSON. Is it reported favorably by the committee?

Mr. LLOYD. Unanimously reported. It does not conflict with any other road at all.

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, is this the bill we heard so much about a few days ago, where they had done nothing, although their charter was granted several years ago?

Mr. LLOYD. Oh, no; it is an entirely different bill.

Mr. REEDER. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask a question. I should like to know how much time this road had for the commencement of work when the first bill was passed.

Mr. LLOYD. My recollection is that they began work about five years ago.

Mr. REEDER. They have already begun it?

Mr. LLOYD. Oh, yes. They have 53 miles of road in actual operation. They have expended over $4,000,000.

Mr. REEDER. And they want time to complete the road?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on the Territories, was agreed to:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to affect any lawfully accrued rights.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

TUGBOATS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23468) to amend sections 11 and 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railway Company, in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," approved February 12, 1901.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 11 and 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railway Company, in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," approved February 12, 1901, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to require all tugboats using the Potomac River at the place or places where the same is spanned by the two certain bridges in said act provided for, namely, the new railway bridge and the new highway bridge, to equip and fit, not later than July 1, 1909, all smokestacks thereof or other vertical projections with hinges or other mechanical device so as to permit the same to be lowered to the level of the top of the pilot house of such boats: Provided, That all such tugboats the pilot house of which will not pass under such bridges may be exempted from the operations of the provisions hereof, upon application made to the Secretary of War and his approval thereof; Provided further, That all tugboats hereafter built or purchased, or not now actually engaged in business on the Potomac River at the places aforesaid, must have their dimensions approved by the Secretary of War before being permitted to use and operate the same on the Potomac River at the places above mentioned: And provided further, That the provisions hereof shall not apply to such tugboats as may, by reason of their structure, be able to pass under said two bridges, respectively, without the necessity of operating the draws thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CERTAIN LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill (S. 8048) to withdraw from settlement and entry certain lands in the State of California, and to consider the same in the House at the present time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of the public lands in section 8, township 1 south, range 2 west, and in sections 2, 4, 8, 10, and 12, in township 1 south, range 3 west, San Bernardino base and meridian, in the State of California, are hereby withdrawn from settlement and entry and reserved for the purpose of aiding in the conservation of the waters of the San Bernardino Valley: Provided, That this act shall not defeat any vested right which has attached under any pending entry or location.

SEC. 2. That any individual or association of individuals or any company or corporation may have the right, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to conduct to said lands and to distribute over them any flood or waste waters not otherwise appropriated, and to build the necessary engineering works for this purpose, to the end that said flood or waste waters may sink into the sands and gravels of said lands, thereby increasing and replenishing the supply of underground waters in the San Bernardino Valley.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is this by unanimous consent?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask a question.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I reserve it, too. Is this the land that there has been a squabble about between Secretary Garfield and certain parties out there?

Mr. SMITH of California. A certain squabble—I know nothing of the kind.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Hetch Hetchy Valley.

Mr. SMITH of California. Oh, no; it is at least 600 miles from there. This is near Redlands, Cal., in the orange district. The land referred to lies in the wash of the river bed, where nothing whatever grows, and the irrigators in that vicinity desire to have it withdrawn from entry so that they may spread the flood water of the river out over it in the spring and flood the seams of the earth with water, thinking that it will benefit the flowing wells in the valley below, and by striking bed rock possibly come back into the stream some miles below and be diverted into the canals.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much land is involved?

Mr. SMITH of California. A fraction of a number of sections.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. About how much?

Mr. SMITH of California. I am coming to that; I think altogether it may be 1,000 acres.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the land good for anything?

Mr. SMITH of California. Absolutely worthless.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there any gold in it?

Mr. SMITH of California. If there is any there you may have it. We want to flood it. The adjacent land is worth several hundred dollars per acre if satisfactory for cultivation. This land has never been taken up from the Government, so the gentleman will understand that it must be exceedingly worthless for agricultural purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, what is the regular order to-day?

The SPEAKER. In the absence of any motion on a preferred bill the regular order would be the call of committees.

Mr. SIMS. This being Friday, is not the regular order the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar reported by the Committee on War Claims?

The SPEAKER. This is the legislative day of Monday.

Mr. SIMS. I know, as a matter of fact, having counted the days on the calendar, that this is Friday, and therefore I wish to make a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, this is the legislative day of Monday. It is true that this is Friday on the calendar made by the sun, but by the Journal of the House it is Monday. I read from the Digest:

In the contemplation of the rules and special orders of the House, a day is the legislative day and not a calendar day, and the two are not always the same.

Mr. SIMS. So far as the rule goes I agree with the Speaker, but I ask recognition to make the motion above stated, even if it is the legislative day of Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to make a motion.

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection to making it without unanimous consent, if the Speaker will recognize me for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker could recognize the gentleman, but, after all, a single objection would be fatal, and this is only another way of putting it.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to make a motion to take the sense of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker would be giving recognition outside of the rules and the practice of the House.

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection to that. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. And that being the case, the Speaker would not be justified in recognizing the gentleman against the rules. That would be equivalent to the gentleman from Tennessee and the Speaker making a new rule, which is for the majority of the House to make.

Mr. SIMS. I will make no point of order if the Speaker will do that.

The SPEAKER. Precisely. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to make the motion referred to.

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. SIMS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. If the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, made by the gentleman from Iowa, is voted down, then will it be in order to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider bills reported from the Committee on War Claims?

The SPEAKER. Except by unanimous consent, that motion would not be in order, because the rule fixes the order of business, and if the Speaker's table was clear it would be the call of committees.

Mr. SIMS. Will it be in order to make a motion to suspend the rules to consider claims from the Committee on War Claims?

The SPEAKER. That is one of the few cases where the Speaker has a discretion as to recognition——

Mr. SIMS. Then I know I will get it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. And the Speaker must exercise that discretion with a view to the public business and the will of the House. He would be, indeed, a very courageous Speaker——

Mr. SIMS. We have that character of Speaker. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER (continuing). Who would recognize a motion to make a rule or change a rule on the request of one Member unless there was something in the temper of the House as to the consideration of business that the Speaker would feel that a majority of the House, in the condition that the House was in, desired the recognition to be given; so that the Speaker, under the circumstances, would decline to recognize the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. I will ask but one more question. In case the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is voted down, no doubt the Speaker will take that as evidence of the temper of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker would take that as the temper of the House on that motion, and then motions in order would be recognized, or the regular order of business.

Mr. SIMS. In order to get the temper of the House, I ask that the motion be voted down.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CURRIER. We have had one call of committees in this legislative day. Can we have another before adjournment?

The SPEAKER. There is one motion that would take precedence of a call of committees to-day. That would be a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but in the absence of such a motion then a call of committees under the rules and practice would be in order.

Mr. CURRIER. Two on the same legislative day?

The SPEAKER. Yes; if the House does not desire to go on to the next order of business, which would be to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When the rule says that certain Fridays shall be set apart for the consideration of private claims, do not the rules contemplate a calendar day instead of what has come to be called a "legislative day?"

The SPEAKER. The Chair just read the precedent, and there are several of them, that a legislative day is contemplated by the rules of the House. Now, then, the rules of the House are what they state and are construed to be. Necessarily in parliamentary practice the rules of the House in one sense are like unto the construction of law by the courts, and these constructions of the rules have not been arbitrarily made by the Speaker, but it is now and always has been in the power of the House to proceed under the rules that the House has made—that is, for a majority to proceed, not one man. The House has free rein under the rules that it has adopted.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Another parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. If that ruling of the Chair is correct, then the only way for the House to get rid of last Monday as a legislative day clear up until noon of the 4th of March is when the motion is made to take a recess to vote it down and adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Absolutely, and that again depends upon the will of a majority of the House.

Mr. MANN. You can move to adjourn now.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that we now adjourn until 12.30 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman can not move to adjourn to that time, and I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia, is not in order, because by a standing order of the House we meet at 12 o'clock, and if we adjourn we adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. CARLIN. I move that standing order be set aside and that we adjourn now until 12.30 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That is not a motion in order under the rules.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Iowa by substituting that we go into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not amend a privileged motion by a nonprivileged motion. That is doing indirectly what can not be done directly under the rules. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. To meet to-morrow noon.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. If the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky should prevail and the House adjourn until to-morrow, would to-morrow be Tuesday or Friday? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It would be neither.

Mr. GARRETT. I mean Saturday.

The SPEAKER. To-morrow would be the calendar day of Saturday and the legislative day of Saturday.

Mr. SIMS. And Friday would be gone?

The SPEAKER. Friday would be gone so far as the legislative day is concerned.

Mr. MACON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MACON. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KIMBALL] will couple with his motion to adjourn that the clock be set back fifteen minutes and we then adjourn, will it not be Friday?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has asked the question——

Mr. MANN. It would take more than fifteen minutes to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The sun was at one time stopped by Joshua [laughter], or, rather, by the Lord at Joshua's request. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to adjourn.

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. MACON. In response to what the Chair has said, permit me to say that I have seen the House set the clock back and proceed with its work.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never seen the House set the clock back. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Arkansas is too watchful.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The question was taken.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays, in order to see who wants war claims considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Seventeen gentlemen have arisen. Those opposed to ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-two gentlemen have arisen. The yeas and nays are refused. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill (H. R. 27054), with Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, "the child of to-day is the Nation's ruler of to-morrow." The children of the present are the citizens of the future. Our civilization advances in exact proportion to that which we do to put the children upon a plane a little higher than that on which their parents stood. It is the glory of our civilization that we are more and more considering the welfare of the child. No taxes are levied, no public money is spent, with greater popular approval than the vast sums contributed for education by the States, while private benevolence directed to the same end is always warmly applauded. But there are many problems of child life outside of the educational problem, questions that call for authoritative answers, for a proper understanding of which every possible facility should be afforded. It is therefore proposed to establish in the Department of the Interior a children's bureau.

Each year Congress produces masses of legislation upon subjects too extended to enumerate. Of all subjects to be considered, can one be found in a representative government so important as the individual—the citizen on whose intelligence and mental and moral health the whole nation rests? The problem of our children is one that can no longer be treated by guesswork, or by casual movements inspired by local feeling and directed perhaps by warm hearts, but too often by untrained vision. The study of children is becoming a science, and its students need information and data for analysis. To-day the most vital questions affecting our children are decided on a lack of information that in no other subject would for a moment be tolerated.

It is to urge upon Congress as a remedy for present conditions the importance of some such action as the creation of this children's bureau that I speak to-day.

OBJECTS OF THE BILL.

The objects of the bill are stated clearly in the bill itself. I quote from section 2:

The said bureau shall investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, physical degeneracy, orphanage, juvenile delinquency and juvenile courts, desertion and illegitimacy, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children of the working classes, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories, and such other facts as have a bearing upon the health, efficiency, character, and training of children. The chief of said bureau shall from time to time publish the results of these investigations.

The bureau, upon the principle of first aid to the injured, shall, in brief, collect such facts as have a bearing upon the health, efficiency, and character of the children of the Nation, our future citizens and rulers.

NATIONAL SUPPORT OF THE BILL.

In advocating this measure its advocates in this House have a unanimity of intelligent support, impressive as it is rare, in the advocacy of national measures of this character.

The President has recently sent to Congress a message urging the establishment of this bureau. The Secretary of the Interior has written a letter earnestly advising that this action be taken. Several national organizations which have been formed for the purpose of dealing with the various classes of unfortunate children have been advocating the passage of a bill similar to this for several years. There assembled recently in Washington a conference on the subject of dependent children, representing nearly every State in the Union and every important religious body, without distinction of creed. That conference unanimously indorsed this bill, recognizing the limited knowledge even of those who have been studying this particular problem, and recognizing also that the National Government is the only agency that can effectively organize such a bureau of information as is desired. The names of the members of this conference and the various organizations they represent in the care of children are so significant and stand out as so vitally in touch with the problem of children's care that I invite the attention of this body to these names.[a]

These men and women, actively engaged in philanthropic work, ask us to save the waste of means and energy involved in the present absence of authoritative knowledge by creating the bureau that is proposed. Several of these advocates of the cause of the children appeared before the committees of the House and Senate, to which this bill was referred, both these committees having made a favorable report on the bill. Their arguments before these committees are irresistible as to the need for such a bureau, and a perusal of the hearings can not fail to convince the most skeptical that there is a deeply appreciated need for some authoritative source of information. Moreover, the House committee, desiring to have all possible knowledge of the subject at their disposal, summoned Mr. North, Director of the Census Bureau; Mr. Neill, Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor; and Mr. Brown, Commissioner of the Bureau of Education, before them, to learn whether the work here contemplated could be done as effectively, or could be done at all, through existing agencies. I desire to show from extracts of their testimony that they were unanimous in saying that there would be no duplication of work now being done, although, of course, much could be accomplished by the cooperation of the present agencies with the proposed Bureau of Children.

Director North, of the Census Bureau, said:

"The Census Office is a purely statistical office. Its function is to collect the cold-blooded facts and analyze and interpret them, and leave to the public at large the duty of drawing the ethical or moral or industrial conclusions which those facts convey. I feel very strongly that if any legislation is enacted which in any way modifies the function of the Census Office in that regard it will be highly detrimental to the work of the office. Such statistics as the bureau finds it necessary to collect the Census Office would collect for it. We do now collect statistics for a number of the bureaus of the Government, and collect them in the way that they want them collected. That is the general position of the Census Office on that proposition, and I believe it is a position which is scientifically correct; that it is a position which it is necessary for the office to maintain if it is not to lose its standing as a purely statistical bureau. We do not want to divert our energies into studies of physical degeneracy, of orphanage, of juvenile delinquency and juvenile courts, and all that class of questions, which are not statistical questions."

Commissioner Neill, of the Bureau of Labor, stated on the same proposition:

"I do not feel at all, Mr. Chairman, that any of this work is a duplication of the work we are doing, and it would be handled in a different way. There are only two or three things that we would touch at all, and then we would handle them in a way entirely different. I do not believe you could get the same quality of ability to do this work under the Bureau of Labor as you could if it was under an independent bureau. I think that is a point that should be considered in the concentration of government work; that is something that should be kept in view. The concentration, in my judgment, is certain to lead to a less high-grade quality of work.

"Question. You believe, then, the most practical thing and the most advisable thing is to establish a bureau?

"Mr. NEILL. Unquestionably. * * * I do not believe if the Government is going to spend money at all in this particular line, that it will be economical or that we shall get the best results if it attempts to simply make use to a limited extent of existing organizations, no one of which, so far as I know, is equipped or could equip itself without somewhat departing from its proper line of work, to study these things as thoroughly and as fundamentally as they ought to be studied."

Commissioner Brown, of the Bureau of Education, upon the same question said:

"From the point of those of us who are engaged in educational work these purposes are of the utmost importance, and it seems to us that if we are to make proper provision for the future industrial efficiency of this country or its efficiency along all social lines, it will be necessary that such investigations as those that are contemplated in this bill should be undertaken with the utmost care. There is, then, on the part of those who are connected with the Bureau of Education and those with whom the Bureau of Education has most to do, a very strong sense of the importance of this measure. It certainly looks to the conservation of the character of our people in ways in which I am convinced we shall have to look to it with the utmost care within these coming years.

"Referring now more particularly to this bill, I should say that for such work as the Bureau of Education has to do it is important that such work as is here defined should be done somewhere. We can not deal properly with the large questions of the education of children without a more detailed and accurate knowledge than we now possess as to the actual conditions surrounding the child life of the country, such conditions as are referred to in this bill.

"I think the best way to accomplish this end is by the passage of such a bill as this and the establishment of a separate bureau."

OPERATION OF THE CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

In its operation this bureau would concern itself chiefly with infant mortality, diseases of children, child labor, and infant delinquency. Take the question of infant mortality, for example, a problem that relates to the very existence of children after they are brought into the world.

The Census Bureau reports a very low rate of infant mortality for some communities; a very high rate for others. Now, it is not the business of the Census Office to inquire into the causes of a relatively high or low death rate for infants. It is true that some communities, if the facts happened to come to their knowledge, might institute such inquiries. It might be done more or less scientifically by local agencies. But other communities would not be able to do that. So it would be the duty of this children's bureau to make an intensive study in certain selected localities for the purpose of ascertaining why so many infants died in some localities and so few in others. The facts thus ascertained and the remedy suggested for such conditions as resulted in a high rate of infant mortality would be published and through government bulletins would be at the service of a thousand communities with similar conditions, with the result, reasonably to be expected, of the saving of thousands of infant lives. So that this proposition, at this small amount of expenditure, is seen to be a question of life and death. I should not like to be in the position of those opposing such a life-saving institution without excellent reasons that I could render at the bar of conscience.

Consider not only the struggle of the healthy to survive, but the awful misfortunes of the afflicted children of the various types. Take the case of the blind children. The chairman of the New York Association for the Blind, Mr. Sherman, writes:

It is an established fact that a large percentage of blindness is due to the lack of simple, preventive, medical treatment of the eyes of infants. This neglect is due almost wholly to ignorance. If the proper data and information were collected and disseminated by a national bureau, the public ignorance of this subject would be dispelled and health officials aroused to proper action, and thereby much unnecessary blindness prevented, with its consequent deprivations and the distress of caring for blind children; and children with diseased eyes are defective owing to the lack of statistical data and of a proper dissemination of information.

Think of the truth and pathos, as applied to many of our children, of Mrs. Browning's words:

"It is good when it happens,"
Say the children,
"That we die before our time."

A government bulletin, prepared by some medical expert of long experience, could be sent into every quarter of the Nation, just as our agricultural bulletins are sent out. Our blind asylums are now full of children, supported at great expense to the States and to private philanthropy, who could have been saved their fate in early infancy, except for the general ignorance on this subject. How they must wish that there had been knowledge instead of ignorance. But hundreds of children are being born every year who will not be saved from blindness without a proper knowledge of causes and the remedies. Let not future generations curse us for our neglect or indifference as to their fate! Let us not postpone the organization of a government bureau to give this needed information to our people. Take the subject of the occupational diseases and accidents to children. Surely it is important for us to know, as we do not know now, whether certain occupations in which grown people may work with impunity are in themselves harmful for children. I see it is asserted in one of the hearings before the House committee that in one occupation the accidents to children were 400 per cent more in number than the accidents to adult workers.

The State of Michigan is one out of the five States which give the ages of those who are injured in accidents, and its last report shows that 1,100 per cent more accidents occurred to children 16 years of age and under, who came under the occupations reported, than occurred to children and grown people over that age.

The general question of the employment of children, which has been so prominently brought before the people of the States, constitutes still another justification for the establishment of this bureau. The latest authoritative information that we have is based on the census of 1900. There was an analysis of that census made in 1907, but the statistics were then 7 years old. That analysis showed, among other things, that 10 per cent of the operatives of the New England cotton mills were under the age of 16, and that 40 per cent of southern mill operatives were under that age. Every State is anxious to correct this abuse of childhood. Since 1900 several of the New England States have raised the age limit for the employment of children from 12 years to 14 years. All of the Southern States have passed child-labor laws or amended those already existing. An aroused public sentiment is sternly demanding that our state legislatures give this subject attention, and it may reasonably be presumed that better conditions as regards this evil prevail now in both sections of the country. We may suppose similar progress after 1910.

One chief reason for the establishment of the bureau of children at this particular time is that it may become properly organized for the study of the census statistics of 1910 so far as they relate to the welfare of children, and thus bring about mutuality in the results achieved locally.

But the census will stand as the only authority on that subject for ten years more, perhaps to our discredit as a Nation, unless we have some agency charged especially with inquiring into the reason for such differences as may exist as respects this evil, whether the laws are defective or not well enforced in one State or another, and to record the advances that are being made. In short, we shall be able to get the information necessary for every State to correct its own abuses, not from the writers in the magazines intent upon making a sensation, but from an authorized bureau of this Government belonging to all the people, so that the people directly concerned, without a feeling of resentment at an exaggeration of the conditions, may go about the work of correcting abuses known to prevail and the righting of the wrongs of childhood.

Consider another problem that has been widely studied within the last few years, the problem of juvenile delinquency and reform. Some of the principles of dealing with the child criminals, if we may call them such, have been established by such men as Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of Denver, Judge Julian W. Mack, of Chicago, and others. Both these gentlemen are earnest advocates of this bureau. Judge Lindsey declared that it took the time of two stenographers in his office to answer the questions that came to him regarding his children's court. But why should people be compelled to write to Denver, rather than to Washington, to find out from one locality where conditions may be peculiar concerning the proper method of dealing with delinquent children all over the country?

While a member of the judiciary committee of the Massachusetts state senate, I helped investigate the question of establishing in that State the juvenile court which is now in operation there. The lack of a body to turn to for proper information as to what other States were doing was to our work a great hindrance, and a bureau of this kind could have rendered assistance of the greatest value.

I understand that a national organization was formed (?) for the purpose of studying this problem, but that it was given up on account of the lack of funds for its expenses. It was brought out in one of the hearings by a speaker from the South that, in the absence of correct information about this problem of juvenile reformatories, both South Carolina and Georgia had established reformatories on their prison farms, on the premises where adult criminals were detained, and that more recently, recognizing that this was a blunder, new reformatories had to be built away from the associations of the penitentiary. In the meantime, the children sent to these reformatories suffered from the blunder, and the States were put to additional expense from the want of any central source of information on this subject.

NO INFRINGEMENT OF STATE JURISDICTION.

Each of our States has sought in its own way, without the benefit of the common experience, to protect its children by legislation in their behalf. The States are recognizing more and more the responsibility which they have for the care and uplift of their children, and each is endeavoring to give to these problems a more intelligent understanding. The need most acutely felt by those engaged in the study and solution of these various problems of childhood is to have adequate and full information as to the conditions to be met, and as to what has been done by other States in meeting these conditions. It is not only the duty, but the high privilege of the National Government to furnish this desired information, to the saving of waste and misapplied energy, to the curbing, sometimes perhaps, of undisciplined zeal, and to the stimulation of every community to the recognition of the abuses of childhood that these abuses may be ended.

It would be as difficult for the States, even if they could all be persuaded to act together, to secure this needed information as it would be for them to take a census under 46 different varieties of standards of the population of the United States.

That publicity through a national children's bureau would tend to bring views and methods into harmony concerning these humane questions can not be doubted. The present laws respecting neglected children, delinquent children, the children who toil, the unfortunate children of every kind who make the appeal of their helplessness to the State or the community, are conflicting and confusing. It should be the function of this bureau, in studying the legislation of the different States, to present expert opinion as to the best standard of legislation to be adapted by each State to its local conditions. The experience of all will be the guide of each.

No one, Mr. Chairman, could be more jealous than I to preserve to the States their sovereign rights over their people. The constitutional objections to a national child-labor law I fully recognize, and to such a measure I am unalterably opposed, but, Mr. Chairman, a bureau of this nature is the strongest force in preserving to the States their rights over their own citizens. Its power to enable the States to obtain information on this subject will strengthen and uphold their hands in progressive legislation, and by increasing their efficiency in dealing with their citizens will be the strongest force against the encroachment on the States by the federal power. It is claimed the States are not meeting the full responsibilities to their citizens. No greater aid than this could be given them to do so. Absolutely opposed to national regulation, I support no less firmly the collection of national information.

EUROPEAN NATIONS IN ADVANCE OF US.

Far beyond the United States other nations have already advanced in this important matter. Perhaps the nations of Europe feel the pressing need of the care of the children more keenly than we do, from the fact that these children are to be the future defenders of the nation in the war that always threatens those nations, who must be kept in a state of continual defense.

The experience of England during the Boer war, on account of the degeneracy of a large part of her population, especially the factory population, was a bitter one. One of the results of the investigations of this subject, which fill a whole series of "blue books," was the recent enactment by Parliament of a "children's charter," as it is popularly called. It has the double function, under the British system of government, of investigation and administration. The children's bureau, outlined in this bill, is confined to the first duty alone, except that it may report such facts as Congress may legislate upon within proper federal jurisdiction in the District of Columbia and the Territories. To the States must be left the duty of administration. Germany also, with an eye to its future citizens and soldiery, has a very complete and thorough system of research and publicity concerning all the facts relating to child life. Our own students of these problems have been compelled to gather their information about many of these questions from foreign sources, with more or less applicability to American conditions.

While Europe is an armed camp, this Republic is at peace. It is an even nobler duty to prepare for the victories of peace than to provide for the exigencies of war.

Self-preservation is spoken of as the first law of nature; and when the welfare of a nation rests, as ours, on universal suffrage, the care and bringing up of the children to healthy men and women can assume to no other duty a second place.

It is objected that we already have too many bureaus. There are in the nine great departments represented in the Cabinet 117 bureaus and divisions, as follows:

State Department	9
Treasury Department	19
War Department	17
Department of Justice	6
Post-Office Department	5
Navy Department	22
Interior Department	9
Department of Agriculture	15
Department of Commerce and Labor	15

But the argument is the other way. If we have not neglected the creation of any bureau dealing with material things, what further excuse have we for neglecting the most precious asset of national life, the children?

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATION REQUIRED.

If it is a question of expense let us look at the outlay which this last year has been authorized by the Government in some of the bureaus tabled above, and contrast that as a whole, or item by item, with the amount asked for under the present bill.

The Bureau of Animal Industry, for example, last year expended $301,415 for a single item, "Eradication of scabies in sheep," and $50,000 for the inspection of southern cattle. May not we ask ourselves, Is not a man better than a sheep; are not the children of more importance than cattle? There has been appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, for the eradication of ticks in cattle the sum of $250,000, and for this year the sum of $300,000 is asked for that purpose. Yet some are unwilling to spend one-sixth of this amount for a children's bureau! We appropriated last year for the investigation of insects injurious to vegetables, fruit, tobacco, field crops, and so forth, $158,800, and this year $199,800 is asked for the same purpose. We have already appropriated for the year 1909 $1,330,860 for the Bureau of Animal Industry, $1,341,676 for the Bureau of Plant Industry, $826,720 for the Bureau of Chemistry, $234,700 for the Bureau of Soils, and $434,960 for the Bureau of Entomology.

Contrast with these generous sums the amount required for the children's bureau.

Considering the confessed lack of knowledge on the vital questions concerning American children which I have briefly indicated and the importance of reliable information about them for the use of all public and private agencies that are attempting to deal with these problems, the expense involved is insignificant. The bill provides for 33 officials, a chief and his assistants and clerks, at an expense of $49,820, together with office rent and equipment, $2,000 more, a total of $51,820.

The study of bugs no doubt has its importance, but we can at least afford to spend one-eighth of the amount we expend on bugs for the study of the problems of our children.

It is admitted that with increased appropriations and the specification of new duties some of the already established bureaus might deal with some of these questions, but none of them is fitted to deal with them all. One of the most powerful reasons for concentrating such work in one bureau, with its significant name, "The Children's Bureau," is that the general public would know at once where to apply for the needed information. For example, one official of the Marine-Hospital Service is believed to have discovered the cause of a very common and debilitating disease among the children of certain sections of the South, and a very simple and cheap remedy for the affliction. But the unsophisticated would hardly think of applying to the Marine-Hospital Service for information about a disease of the children of inland Carolina. We increase the opportunities for valuable publicity many fold by centering the information about children in one bureau, whose very name is an index to the character of its work.

Public sentiment is arousing itself on this subject, and each day more and more interest is evinced in the objects of this bill. The press of the entire country, with scarcely an exception, is advocating the support of this measure, and letters and petitions from every part of the land have been rushing to the hands of Members of this body. There are no selfish or mercenary interests behind this measure, and the expression of opinion which is reaching us is the outgrowth, spontaneous and sincere, of the feeling for the children of our country.

The exploitation of childhood and the withering of little lives must stop, and to stop it the first and most necessary step is to proceed with intelligence and understanding.

NECESSITY FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Mr. Chairman, it must be remembered that whatever we do for the children of the present we must do at once. The opportunity for aiding the children of any year or decade is a present opportunity, for the children so soon pass beyond the reach of the influences that are helpful to childhood. Others will come on and take their places, but these children that we are concerned with to-day, that may be helped if we pass this bill at this session, will be beyond the reach of help if we postpone action. Another Congress may create the children's bureau, but it will be for the help of other children than those with which we are concerned to-day. I have no doubt that it will be created. The need for it is too great, the demand for it too insistent, for it to fail of establishment among the bureaus of this Government. Why shall we not accept this responsibility and this privilege? Why shall we wait for others to help the children of to-morrow? Why shall we not aid the children that are, as well as the children that are to be, the children of to-day and of all the to-morrows in the history of this great Nation of ours? The question ought to be not, Shall we pass this bill, but why did not some Congress pass it long before, that the States might to-day be using the knowledge and experience that has been acquired? We can not remedy the past. The present is ours. Let us take now the final step in offering to the children the assistance of this measure.

Political equality and civic rights, obtained through years of struggle, have brought with them great responsibilities as well, and the future of our country depends upon the way our citizens will assume the responsibilities so placed upon them. Democratic government can not exist by itself, and the proper exercise of the suffrage and the development of the ideas of the framers of our Constitution necessitate the active interest of all the people of the country. Upon the quality of that citizenship the strength of our Government will depend, and the standard can never rise above the aims and ideals on which it rests. A good government can never be legislated by us or upon us. The only sure basis on which to rest our Government and from which we can look to the future with calm confidence is the basis of high and enlightened citizenship. To insure the preservation of our national ideals we must have citizens healthy and active, both in mind and body, and to develop from our children the highest types of men and women must be the first duty of our State, and it is a duty which this bill will help each State to perform. Let us take now the final step in offering to the children, our future citizens, the assistance of this measure.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I have been interested during the past few weeks in the discussion we have had upon that always interesting subject, the rules of the House. I listened with peculiar interest to the illuminating and altogether admirable address of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] upon this subject. He made it apparent that the present rules of the House are the growth of years; that each revision of the rules embodied the best judgment of the membership of the House at the time as to the needs of the times; that the adoption of each of these rules was not for the purpose of centralizing power in the hands of any one man, but to enable the House more successfully and more effectively to perform its legislative functions; that the various revisions of the rules stand as milestones along the highway of progress, indicating the advance we have made as a legislative body. The one thing that should be uppermost in our minds in connection with this discussion is that this progress must go on. We must not be content to live in the twilight of the day which is past.

> New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth.
> They must upward still and onward who would keep abreast of Truth.

For one hundred and twenty years we have been advancing as a legislative body, but everyone familiar with existing conditions in this House knows that we are still far from the highest point of perfection. Progress is slow of foot and her pathway is often the mountain trail. It is still our high privilege, our sworn duty, to revise and perfect the rules, in order that the House may continue to be in a yet larger degree the exponent and representative of American civilization and that it may give just and ample expression to the progressive spirit of the American people.

In all this discussion we have had our attention called many times to the assertion that under the present system the Speaker of the House is the autocrat, the czar, the tyrant. But I wish to emphasize the fact that the real tyrant with which the House of Representatives has to contend is the House itself. Until we control this tyrant, until we master ourselves, we shall continue to be "cribbed, cabined, and confined" by rules that make us appear ridiculous to a large proportion of our constituents.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] the other day showed how the Members of the House, by the revision of the rules in 1880, were deprived of the right to be recognized by the Speaker. But that change was made, that right was taken from the Members, not because anyone desired to exalt the Speaker or to centralize power in his hands, but because of the abuse of the right by Members of the House to such an extent as greatly to impede, and at times absolutely to prevent, the constitutional functions of the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] in the course of his instructive remarks showed conclusively why, in the Reed rules, the motion to take a recess was stripped of its privileged character. He illlustrated the conditions which then existed by showing that on one occasion nearly the whole afternoon, nearly the whole session of the House, was wasted by a Member moving alternately to adjourn and to take a recess. And a careful study of each of these rules will show conclusively that it was adopted in order to enable the House to control itself more effectively, and so to enable it to legislate with less of dilatory tactics and with less of senseless performance of various kinds.

We are frequently told and we frequently declare that this is the great legislative body of the world. We come here as the personal representatives of 80,000,000 American sovereigns. There never was a time when the general average of membership was as high as it is to-day. There never was a time when the demands upon the Members of the House were so great and so exacting as they are to-day. There never was a time when the Members were required to devote themselves so exclusively to their public duties as to-day. There never was a time when their intelligent and careful attention was more needed on the floor of the House in connection with the enormous work we have to do than at present. And yet, Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that our manners and the conduct of the House, as a whole, are simply abominable. To illustrate, let me call the attention of the committee to what has just occurred.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS], who just addressed the committee, brought to our attention a subject of great national importance, a subject in which many good people all over our land are interested. He called our attention to the importance of a national children's board. This subject was recently considered here in Washington by a conference of philanthropic people gathered from all parts of the land by President Roosevelt. But so great was the confusion during his interesting and instructive remarks that it was utterly impossible for anyone to hear a word he said unless he was within a few feet of him. During the past few days I have sat here in deep humiliation as I have witnessed the Speaker shrieking at the top of his voice in his efforts to secure, not order, but the merest semblance of order, that the House might discharge its constitutional functions with some degree of intelligence.

I remember an occasion earlier in the session which would have humiliated any of our constituents who could have witnessed it. The special embassy from the ancient Empire of China occupied the diplomatic gallery, and the members of that distinguished embassy looked down upon the utter confusion of the House, a confusion so great that even those in the gallery who were entirely familiar with the procedure of the House could not possibly determine what we were attempting to do.

These are but illustrations of what occurs here daily. The House is composed of gentlemen, and yet the scenes of disorder witnessed here every day, where legislation of great importance is before us, are disgraceful.

But it is unnecessary for me to enlarge upon the conduct of the House. The existing conditions are only too familiar to us all. And I respectfully submit that, before we enter upon any genuine attempt to liberalize the rules of the House, it is absolutely essential that we radically reform the House itself. [Applause.] It goes without saying that it ought not to be necessary for the Speaker or the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to spend time and effort in order to secure sufficient order to permit us to dispose of the business before us in a proper and businesslike manner.

We have greatly improved our manners as a legislative body during the past twenty-five or thirty years. We are frequently told of the conditions that formerly existed. It is said that twenty-five years ago the principal use to which these desks were put was as a resting place for the feet of Members; that Members thought nothing of coming in, taking off their coats, lighting their cigars, and sticking their feet upon the desks in front of them while the business of the House was being proceeded with. And the membership of the House has greatly improved in many other respects. This ancient gentleman (referring to Mr. Chauncy) who has been an employee of the House for over half a century, "an heirloom," as our friend here suggests, has frequently related instances of the old days, when it was not uncommon for Members to come into the House so badly under the influence of intoxicating liquor that they had to be assisted home.

We have changed all these things. To-day no Member would be tolerated here for a moment whose wits were befuddled. To-day it would be bad form for a man to come here and attempt to smoke his cigar or take off his coat or rest his feet upon the desk in front of him. But, having accomplished this much, we are bound now by every consideration of decency and propriety to go forward and insist upon that degree of order in the House that is essential to its orderly procedure and that is in keeping with its dignity as a great legislative body. We come from 46, soon to be 48, States. Every one of us knows that there would not be tolerated for a moment in the legislative bodies of any one of these States such conditions as we daily find here.

In order to bring about this new order of things in the House we must join hands to make it bad form for a Member to conduct himself in the House as he would not conduct himself elsewhere. I respectfully submit that when as a Member of this House I come here during the discussion of an important legislative measure by some other Member and fail to give him that respectful attention which I would give him everywhere else, I am forgetting my position as a gentleman, I am forgetting my dignity as a Member of this great legislative body, I am unmindful of my responsibilities as the representative of the people of my district. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Will he yield?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the gentleman consider that the rule or practice permitting under general debate speeches on all varieties of subjects may contribute somewhat to this general disorder into which the House has fallen?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, that is undoubtedly true. And yet I should dislike exceedingly to have this practice of general debate abolished.

Mr. MANN. Or this speech relating thereto.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Or this speech relating thereto.

Mr. MARTIN. Does not the gentleman think that if it were insisted that only the subject under consideration should be discussed, that general debate should be limited to matters germane to it? That a rule or practice of this kind would contribute not only to the interest of the Members of the House, but to the orderly procedure of business?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do not doubt that much of the carelessness and indifference of Members as to the conditions on the floor of the House results from this practice of general debate, where speeches are delivered upon every conceivable subject excepting the one under discussion. But I am complaining of the conduct of the House, not when it is listening, not when its time is occupied with the delivery of some perfunctory speech, but when we are attending to legislation; when we have important business before us which should be accorded the careful consideration of every Member.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to entirely disclaim any suggestion that may be made as to this important discussion, for I think it is one of the most interesting and important discussions that I have heard upon the floor of the House.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. And I would like to suggest that subjects are discussed in the House that are of great importance to the House, subjects that could not be discussed in any other way, and upon which we should have no other way of giving our views to the country.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman is entirely right. Some of our greatest political questions have been discussed and finally determined in these general debates in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. We all recall a notable instance of this fact in the Senate. The question whether we are a whole Nation or a mere federation was not determined when Lee surrendered his sword at Appomattox. That question was decided for all time when Webster replied to Hayne.

That historic debate took place in the Senate when in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Many instances could be cited of historic debates that have occurred in the course of general debate in the House when in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield five more minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It seems to me that the time has come when we should rearrange the House of Representatives as an aid to better order. These desks belong to the olden time. They have outlived their usefulness. They have no business in this Hall, occupying so much space and preventing those Members interested in the proceedings of the House from gathering in a compact body. They ought to be taken out.

They were placed here when Members of the House had no clerks; when they did much of their writing here; when they did much of their work here; when all of their manuscript had to be written out, and much of it was written here; when his spare time was spent by the Member industriously at his desk. The desks were then used for legislative purposes and not as a center for personal and political gossip when others were attempting to carry on the important business of the House. [Applause.] To-day it is a rare occurrence for a Member to write a letter or anything else in longhand. He has a clerk who does all this work. Each Member has his office, where his work is done. Only in rare instances can a Member be found who makes even occasional use of his desk.

Then, too, we ought to have more room in the lobby. We have many visitors. Our constituents call to see us. They have the right to see us, and they should have the opportunity to see us under favorable conditions. That portion of the House wing now occupied by the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Pensions ought to be given up to the lobby of the House, where Members can take up with their constituents matters in which they are interested. We should have such facilities as will enable us to meet our friends and constituents, and to discuss with them pending measures in which they may be interested, and to consult with them upon any matter in which they are interested.

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I will.

Mr. BATES. In the most interesting and valuable remarks which the gentleman is making, will he also favor a proposition by which this Chamber could be so arranged that we would not have to breathe secondhand air all the time during the legislative session, so that we could have at least some windows by which sunlight and fresh air could be enjoyed in this Chamber? As the gentleman well states, we represent all the States of the Union. No Representative would like to wear a secondhand hat or a secondhand coat or secondhand clothes, and yet we are compelled to sit here six hours every day and breathe secondhand air.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, the matter to which the gentleman refers is a very important matter. I hardly have time to discuss it now. I think we have a Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, have we not? That committee ought to be given, if necessary, a session clerk in order that it may take up this matter. We are certainly entitled to better ventilation than we now have. But this is hardly germane to the question I am now discussing.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order. We would like to hear the speech of the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have listened with great pleasure to what the gentleman says. Does he not think that the fact that each gentleman of the House has his own desk, that it is numbered, that a plan of it is made, that his constituents in the gallery can see whether he is present or not, has a wholesome influence on the attendance of the House?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I regret to say that in my judgment such is not the fact. If we had a rule compelling Members when on the floor of the House to keep their seats, and if we enforced that rule, the question of better order in the House would be solved.

Mr. DOUGLAS. There is a rule that requires the attendance of Members in this House unless necessarily absent.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. But the rule does not go to the extent of compelling Members to keep their seats when on the floor.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman one question, and that is whether he considers that the quorum of the Committee of the Whole House should be changed from its present number to any less number?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It has been suggested that with the changed condition this might properly be done. Now, that we have our Office Building, where a large amount of work is done which was formerly done in the House, it may be found best to consider whether the number necessary for a quorum should not be reduced. It seems to me, however, that under ordinary circumstances we ought to have one-fourth of the membership present when we are taking legislation in the Committee on the Whole House.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It is now only 100.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's observations are certainly as interesting as any I have heard on the floor of the House this session, and I think as important. The gentleman, however, has simply stated what we all know to be a fact—that disorder of the worst kind prevails. The gentleman also has stated that the Speaker attempts many times during the day to obtain better order, but it seems impossible for him to do so. Now that a revision of the rules apparently is in the air, could the gentleman suggest any remedy? Would it not perhaps aid some for the Speaker, when attempting to obtain order, if he observes a collection of gentlemen from the various sections conversing loudly, to make it a matter of record to call attention to the gentlemen by name who are thus causing this disorder and standing in aisles to please take their seats? Would not that conduce to better order? It would make those gentlemen ashamed of themselves to be mentioned in the RECORD.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I have no doubt it would. But the gentleman knows that the Speaker of the House, and every Member of the House whom the Speaker calls to the chair to act as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, dislikes extremely to call attention in this conspicuous manner to a Member's conduct. If he calls him by name, it goes into the RECORD.

Mr. DAVIS. Let us make a rule to that effect.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We all understand that much depends upon the presiding officer. But it seems to me that the fundamental difficulty is with the Member himself. It should be wrought into his very system that he should conduct himself on the floor of the House as he conducts himself elsewhere.

Mr. DAVIS. But how can we do it?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. First of all, we should cooperate with the Speaker. We have a Republican floor leader and a Democratic floor leader. Each of these gentlemen has his "whip." We have our force of employees. The floor leaders with their "whips" and with this force of employees could be of very great assistance in cooperation with the Speaker in maintaining order. I would favor a conference of the entire membership of the House at the opening of the next Congress to take up this question of better order in the House. I would favor a resolution at that conference calling upon the Republican floor leader, who is always in his seat unless his committee work detains him, and upon the minority floor leader, who is always in his seat unless unavoidably absent, to cooperate with the Speaker in securing and maintaining order on their respective sides of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CANNON. Touching the matter of naming a gentleman, when I came into the House Mr. Speaker Blaine was Speaker. In cases of great disorder, where Members did not obey the gavel when calling for order, occasionally Mr. Speaker Blaine said, "Unless gentlemen are in order, the Chair will be forced to name gentlemen who are not in order." I asked Mr. Speaker Blaine, "Why do you not name them?" I wanted to know. "Oh," he said, "to name a man who is not in order would be resented by him, as well as by the other Members, unless it was a case where the Chair was compelled, in justice to the House, to name him." For instance, it would go all over the country; it would go to his district. I do not now recall such an instance. It may be that I have seen the Chair naming somebody who was not in order—but I do not now recollect an instance of the Chair having named anyone. It occurs to me, in the case of Mr. Speaker Crisp, when there was confirmed disorder on the part of one Member, who was a big Member, who did not obey the mace, that he was marched in front of the mace to his seat. That man was big enough to stand it; but I should very much dislike to have a Speaker do that to me. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is so perfect I believe it needs no defense from me, so I will yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I thank the gentleman from Iowa for his courtesy. I thought, Mr. Chairman, that I understood fully the attitude of the Speaker with reference to this subject. It is certainly a very disagreeable task for anyone who occupies the Speaker's chair, either as Speaker or as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, to name a Member as being out of order and as neglecting to be in order after repeated calls for order from the Chair. This is particularly true in view of the fact that the condition which we find here is wholly the result of thoughtlessness and indifference rather than of any intentional purpose on the part of anyone to disturb the procedure of the House.

Let us, therefore, at the opening of the next Congress have a conference of the entire membership of the House. There we can discuss the proposition to remove these desks and to remodel the House. The Committee on the Library has had this matter under consideration for many months. And I understand that it has two plans nearly ready to submit for our consideration.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does not the gentleman remember that in the closing days of the last session the Committee on the Library did propose some sort of a rearrangement, and it was voted down?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I remember that fact distinctly. The gentleman from Michigan doubtless recalls the conditions under which the proposition was brought before us. It was during the last days of the long session. The extremely hot weather was extremely oppressive. The Members of the House were tired out with the experience through which they had passed.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. They were not so weary but that they discussed it at considerable length.

Mr. MANN. They were not so weary but that they could and did defeat it. It was foolish——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; they defeated it, and it may be that the gentleman from Illinois would not approve any plan that contemplated the removal of these desks and the remodeling of the House. There is, it is true, much sentimental objection to the remodeling of the House; and I would certainly give much weight to the judgment of the gentleman from Illinois upon the question, for it will be admitted that the gentleman from Illinois, as a Member of this House, is an example worthy of emulation. If the rest of us followed him, there would be no occasion for these remarks. He is almost invariably in his seat; his industry is proverbial; his unflagging attention to the business of the House is unequaled. I have watched him for eight years, and I would commend his career to the thoughtful consideration of those who believe that the Speaker is the only man in the House who really shapes legislation.

I suggest this change in the House because it is my judgment that such a change would result in a great improvement in many respects. But it may be that the gentleman from Illinois can suggest a better plan.

Mr. MANN. I can suggest a remedy in ten words.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I yield.

Mr. MANN. Reduce the representation from your State to one and cut down the Members one-half.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Would you keep me in or leave me out? [Great laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that would determine whether the gentleman would be in favor of it. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Would the gentleman proceed to divide Illinois on the same basis?

Mr. MANN. I said so.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois of a remedy in ten words is utterly impracticable. The House will not be reduced in size. Even if it were practicable to reduce the House by one-half, I would doubt the wisdom of the remedy. We have a vast country, and, for one, I believe that each community should be represented in the great Council of the Nation. But any discussion of any such remedy would be utterly academic, and what I am looking for is results. And I believe that the best way to secure these results is to see to it that each Member is constituted a committee of one to cooperate with the Speaker and with the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in maintaining that high degree of order that in a legislative body of our size is essential to wise and deliberate action.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the defeat last session of the proposed change in the House really was based on the fact that it was a plan to build a box within a box, in which the Hall was so that we had two inclosures outside of the box in which the House was. It was on that basis that the House voted the proposition down. At the time it was pending I made remarks to the effect that I would be very glad to see the Hall removed to one end or the other of this building, or somewhere so we could get near outdoors and have daylight and windows. A resolution was passed instructing the Superintendent of the Capitol to prepare a plan and report it to the House, and I hope something will come of that.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I desire to say that I understand the Committee on the Library will submit a plan for a change within the House of Representatives within a very short time.

Mr. BOUTELL. Its report is on file.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I can only hope that this report will come before the House when it will have time and opportunity to consider it. If it comes before us in the closing hours of the session, as did the proposition last June, it will be difficult to secure proper attention for it. I have no pride of opinion respecting the methods I have suggested. Nor am I committed to any one proposition. All I ask is that we may bring order out of chaos; that we may set the country an example of law and order; that we may conduct the business of the great Republic in a manner compatible with our dignity and its importance. It is my profound desire to have conditions such on the floor of the House that our constituents, coming to the Capitol and sitting in the galleries and looking down upon us, may carry away with them the impression that the membership of the House is made up of earnest, thoughtful, high-minded men, who are devoting themselves to the single purpose of legislating in an orderly and judicial manner for 80,000,000 of people. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has given an illustration of the fact that if Members want to be heard they are.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I thank the gentleman for his implied compliment. And, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to testify to the simple truth that when a Member has a message to bring before the House he finds an attentive and appreciative audience here. But I insist that that man who believes he has a message for the House or who desires to bring to the attention of the House any matter in which his sovereign constituents are interested is entitled to the treatment of free speech and fair play which is granted the American citizen everywhere in the United States outside the House of Representatives.

One thing more. Members differ as to the wisdom of the practice of general debate during which we are permitted to speak upon any subject we see fit. My contention is that as long as the practice prevails every Member who finds that he is not interested in the address that is being delivered should exercise the privilege that is his and retire to the cloakroom or to his room in the Office Building. He is not compelled to remain in the House. If he does remain, common courtesy should prompt him to give his colleague respectful attention rather than to annoy him by loud conversation and boisterous laughter. But I am contending more particularly for order in the House and in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when we are attempting to legislate, when we are conducting our business as the representatives of the American people. Then we should follow the example set us by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. We should be at our desks, giving our attention to and participating in the business before us, and demonstrating the truth that in the House of Representatives he is the greatest leader who renders the most faithful service. [Loud applause.]

In the brief moments that remain to me, Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the committee to two important changes in the rules which, in my judgment, are necessary in order to enable the House to have and to maintain a firm grasp upon all pending legislation. Throughout this session I have labored earnestly to bring about these changes. In the first place, we need greater facility for securing consideration of the bills favorably reported by the various committees and placed upon the House and the Union calendars. In order to make it possible to secure consideration for every bill on these calendars which a majority of the House desire to consider, I would have what should be known as "Calendar Wednesday." I would provide by a change in the rules that on each Wednesday of the session no business should be in order except the consideration of bills on these two calendars under a call of the committees of the House, unless the House at the time determined otherwise by a majority vote upon the question, "Shall this order be suspended for this day?" In this connection, I would restore its privileged character to the motion to recess.

Then, if at the hour of adjournment on any calendar Wednesday the House had come to no resolution respecting the bill under consideration, it would be in order to move to take a recess until the following day. It would thus be possible for a majority of the House, if they so desired, to continue any calendar Wednesday as long as there remained on either calendar any bills which they wished to consider. When these changes are made, and I believe they will be made before the 4th of March, the House and Union calendars will cease to be the graveyards of so many important measures; the House will have that complete control over bills favorably reported which it ought at all times to exercise; and the Committee on Rules, except in rare cases, would be put out of business. This, too, would do away very largely with legislation by unanimous consent and under suspension of the rules. Both of these methods, as has been frequently pointed out, are extremely undesirable, except in the case of bills of a purely local character and of lesser importance.

With these modifications in the rules, the House would still lack that grasp upon bills of a public nature pending in the various committees which it ought at all times to have. To-day the committees of the House are its masters and not its servants. It not infrequently happens that a committee to which an imporant public measure is referred neglects or refuses to report the bill either favorably or unfavorably. To be sure, in the great majority of cases where a favorable report can not be had, an adverse report is not desired. But I have known instances during my service in the House where committees have arrogated to themselves the right to say that the House should have no opportunity to consider bills once referred to them. I have known cases where a committee has absolutely refused to report a bill adversely, although requested to do so when it was found impossible to secure a favorable report. The function of the committees of the House is necessarily a most important one. In a great majority of instances they have the power of life and death over bills referred to them.

We all know how strong the tendency of the House is to follow the judgment of its committees; but this fact furnishes an additional reason why the majority of the House should have the right to recall any bill pending before any committee of the House which neglects or refuses upon request to report it either favorably or adversely. I am not entirely certain as to the best method of enforcing this right. It would seem to me that the most feasible method is to provide by a change in the rules that on suspension days every Member of the House shall have restored to him the right of recognition, in order that he may move to suspend the rules, discharge the committee to whom the bill was referred, and to place the bill upon the proper calendar. With these changes in the rules we will have gone far toward rehabilitating the House as a great deliberative body.

The objection that doubtless would be urged most strongly against this proposition is that on "suspension days" there would be a very large number of Members on their feet clamoring for recognition. I for one have no fear of that. With such a rule in force no committee would care to be given the unenviable record of attempting to smother a bill of a public nature, and the provision should apply only to such bills. There would be a keener appreciation in many quarters of the fact that committees are instrumentalities of the House. On the other hand, the House could be depended upon to treat every committee fairly. It could be relied upon not to take this drastic action as long as the committee in question could assure it that it was giving the bill proper and considerate attention, to the end that wise action might be taken upon it in due time.

In my judgment, therefore, with such a provision in force the occasions for invoking it would be infrequent and would grow more infrequent with the passing sessions.

Another argument which would probably be directed against the proposed change is that it would result in the reporting of many bills that never ought to be reported. If the time has come when the committees should be the final arbiters as to what bills the House may consider, I concede that this argument is unanswerable. But has that time come? If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is correct in the assertion made by him yesterday that we have passed the period when we were at the mercy of the "irresponsible mob," has not the time come when the House of Representatives is called upon by the American people to assume and discharge the responsibility that properly belongs to us? Much of the popular outcry to-day against the House is due in no small degree to the widespread conviction that from one motive or another one of the chief functions of these committees is to hold up legislation and so relieve the House of responsibility.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is usual for a speaker to announce his subject for discussion. My subject is somewhat intermittent. At the present time it seems to be in articulo mortis. I hardly think, however, that it is either dead or dying. Every two years, or about that time, it assumes an acute stage, and in order that the House may understand just precisely the former acuteness of my subject I shall, in order to be accurate, read in part what I took the precaution to write, after the Socratic method.

Why all this talk that we hear of in certain quarters about the oppressions of the federal judiciary, caused by the abuse of the prerogative writ of injunction to prevent even-handed justice from being enjoyed by millions of our workmen; and why all this clamor about the denial of free speech, free press, and free assemblage? Of some of the causes of this more than apparent unhappiness I want to make some remarks, and I know of no way of showing the importance of my subject better than to call to mind the mixture of discussion, cheap and grave, among Members of Congress last session in the hotels, cloak rooms, and on this floor concerning legislation for the working classes.

The many hearings before the different committees and the extensive hearings before the Judiciary Committee on the anti-injunction bill, and the measure to amend the Sherman anti-trust law, and the bill to enact virtually the statutes of Victoria relating to and limiting conspiracy affirm the importance of my subject.

Moreover, there were Republican congressional caucuses over this question. The Chicago convention that nominated Mr. Taft for President made its bow to them, but merely courtesied and passed on to more important issues. The Denver convention wrote a plank in the Democratic platform pledging the party to thorough anti-injunction labor legislation. This, however, all took place while the presidential election was pending before the people for a decision, and it might be conjectured that the capturing of votes had some influence on what was done in and out of the presidential nominating conventions.

I would not make this last observation if Congress had not been so very somnolent at this session as to these matters that were so acute six months ago. And this, notwithstanding the threatened imprisonment of President Gompers, Vice-President Mitchell, and Secretary Morrison for the alleged contempt for violating the injunctive process, decreed by Justice Gould in December, 1907, in the Buck Stove and Range Company—American Federation case. This court proceeding has attracted wide attention in business and political circles throughout the country. The big newspapers have played it and given the opinions in the celebrated case a wide fame and notoriety, and generally have commended them, and especially do I note that one of the metropolitan papers, speaking of Judge Wright's opinion, speaks in this wise:

That its Blackstonian clearness, vigor, and precision of statement is remarkable.

Occasionally, however, above the din of plaudits, a note of censure is discovered at the Jeffries bearing and temper displayed by this noble judge when reading his opinion, and especially when sentencing the culprits at the bar to jail punishments. Permit me to say, in this connection, that the metropolitan press, the defenders of the Constitution, and the money lords of the country, have done more than all other influences to precipitate this to-be-historical conflict between these heroes and martyrs, who are striving to resurrect plain, simple justice for the many and downtrodden against the opposition of the organized forces of wealth and power, acting under the forms of law, and protected by its tribunals—the Sanhedrins of these modern but degenerate days.

CAPITALISM IN COMBINATION.

Combination is the watchword in all business at present, and will continue to be so in the future, without a break, for yet how long to come no one can tell. Almost everything that man must have in order to live is controlled by some quasi monopoly. His food is made by one and sold by another, at monopoly and trust prices, and I use the terms "monopoly" and "trust" as interchangeable in meaning. His clothing, of whatever quality, is likewise trust made and the price controlled by the trust. The house that shelters him and his family, of whatever material, is made by a trust, and the prices which enter into its construction controlled by it. If he takes a dose of medicine, he pays a royalty to the encroachment of trust monopoly. If he travels, he pays tribute to the monopolistic ingenuity and greed which is all the work of unlimited, grasping capital.

Invention and capital have brought the modern factory, which is but an organization of human beings and machines. Combination enables men who have money or control it to own the factory and hire the laborers to operate it. The combination of such organized energy may be described thus: As a single moving force that animates and drives machinery and that sets in motion a collection of various agencies, each of which contributes its part toward the accomplishment of a certain definite result. In obedience to this force the machinery thus organized, the human beings cooperating in the common purpose, is also set in motion, and the men and the machines combine their movements to produce a definite work. Each part of each machine must perform its function or the work ceases. Each human being sinks his individuality in the performing of this specific work to effectuate the plotted object, and unless this mechanical condition is absolutely maintained the operations can not proceed and the creation of the product will be interrupted. Man and the machine are merged together in the one all-absorbing task.

Looking at it from this standpoint the wheel or other parts of the machine, cooperating with each other, must feel, sorrow, and grieve when a colaboring wheel or some other part is broken or slips a cog; or when some part of the belting snaps it must bleed, suffer, die, have a funeral, and go to heaven or perdition just as a man would. The latter goes home to his family; he finds his wife or child sick with fever, with a hard bed, with nothing or but little to alleviate the suffering; and, of course, carrying out the simile, the wheel and pulley must do the same and in their chastisement wonder if the kingdom of God will ever come here on earth. So, commercially, the man and the machine in the business world are the same, and the courts that look after business so hold, and solemnly decide that they are divinely the same, and that is the end of it, however unfair it may seem.

If a legislature, whether state or federal, takes a different view of the subject and indicates a disposition to make different laws to govern each, certain legislative guardians of the Constitution, of which there are plenty and to spare, straightway object from their constitutional pinnacle, and cry out that there is a plot on hand to destroy the rights of property and engulf in anarchy life and liberty, and overturn constitutional government.

A constitution and precedents made a generation ago under totally dissimilar commercial and industrial conditions from those existing to-day shall constitute, "without shadow of turning," the rule of action by which the modern industrial dispute shall be determined. The conditions of to-day are squeezed into a Constitution made more than one hundred and twenty years ago and into the formulas of the middle ages. The common-law doctrine of "good will and restraint of trade" must govern in all its narrowness when first originated and applied. Then trade was limited and its methods primitive compared with the laws of trade to-day, and competition was free and untrammeled and the governing principle of trade, that regulated the price of wages as well as the price of merchandise. To-day we have no competition, for the trust monopoly has destroyed it, and the power of combination in the form of monopoly first shackles the laborer, then hires him at its own price, and to hide its roguery storms about conspiracy, high tariff, high wages, and plenty of jobs, forever.

MAN IN THIS MODERN INDUSTRIAL COMBINATION IS ONLY A MERE COMMODITY.

When I say that the invention of labor-saving machinery has revolutionized our industrial world, I utter but a truism which all students of economic conditions know. The laborer is no longer a man possessed of a will when at work, for he does but mechanical work, which in every part of the plant must be done in fractions of the whole by a man or a tool.

The only reason that he is in the factory at all is because the inventor has not yet displaced him by some machinery made of iron or steel. As soon as that can be accomplished the machine made of bone, muscle, and blood will be released to tramp as others of the millions of the unemployed. The capitalist will have no further use for him, for the machine made of steel or iron will do the work cheaper.

The treatment of the man and the machine which he operates is identically the same. The employer buys oil to lubricate the one; the other he pays a wage that the man may feed himself. The machine is kept in repair and working condition, oiled up as it should be, run with necessary belting, wheels, and pulleys, as it should be, by the machinist or engineer. The laborer is kept in working condition by the wages paid him to clothe and feed him. The rented cottage, you know, in which he lives is an appurtenance to the plant. The pitiable feature of it all is that the courts complacently accept this hard commercial rating of the man, treat him as a machine and as a part of the plant.

The man and the machine, or any part of the machine, is commercially a commodity to be bought and sold at will, as a fraction of the great industrial plant, and his labor is bought with just as little thought as the raw material to feed the plant, or is sold the finished product from which the profits come.

Bone, muscle, and brains are goods and chattels; the wife and children of this goods and chattels are but the incumbrances of this slave that belongs to another by a sort of moral duress and industrial despotism.

If a labor union or a combination of labor unions should decide on a programme to forestall a reduction of wages, and in the effort to carry out such programme it became necessary to declare a strike or boycott, or both, and out of such a strike or boycott, initiated to secure justice, should spring an industrial clash seriously affecting interstate commerce, such strike or boycott would unquestionably be denounced by the courts as an unlawful conspiracy under the terms of the Sherman antitrust law or the federal conspiracy statute, notwithstanding the fact that the boycott or strike was declared only for the purpose of thwarting the doing of veritable injustice and of promoting, as far as possible, simple justice. Thus we have this paradox arising out of present-day industrial conditions—that of the courts actually protecting the injustice of the employer done his employee, and of suppressing the struggle for justice by the employee against his employer, and to the sore hurt of the destitute employees.

In other words, the law is invoked to protect industrial abuse and hoary-headed wrong, which it does; and the same law that has wrought this strange paradox boastingly asseverates that it can not be amended under the Constitution, but must remain as it is, and I am not sure but technically that contention is correct.

Such seems to be the condition of the law affecting labor in this country at this time.

LIBERTY, AND SACREDNESS OF CONTRACT MADE BY THE COURTS ALLIES OF CAPITALISM.

I am well acquainted with that hoary old crêed of the law, misnamed "freedom of contract," and how it has been deified by the courts on the altars of the makers and stretchers of the Constitution.

The constitutional veil that surrounds the personal liberty and "due process of law" clauses, like the veil of the temple, has been by these worshipers of the sacredness of property almost rent asunder, and another generation of such devotion to mammon worship, and the veil will be rent and the unrighteousness of the inner sanctum completely exposed.

Yea, the freedom of contract includes every human being under heaven within its unfathomable range and depth, except the adjudged lunatic, the fettered married woman, and the irresponsible infant.

The millionaire, in complete harmony with a perfect environment of person and will, and the unwashed tramp, without a sou, ragged, hungry, broken in spirit, and the abject menial of his untoward conditions, when contracting for work to buy bread, before the law are equals in every particular—equals before that very law which Mammon says "old Moses brought down from the peaks of Sinai."

If the millionaire pleases to give 50 cents per day, and the laborer takes it rather than starve, the question of whether the rich man took advantage of his poor brother's condition to rob him can not be considered and can not be regarded as an ingredient of that contract of employment. The conditions under which it was made constitute no part of the contract.

At the bottom of such a contract no one will dispute for a moment that the old serpent of selfishness lies in perfect peace and security, and why not? Is that serpent not protected by the Constitution and the serried hosts of wealth?

Seriously, such, however, is the legal measure of all individual contracts of employment to-day, during the first decade of the twentieth century. This is the standard, and no other can be found as promulgated, the courts say, under the Constitution.

Hence the effort of labor in every clime to get together and organize, to bring forth the new principle of even-handed justice for use in every contract of employment, and to put it to work in life, and the affairs of life—that kind of justice based on the Declaration of Independence, and the fundamental teaching of Christianity—the brotherhood of man—and bring to pass an enactment of it in the law of the land, and the administering of it by the courts of the country. This is the tremendous task that organized labor has set for itself, aided by a considerable body of well-meaning persons whom the socialistic writer calls "intellectuals," but whom I would call "economic missionaries in a good cause."

By the workers organizing themselves into a body in any trade, which puts them in possession of their labor that they have to sell, they can say to the employer: "It is true that you own and control the tools with which we have to work and the capital to hire us, yet we control the labor that you must have before you can use your tools and make any profit; and our labor, being a part of us, of our bone, muscle, and very life, and inseparable from us, we have, by unionizing our class, agreed to fix the price of labor, which you call a commodity and which the law treats as such, and we propose to fix the price, so that we can divide the profits with you on a righteous basis. We are willing that you should have a reasonable and just profit for your investment and management of the business, but anything more than that we are unwilling you should have, and whatever profit is left, after allotting so much to you, we, as laborers who make it, claim as our own and shall try to get."

However, to bring this result about for themselves, the combination of unions must be so comprehensive as to include practically all men who work in that line, and, instead of contracting as individuals, they must contract as a class. In other words, they must resort to and use the collective contract instead of the individual contract. By such unity of organization, they can take advantage of their economic difficulties and coerce, so to speak, the making of just contracts.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING BY LABOR.

What honest objections can be raised to collective bargaining or contracting by the labor class in its efforts to secure a fair price for its labor and an equitable division of the profits to which it contributes so largely to produce?

It is admitted on all hands that to organize is correct and the proper thing to do; and if so, then the collective contract is sound in principle, and its fruits should be gathered and realized by those producing such fruits.

And here is the rub, for I claim that such a realization will from time to time necessitate the strike and boycott. The strike and boycott, as I see it, are absolutely necessary as conditions are to-day to enforce the collective contract, and that is the only kind of contract by which labor can ever expect to obtain a fair wage. I assert this, first, for the reason that the courts so far have done nothing to help labor in the least. They do not issue injunctions to prevent corporations and railroads from cutting wages or laying off their employees when they desire; and, second, because Congress and the legislatures of the States, through the lobbying of powerful interests, fail to enact legislation favorable for the protection of the rights of the laboring class.

To issue injunctions to prevent reduction in wages or any like purpose would interfere with personal liberty, as decided in the Adair case, which even holds that a railroad company, for pique or policy, may discharge a union man simply because he is a union man, thereby carrying the right of personal liberty to the very verge of anarchy.

It matters not whether the discharge of employees by corporations will effect a free flow of interstate commerce or not, or whether a congestion of traffic or trade for months will result; the people must take care of themselves.

Nor do the courts issue injunctions to compel the corporations to give their employees an honest and just wage, that they may thrive and live comfortable and have no occasion to strike or boycott to secure an honest wage. To do so, they hold, would infringe the right of personal liberty and freedom of contract. Petitions for such a purpose would be laughed at, and a decree to that end would be an utter impossibility.

But let the employees quit work for ever so just a cause, say to hinder an unjust reduction in wages, as in the Ann Arbor and Toledo Railroad cases in 1893, and let some labor federation take part in the contest, and by its chief officers make an order or a rule asking or commanding the employees of the same federation on other railroads to quit work, that a concert of action might be obtained for strength and influence to compel a retention of the old wage, and note how quick the courts can act, and the good reasons promptly assigned for the injunctive process:

First, a violation of the interstate-commerce act; second, a violation of the general conspiracy statute; and, third, a violation of the common law regulating conspiracies in restraint of trade. Different laws are called into vigorous action in order that the altruistic sympathizing business public should not be required to undergo any inconveniences and that the free flow of interstate trade should not be disturbed, and that the railroads be not deprived of the profits of business and forced to suffer irreparable damages or loss because of the conduct of a lot of irresponsible and indigent employees.

INJUNCTION WRIT USED SOLELY TO PROTECT PROPERTY.

This wholesome and beneficent rule, however, does not apply to these indigent railroad employees when discharged without any fault of theirs and against their protest. They can tramp, go hungry, and beg, without any help from a court of equity. The beneficent beauties of the present holy writ of injunction was not invented to get jobs for the unemployed, and if it was invented to protect the poor from the oppressions of the rich, as it was, that use of the writ has long since become obsolete and been abandoned, for it is only now used to protect property and so-called "property rights" of corporations.

And I think it may be very appropriately added that equity has not yet discovered any method whereby the laboring man can get anything more as an individual than the man who employs him wants to give him, irrespective, as I have commented, whether the price paid for his labor is just or unjust. The question of justice or injustice does not enter into the bargain at all. It is simply a question of employment at the cheapest price possible, and so far, the courts of equity have been incompetent to help the laborer, but its powers are mighty to help the employer.

This is the breadth of its powers when engaged in protecting property and certain vague property rights of corporations; such as that one man may have a property right in another man's business or custom, or the right to do business at a certain place and in a certain manner, quoting from Justice Brewer, who said:

I believe most thoroughly that the powers of a court of equity are as vast, and its processes and procedure as elastic, as all the changing emergencies of increasingly complex business relations and the protection of rights can demand.

Under this broad statement of equity powers why could not the injustice done the employees or workers by short, dishonest wages, or by an arbitrary, dishonest reduction of wages, or by an arbitrary and dishonest discrimination of wages against union laborers, or on account of unsafe or brutal surroundings in which employees are compelled to work be set up in the answer to the petition for the injunction and the whole case submitted to this court of these searching and exhaustive powers for an equitable decree and a complete settlement of these varied and complex business relations and rights demanding protection? On this point, and in conclusion, I might say that the boycott and strike should be legalized in this country as in England, and it will be; but just when, I shall not undertake to prophesy.

The law regulating the strike and boycott should be rigid, to the end that when conducting either it should be done quietly and peaceably, without any physical violence whatever, and without any violence of conduct or language whatever. Briefly stated, "Let all things," in any way affecting the strike or boycott, "be done decently and in order."

Whatever labor should demand or oppose being done should be accurately understood and as accurately stated in writing and submitted to the employer, and if refused then, upon the justice of its contention stubbornly stand, pleading its cause in court and out of court by free speech and free press and free assembly, if needs be, but in all things pleading and acting "decently and in order."

DEFENSIVE OF THE INDUSTRIAL BOYCOTT OR CONSPIRACY.

I desire to make a few observations upon the proposition that a single person can do an act which is neither immoral nor unlawful, but becomes immoral and unlawful if done by two or more persons in concert and for a well-considered purpose, although for a good purpose and for their general benefit, yet if in doing the act injury or damage results collaterally, the commission of the act under those circumstances becomes an unlawful conspiracy or an unlawful boycott, for which the doers thereof may be punished by indictment or restrained by an injunction or sued for damages. And if they persist, after an injunction has been issued against them, in the performance of the same act, whatever be the methods thereof, and injury or damage results collaterally, as mentioned, they, or any of them, may be arrested for contempt, tried without a jury, and imprisoned at the discretion of the judge who issued the writ, and acting as legislator, prosecutor, and judge in his own case.

It will be noted that it makes no difference how peaceably such persons may act in the execution of their common purpose, yet to them and their class beneficial, still the courts, dealing with such cases hold, That the benefits to the members of the combination are so remote as compared with the direct and immediate injury inflicted on the nonunion men or the company that the law does not look beyond the immediate loss and damage to the innocent parties, to the remote benefits that might result to the organization.

It is worthy of note that the law declines to see anything but what it terms the immediate and direct consequences of the strike or boycott, which result collaterally and generally from a stubborn refusal on the part of the company to do even-handed justice.

Yet, notwithstanding this, the law closes its eyes to the millions of working people and refuses to help them because the benefits which they seek are said to be too remote. And these are the solemn decisions of courts of equity, which I have always been taught to believe had the power and were disposed to administer justice to the remotest parties, provided they had a tangible and valuable justice or equity in the most novel situations.

While a boycott or a strike initiated for a righteous purpose might result in a collateral way in the destruction of even an individual fortune, or the property of a certain company, yet, if its results, though remotely, should be to change an economical condition to the benefit of tens of thousands of the needy and oppressed, it seems that the boycott or strike should be protected, in order to prevent as little injury as possible, and in a guarded way be permitted to achieve the real object for which it was initiated, that of justice to the thousands and tens of thousands. In support of my view of the industrial boycott or strike, I desire to call attention to the British act of Parliament amendatory of Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth Victoria of 1875, entitled the "Trades Dispute Act, 1906," which became a law in the Kingdom of Great Britain December 21, 1906. But first let me say that the main purpose and effect of this act of 1906 was to override the principle laid down by the House of Lords in the Taff Vale Railway Company v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants (1901, A. C., 426; 70 L. J. K. B., 905), which held that a trade union might be sued so as to be liable in tort for the acts of its officials.

By the act of 1906, a trade union in England can no longer be sued in tort and held liable for the acts of its officers; the only liability that attaches for tort are personal, as the law now stands.

Victoria 38 and 39, chapter 86, changed the law, so that agreements or combinations by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute between employers and workmen should not be indictable as for a conspiracy if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime.

The indictable common-law conspiracy (Vict. 38 and 39, 1875) was eliminated from trade disputes, and this is but common justice and in recognition of the great principle for which the laboring people the world over are fighting—industrial freedom, a fair contract, and a just, prosperous wage, one from which by economy money can be saved for the culture of the home and family.

The act of 1906 is a noble piece of modern, up-to-date legislation, patriotic and statesmanlike, that originated in the House of Commons, the true representatives of the people, unfettered by constitutional checks, to be explained hereafter.

LEGALIZES PEACEABLE BOYCOTT.

The following section of the act practically legalizes the peaceable and thoughtful boycott inaugurated for justice and sets a sound precedent for the bill that I introduced at the first session of this Congress.

The section is as follows:

An act done in pursuance of an agreement or combination by two or more persons shall, if done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, not be actionable unless the act, if done without any such agreement or combination, would be actionable.

This section frees from civil liability all persons engaged in a trade dispute, i. e., boycott or strike, unless they would be liable, if not engaged in a trade dispute, and acting individually. It is not intended to relieve against personal acts of violence or personal torts or personal crimes.

It is intended to foster trade disputes initiated to overtake and coerce justice from the unwilling hands of the employer.

The following section in behalf of peaceful picketing is interesting:

It shall be unlawful for one or more persons, acting on their own behalf, or on behalf of a trade union, or of an individual employer or firm in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute to attend at or near a house or place where a person resides or works or carries on business or happens to be, if they so attend merely for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information or of peacefully persuading any person to work or abstain from working.

This kind of legislation would be a bitter pill to the president of the National Association of Manufacturers and men who think on industrial questions as he does.

If Mr. Van Cleave lives long enough, he will have to take the medicine, and I hope that he will possess his soul in peace in the meantime.

Another section of this act that ought to be penciled in gold over the doors of the great industrial plants of America:

An act done by a person in contemplation or furtherance of trade dispute shall not be actionable on the ground only that it induces some other person to break a contract of employment, or that it is an interference with the trade, business, or employment of some other person, or with the right of some other person to dispose of his capital or labor as he wills.

This section in this country would likely be held as unconstitutional, because of the inviolability of contracts, under section 10 of the Constitution, which section has been worked over time ever since the famous Dartmouth College case, which decided that the charter of a corporation was in the nature of a contract and could not be interfered with, behind which the doctrine of vested rights has been so extended as to embrace vested wrongs. I have digressed. The section, however, removes all liability for interfering with another person's trade, business, or employment, even though such interference should result in the breaking of a contract of employment. This is justified on the ground of the importance of industrial conflicts or disputes, which are economical and general, affecting not only a class, but the welfare of the entire country. A settlement on a just basis of the relations between employer and employee, that has been so long neglected, to the great injustice of the laboring people in all countries, is demanded, and the English act entitled "Trade disputes act, 1906," is the longest step in the right direction yet taken so far as my knowledge goes.

EXEMPTS UNIONS FROM LIABILITY.

The last section deserves particular attention, for it and the Sherman antitrust statute are complete antipodes in legislation, and what is law in England is anarchy in America, and yet they worship the same God and have the same common law. This is the section:

An action against trade unions, whether of workmen or masters, or against any members or officials thereof, on behalf of themselves and all other members of the trade union in respect of any tortious act alleged to have been committed by or on behalf of the trade union, shall not be entertained by any court. (Annual Stat., 1906, Edward VII, 947, 948.)

This section exempts trade unions absolutely from liability for any kind of tort, even libel, though the actual tort feasor would be personally liable, except the act complained of was done in good faith in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute. In that case such tort feasor would be under the act without legal liability or fault, but under the Sherman antitrust statute as interpreted by the Supreme Court in the Danbury Hatters' case (208 U. S., 274) the labor or trades unions would be subject to an action which could be maintained for threefold damages.

I have explained this English statute in order that it may be better understood, for it needs but to be understood to be appreciated and admired. England is to-day a freer country than ours, but I can not stop to give reasons why this is so, but they are not occult and may be read of him who runs.

Justice Gould, in the case of the Buck Stove-American Federation case, in discussing the doctrine that a single person can do an act which is neither immoral or unlawful, but becomes both when done by two or more persons in execution of a common purpose that results in injury to third persons, quotes from the case of Curren v. Galen (152 N. Y., 33), in which it is said:

The social principle which justifies such organization is departed from when they are so extended in their operation as either to intend or to accomplish injury to others.

It is earnestly contended by defendants' counsel, however, that as each one of the defendants has the right to refuse to patronize the customers of plaintiff unless such customers will discontinue handling plaintiff's stoves, that therefore they may combine in their refusal; in other words, that there can not be an unlawful combination where each member thereof might do individually the thing contemplated without responsibility to the law therefor. This contention has much of plausibility. It is undoubtedly difficult to formulate the legal basis of the proposition that what is lawful for one to do becomes unlawful when done in combination. It seems to evade accurate analysis. This feature is brought out in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes in Vegelahn v. Guntner, supra, although he adds: "It would be rash to say that some as yet unformulated truth may not be hidden under this proposition," and admits: "That whatever may be the law in the case of a single defendant, that when a plaintiff proves that several persons have combined and conspired to injure his business, and have done acts producing that effect, he shows temporal damage and a cause of action, unless the facts disclose or the defendants prove some ground of excuse or justification, and I take it to be settled, and rightly settled, that doing that damage by combined persuasion is actionable, as well as doing it by falsehood and force." But however unsatisfactory may be the statement of the "as yet unformulated truth" hidden under the proposition, the proposition itself is too firmly engrafted upon both the civil and criminal law to be ignored. (Washington Law Rep. 35, vol. 806.)

This authority is cited to show that the light is dawning on the ultraconservative judicial mind, which means that the legislator, even in the United States, ought to wake up out of his Rip Van Winkle century sleep.

COMBINATION OF ACTION OF NO WEIGHT.

Anent this abstruse and illogical theory invented and enlarged to protect property, the court said in the leading case of Lindsay & Co. v. Federation of Labor (96 Pac. Rep. 130).

There can be found running through our legal literature many remarkable statements that an act perfectly lawful when done by one person becomes by some sort of legerdemain criminal when done by two or more persons acting in concert, and this upon the theory that the concerted action amounts to a conspiracy.

But with this doctrine we do not agree.

If an individual is clothed with a right when acting alone, he does not lose such right merely by acting with others, each of whom is clothed with the same right.

If the act done is lawful, the combination of action is not an element which gives character to the act.

It is the illegality of the purpose to be accomplished or the illegal means used in the furtherance of the purpose which makes the act illegal. (National, etc., Association v. Cummings 170 N. Y., 315).

Other cases holding that the legerdemain of converting an innocent act when done by one into a criminal act when done by two or more, or an actionable conspiracy, is not sound and will not stand the test of time, and, further, will sooner or later be so modified in this country by legislative enactment (or judicial decision), as has already been done in England by the "trade disputes act, 1906," as not to destroy the evolution in the labor world from dependence to independence, from industrial slavery to industrial freedom, and, finally, from a life of comparative ignorance to one of enlightenment and the sweetness of culture.

If I am not very much mistaken, Mr. Littlefield, in his speech last May in this Congress, failed to comment on the late English act which I have given in full, but confined himself to the antiquated trades dispute act of 1875, which was modified in part and repealed in part by the act of 1906, which I have explained.

THE ANCIENT WRIT OF INJUNCTION—ITS USE AND ABUSE.

But a word or two on the use and abuse of the ancient writ of injunction. To recite the history of this hoary old writ of kingly prerogative would not now serve any valuable purpose. Most lawyers know its history, and anyone can learn it with but little trouble or expense. Its origin was natural and inevitable in the construction of national jurisprudence. It was born in the march of civilization out of the very womb of oppressive conditions, and intended to ameliorate them, and was called into use to put natural justice into the affairs of men, and not to suppress it, as it is used to-day. Undoubtedly it is the jus honorarium of the civil law that was based on the edicts of the Roman pretors, which had more to do with the growth of the equity of the civil law of Rome than any other single influence, and from which source the early chancellors of England drew copiously.

Moreover, this powerful writ is not nearly so dangerous in England as in this country, for the reason that under our form of government the federal courts are practically unlimited in their power and jurisdiction, and their power is being extended every day.

The Federal Supreme Court, within the range of its ever-increasing jurisdiction, is omnipotent, and its range is political, economical, judicial, and, I will say, social. Its members play the rôle of the statesman as well as the judge, and its promulgations are decrees that govern the Nation. In all fairness to the great and illustrious men who compose this august tribunal, remembering, however, that they are just men, of like passions and prejudices as other men, their powers are too great and should be withdrawn and distributed, in part, to the lower House of Congress and the legislatures of the various States. The power to autocratically, but seemingly judicially, declare any act of Congress or of any state legislature void without the least responsibility to any power on earth or referendum of any kind smacks too much of a despotism. Nor, in my opinion, can it stand against the ever-inflowing tide of democracy, which is going forward in spite of the Herculean efforts of a money aristocracy, as evidenced by the secret ballot, the direct primary, the publicity of campaign contributions, the election or nominations of United States Senators by the popular vote, the initiative and referendum. These and other democratic influences in sight may by and by cause the Supreme Court to reverse itself and let the people have a chance.

Let me remark that the injunction of to-day and of a century ago in purpose and use are as different as day and night. Its ancient purpose and use was to restrain the arbitrary and oppressive judgments of the common-law judges, to hold in check such tyrants as Lord Coke, and to protect the weak against the strong. (Marsh's History of the Court of Chancery, pp. 47, 48.) At the beginning equity was intrusted to the prelates of the church, who loved mercy, trust, and justice unrestrained through the cobwebs of technical precedents and who knew but little of the positive law of the courts. Further, it was used to arrest threatened injury to real property and rights growing out of it, and sometimes to protect personal property from social piracies of the heirloom sort.

Woe to him whose daring hand profanes
The honored heirlooms of his ancestors.

It could not have been and never was intended to be used as an executive order born of the chancellor's discretion, which, like his foot, might be long or might be short, instead of a statute to govern millions and to stay the onward and upward march of the oldest and greatest economic struggle of the ages, the end of which shall be the fulfillment of God's command given to Adam:

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread.

But this divine command the modern industrial, governmental injunction is, and has for some time, been striving to annul and to write in its stead:

In the sweat of labor's face the favored few shall eat bread and live triumphantly.

The old command will persist, and the new one will in due time perish from off the face of the earth, the federal judiciary to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE MODERN INDUSTRIAL INJUNCTION, AND FREE PRESS, ETC.

The injunctive order made in the case of the Buck Stove and Range Company v. the American Federation of Labor and others, is a fair sample of this extreme judicial effrontery in vogue, particularly in the federal courts.

This order I want to embalm in the RECORD, so that it can hereafter be read and deprecated, as it will be, particularly for its ruthless assault on the first amendment of the Federal Constitution and other provisions of the instrument, and every state constitution of the Union, guaranteeing to all free speech, free press, and free assembly.

The first amendment of the Federal Constitution declares:

Congress shall pass no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble—

And so forth.

Here is the order in full, issued by Justice Ashley M. Gould, December 18, 1907, that overrides this constitutional amendment:

This cause coming on to be heard upon the petition of the complainant for an injunction pendente lite as prayed in the bill, and the defendants' return to the rule to show cause issued upon the said petition, having been argued by the solicitors for the respective parties, and duly considered, it is thereupon by the court, this 18th day of December, A. D. 1907, ordered that the defendants, The American Federation of Labor, Samuel Gompers, Frank Morrison, John B. Lennon, James Duncan, John Mitchell, James O'Connell, Max Morris, Denis A. Hayes, Daniel J. Keefe, William D. Huber, Joseph F. Valentine, Rodney L. Thixton, Clinton O. Buckingham, Herman C. Poppe, Arthur J. Williams, Samuel R. Cooper, and Edward L. Hickman, their and each of their agents, servants, attorneys, confederates, and any and all persons acting in aid of or in conjunction with them or any of them be, and they hereby are, restrained and enjoined until the final decree in said cause from conspiring, agreeing, or combining in any manner to restrain, obstruct, or destroy the business of the complainant, or to prevent the complainant from carrying on the same without interference from them or any of them, and from interfering in any manner with the sale of the product of the complainant's factory or business by defendants, or by any other person, firm, or corporation, and from declaring or threatening any boycott against the complainant, or its business, or the product of its factory, or against any person, firm, or corporation engaged in handling or selling the said product, and from abetting, aiding, or assisting in any such boycott, and from printing, issuing, publishing, or distributing through the mails, or in any other manner any copies or copy of the American Federationist, or any other printed or written newspaper, magazine, circular, letter, or other document or instrument whatsoever, which shall contain or in any manner refer to the name of the complainant, its business or its product in the "We Don't Patronize," or the "Unfair" list of the defendants, or any of them, their agents, servants, attorneys, confederates, or other person or persons acting in aid of or in conjunction with them or which contains any reference to the complainant, its business or product in connection with the term "Unfair" or with the "We Don't Patronize" list, or with any other phrase, word, or words of similar import, and from publishing or otherwise circulating, whether in writing or orally, any statement, or notice, of any kind or character whatsoever, calling attention of the complainant's customers, or of dealers or tradesmen, or the public, to any boycott against the complainant, its business or its product, or that the same are, or were, or have been declared to be "Unfair," or that it should not be purchased or dealt in or handled by any dealer, tradesman, or other person whomsoever, or by the public, or any representation or statement of like effect or import, for the purpose of, or tending to, any injury to or interference with the complainant's business, or with the free and unrestricted sale of its product, or of coercing or inducing any dealer, person, firm, or corporation, or the public, not to purchase, use, buy, trade in, deal in, or have in possession stoves, ranges, heating apparatus, or other product of the complainant, and from threatening or intimidating any person or persons whomsoever from buying, selling, or otherwise dealing in the complainant's product, either directly, or through orders, directions, or suggestions to committees, associations, officers, agents, or others, for the performance of any such acts or threats as hereinabove specified, and from in any manner whatsoever impeding, obstructing, interfering with, or restraining the complainant's business, trade, or commerce, whether in the State of Missouri or in other States and Territories of the United States, or elsewhere wheresoever, and from soliciting, directing, aiding, assisting, or abetting any person or persons, company or corporation to do or cause to be done any of the acts or things aforesaid.

And it is further ordered by the court that this order shall be in full force, obligatory, and binding upon the said defendants and each of them, and their said officers, members, agents, servants, attorneys, confederates, and all persons acting in aid of or in conjunction with them, upon the service of a copy thereof upon them or their solicitors or solicitor of record in this cause: Provided, The complainant shall execute and file in this cause, with a surety or sureties to be approved by the court or one of the justices thereof, an undertaking to make good to the defendants all damage by them suffered or sustained by reason of wrongfully and inequitably suing out this injunction, and stipulating that the damages may be ascertained in such manner as the justice of this court shall direct, and that, on dissolving the injunction, he may give judgment thereon against the principal and sureties for said damages in the decree itself dissolving the injunction.

This constitutional amendment—the first—was proposed by the First Congress under the Constitution, and promptly ratified by all the then States, and the people will have no judicial tinkering with it. These rights cost too much suffering and they were too hard to wring from arbitrary power to be jeopardized in the least—a jot or tittle—by any power, whether covered by the ermine or the purple or the homespun—all the same.

For the abuses of these guaranteed rights and liberties the law has provided penalties and punishments, but not injunctions or restraints of any kind.

The idea of freedom of speech, or publication and responsibility therefor in damages, or by fine and imprisonment, and the other idea, of prohibiting free speech or publication, or peaceable assemblage, as the case may be, are contradictory and noncoexistent. If speech is free, it is free and not hampered; if abused, punishment should follow.

CONSTITUTION COVERS ALL.

Certainly no one will contend for a moment that the judge can do what the legislature is prohibited from doing; that is, enjoin free speech and free publication. That the Constitution was made for the lawmaker, but not for the law interpreter, to restrict the one within due bounds and to license the other according to his caprices, egotism, and prejudices, is absurd.

I invite attention to the turgid discussion of this first constitutional amendment by Justice Wright, in his opinion in the Buck Stove Company case. But before doing so I desire to quote from that great judge and constitutional writer, Judge Cooley. He says:

That the rights of free speech, free writing, or free publication were not created by the Constitution, which recognizes those rights as now existing, and that only seeks their protection and perpetuation. (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed., 511 et seq.)

However, according to Justice Wright, these rights do not exist in all their fullness in the District of Columbia, but the common law prevails in the District, and constitutional liberty is subject to that law, which limits these sacred rights of a free people. This contention of Justice Wright can not be true. Everywhere in civilized countries the liberties of the press and the liberties of the people must stand or fall together, and the District of Columbia is no exception. Not being able to defend his position on constitutional grounds, he attempts to shield his arbitrary dictum under the cloak of the common law, and he mistreats that old law by not letting it speak for itself, for he cites no authority in support of his contention. This opinion will stand as a monument of a judge's folly in trying to override the Constitution and constitutional law from all quarters by a strained interpretation of the common law, and of his imagining that he and his job were of the same size—a good illustration of Æsop's famous fable of the toad and ox. The order of injunction already mentioned and so much of the opinion as follows will give clearly the court's views as to free publication and free speech:

In defense of the charges now at bar, neither apology nor extenuation is deemed fit to be embraced; no claim of unmeant contumacy is heard; persisting in contemptuous violation of the order, no defense is offered save these:

That the injunction—

1. Infringed the constitutional guaranty of freedom of the press.
2. Infringed the constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech.

These defenses do not fill the measure of the case; the injunction was designed to stay the general conspiracy of which the publication of the "Unfair" and "We Don't Patronize" lists were but incidents; the injunction interferes with no legitimate right of criticism or comment that law has ever sanctioned, and the respondents' intimation that it does so is a mockery and a pretense.

Upon looking into them for examination there first puts forward that while the Constitution ordains (Am. 1) "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press," yet there occur also within it certain analogies as well as in legislation all time acquiesced in, nay, demanded by the people, certain illustrations which demark the meaning of the provision.

Thus (Const., am. 2) * * * "the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed;" yet who disputes the validity of laws throughout the land penalizing the carrying of concealed weapons? Or if one kept an array of firearms so persistently trained against his neighbor's dooryard as to terrorize all persons from coming out and going in, thus impairing the utility of his dwelling, who will be found declaring that an injunction to remedy such condition of things is a "violation of constitutional rights?" The Constitution itself confers upon the people no right to bear arms; the right is aside from the Constitution. The Constitution does no more than inhibit Congress from, in the name of the National Government, infringing the right, as elsewhere defined and ascertained, leaving the right to be regulated or even prohibited by the several States, within their respective dominion, if such be agreeable to the judgment of their people.

So with respect to the inhibition against abridging the freedom of speech or of the press. The Constitution nowhere confers a right to speak, to print, or to publish; it guarantees only that in so far as the Federal Government is concerned its Congress shall not abridge it, and leaves the subject, as the other, to the regulation of the several States, where it belongs. Who can be persuaded that the penalizing of false and malicious libels upon the integrity of honorable men, or slanders upon the virtue of chaste women, is an outrage upon "the constitutional rights" of the vilifier?

Do those of thoughtful and sincere reflection escape the unharmony between claims for a right of utter license in speech and press and the punishment by law of libels and the mulcting of slanders? Let us turn over this matter. Libel being punished criminally, it is because that publication was against law, therefore unlawful, therefore without right. If in civil actions slanders are mulcted by law, it is because that speech was an infraction of the rights of another, therefore a wrong by the first. No "right" to publish either the libel or the slander can be sustained, except upon the theory of a "right" to do "wrong." Let it be true that the common law had fully evolved a "right of freedom of speech and of the press," yet in evolving this right it also identified it; identified and maintained not only the "right" of free speech, but as well identified and condemned the "wrong" of it, and identified the "wrong" of it not alone in "libels" and in "slanders," but in some other regards. No claim to "right of free speech" has served him who by the freedom of his speech obtained money by false pretenses, nor has a "right to print whatever one will" been ever of avail to forgers and counterfeiters. Howsoever, the people of the several States, by their several constitutions and laws, have found it best to retain, to broaden, or to restrict the common law in this field, which, as above pointed, the Federal Constitution abandons to their charge. Yet the common law still maintains in this District here, for I know of and have been pointed to no legislation therein on the subject; and I therefore pursue its principles a little further in their application to the particular matter, being concerned to identify an established subject of equitable intervention rather than subjects which are confessedly outside the limits of its legitimate scope.

It is no more suspected by the observant that courts of equity enjoin the commission of mere threatened crimes than they are suspected to hesitate in enjoining certain infractions of property rights, although happening to be conceived or involved in crime. These infractions are limited to infractions of such a particular nature as that after their perpetration the law has no remedy adequate against their results.

Finding in the common law that not all writings, not all speakings are lawful, that some are unlawful, and looking about for the particular rule which is competent to distinguish the lawful from the unlawful, I deduce it, from all considerations, to be this: Whatever in writing, print, or speech violates a legal right of another is unlawful, whether in itself alone it accommodates that result or whether it be but one instrument in a concert tuned to that end. If such a writing, printing, or speaking is unlawful, the rest is clear. It ought to be enjoined in advance if either it alone or the concert so invades rights of property as that the law affords no remedy adequate to compensate for the results. Nor would I yet be thought to consider that the process of injunction of right should go no further, that the inestimable advantage of a good name may not thus be rescued from preconceived despoilment, but of such questions when they come.

An elaboration of these arguments would usually be quite agreeable to my desire, yet these suggestions sound the hollowness of the defense, and to essay more might savor of an inquiry into the correctness of the injunction ordered by Mr. Justice Gould, a duty already taken up and discharged by abler hands than mine.

While the foregoing considerations put away the contention that the injunction invades the right of free speech and of the press, yet the position of the respondents involves questions vital to the preservation of social order, questions which smite the foundations of civil government, and upon which the supremacy of law over anarchy and riot verily depend. Are controversies to be determined in tribunals formally constituted by the law of the land for that purpose, or shall each who falls at odds with another take his own furious way? Are causes pending in courts to be decided by courts for litigants, or the view of each distempered litigant imposed upon the courts?

Are decrees of courts to look for their execution to the supremacy of law, or tumble in the wake of unsuccessful suitors who overset them and lay about the matter with their own hands, in turbulence proportioned to the frenzy of their disappointment?

You will note the sweet judicial calm of the opinion and the swell and epic swing of the language.

JUDGE PARKER'S OPINION.

I present a few citations from well-considered, apt, cases by eminent judges in support of the unrestrained free press, free speech, and so forth. I first refer to and insert as part of my speech an extract from Judge Parker's opinion, when judge of the New York court of appeals, in the case of Martin Fire Arms Company v. Shields (121 New York, p. 385):

The constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech and press, which in terms provides that "Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law should be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press," has for its only limitations the law of slander and libel. Hitherto, freedom of speech and of the press could only be interfered with if the speaker or writer offended against the criminal law or where the words amounted to a slander or libel of a person or corporation or their property, and the guaranteed right of trial by jury entitled the parties accused of slander or libel to have 12 men pass upon the question of their liability to respond in damages therefor and to measure such damages. But the precedent which the plaintiff seeks to establish would open the door for a judge sitting in equity to establish a censorship not only over the past and present conduct of a publisher of a magazine or newspaper, but would authorize such judge by decree to lay down a chart for future guidance, in so far as the plaintiff's property rights might seem to require, and in case of the violation of the provisions of such a decree, the usual course and practice of equity would necessarily be invoked, which would authorize the court to determine whether such published articles were contrary to the prohibitions of the decree, and, if so found, punishment should, for contempt, immediately follow. Thus a party could be punished for publishing an article which was not libelous, and that, too, without a trial by jury.

TWO MISSOURI OPINIONS.

I here refer to two opinions of my own State by two very able, learned, and patriotic judges of national reputation. The first is the case of the Life Association of America v. Boogher, reported in Third Missouri Appeal Reports, page 173. This action was brought to enjoin the publication of a libel:

The Life Association of America, a corporation engaged in the business of life assurance at St. Louis, filed its petition charging that Boogher and one Taylor had been for a long time engaged in the composition, publication, and circulation of false, slanderous, malicious, and libelous statements respecting the plaintiff; and that they threatened still further to circulate and publish, orally, in writing, and in print, said false, slanderous, malicious, and libelous statements, for the purpose of injuring and in order to levy blackmail on the plaintiff; but the said Boogher and Taylor were wholly insolvent and irresponsible, and the plaintiff had, therefore, no available recourse but an action for damages; and it asked for a restraining order to prevent the further publication of the libel and the infliction of irreparable injury thereby. * * *

The plaintiff dismissed the suit as to Taylor. The demurrer assigned for reasons that the petition showed no case for equitable relief; that it prayed for what the constitution of the State forbade; that a court of equity had no jurisdiction to restrain the publication of a libel; and that the application for a restraining order was not seasonably made, etc. * * *

It is obvious that if this remedy be given on the ground of the insolvency of the defendant, the freedom to speak and write which is secured by the constitution of Missouri to all its citizens, will be enjoyed by a man able to respond in damages to a civil action and denied to one who has no property liable to an execution. * * *

No case is cited by the learned counsel for appellant in which the jurisdiction here claimed has been exercised. All that they venture to suggest is that the various English courts who have refused to exercise such a jurisdiction have placed their refusal on grounds which do not make such refusal certainly apposite to the circumstances shown by the petition. The refusal has been uniform. The reasons assigned for it have been various, according to the peculiarities of the cases in which they were given. To argue from the qualifications of so many concurring refusals that it might be inferred that but for the qualifications the refusals would not have been made, would be an exceedingly unsafe line of argument anyway. In Missouri, where we are expressly forbidden by the constitution to assume the power we are asked by the plaintiff to exercise, our answer can not be doubtful. It is hardly necessary to quote the familiar language of our own organic law, which has always declared "that every person may freely speak, write, or print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty."

If it be said that the right to speak, write, or print thus secured to everyone can not be construed to mean a license to wantonly injure another, and that by the jurisdiction claimed it is only suspended until it can be determined judicially whether the exercise of it in the particular case be allowable, our answer is that we have no power to suspend that right for a moment or for any purpose. The sovereign power has forbidden any instrumentality of the government which is instituted to limit or restrain this right except by the fear of the penalty, civil or criminal, which may be with it on abuse. The general assembly can pass no law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press. It can only punish the licentious abuse of that freedom. Courts of justice can only administer the laws of the State, and, of course, can do nothing by way of judicial sentence which the general assembly has no power to sanction.

In the recent boycotting case of Marks & Haas Jeans Clothing Company v. Watson, One hundred and sixty-eighth Missouri Reports, the defendant company sought to enjoin defendants from declaring or enforcing a boycott against it, to induce its customers and others who might become such, from dealing with it.

To carry the "boycott" into effect, circulars were issued and freely circulated by defendants.

The circulars published were of like nature and for the same purpose as in the Buck Stove Company case. Judge Sherwood wrote the opinion—a great lawyer, and a profound student of the Constitution of the Jefferson type of thinking. He said:

Wherever the authority of injunction begins, there the right of free speech, free writing, and free publication ends. No halfway house stands on the highway between absolute prevention and absolute freedom.

In concluding his opinion he further said:

If these defendants are not permitted to tell the story of their wrongs, or, if you please, their supposed wrongs, by word of mouth or with pen or print, and to endeavor to persuade others to aid them by all peaceable means in securing redress of such wrongs, what becomes of free speech, and what of personal liberty? The fact that in exercising that freedom they thereby do plaintiff an actionable injury, such fact does not go a hair toward a diminution of their right of free speech, and so forth, for the exercise of which, if resulting in such injury, the Constitution makes them expressly responsible. But such responsibility is utterly incompatible with authority in a court of equity to prevent such responsibility from occurring.

We do not, of course, pass upon questions not involved in this record, such, for instance, as the power of a court of equity to enjoin the destruction of property or threats to do so, threats from which present ability to be carried into execution amount to verbal acts, nor threats of personal violence made with the view to intimidate, in its ordinary sense, employers or their employees; but we do hold that, upholding, as we must, the constitutional provisions heretofore quoted, the defendants can not be enjoined by a court of equity from exercising those rights of free speech, and so forth, guaranteed to them by the constitution of this State.

The case of the State ex rel. Liversey v. Judge (34 Louisiana Ann. Repts., 744) will be found to be directly in point and to absolutely confound Judge Wright's constitutional argument.

The entire case should be read, and I invite its reading. I quote the following portion of the opinion:

It would establish a complete censorship over the press so enjoined. No legal distinctions are nicer than those concerning libelous and defamatory publications. Some are privileged and others nonprivileged. How should defendants determine whether their publications were innocent or offensive? What they consider innocent the judge might consider libelous. There would be no safe course, except to take the opinion of the judge beforehand, or to abstain entirely from alluding to the plaintiff. What more complete censorship could be established? Under the operation of such a law, with a subservient or corrupt judiciary, the press might be completely muzzled and its just influence upon public opinion entirely paralyzed. Such powers do not exist in courts, and they have been constantly disclaimed by the highest tribunals of England and America. It has passed into a settled rule of jurisprudence that "courts of equity will not lend their aid to enjoin the publications of libels or works of a libelous nature, even though the libelous publication is calculated to injure the credit, business, or character of the person against whom it is directed. * * *

The injunction was held to be absolutely void, and the contempt proceedings that grew out of it was held likewise void, of course.

Mr. Webster, against executive usurpation, in the course of his great speech on that important question, said:

Given a free press, we may defy open or insidious enemies of liberty. It instructs the public mind and animates the spirit of patriotism. Its loud voice suppresses everything which would raise itself against the public liberty, and its blasting rebuke causes incipient despotism to perish in the bud.

* * * * * * *

The contest of the ages has been to rescue liberty from the grasp of executive power. On the long list of champions of human freedom there is not one name dimmed by the reproach of advocating the extension of executive authority.

At the present time it would seem as if the judiciary, inadvertently, would aid the Executive.

Listen to the Earl of Shaftesbury, whom Macaulay lauds as one of the very greatest of English statesmen, on the freedom of the press:

The wise men to whom we owe the constitutions under which we live did much to set free the press from the control of the law; much, indeed, do we owe them for the benefits they have conferred. But the leaven of ancient prejudice is still at work, even in this land of freedom; and in many cases the constitution of the country guarantees a right which the want of general information renders unpopular in its exercise. Those who love truth because it is necessary to human improvement ought to unite in their efforts to unfetter it.

WILL ULTIMATELY WIN FIGHT.

In conclusion on this question, than which none is greater and more important, I desire to say that Mr. Gompers and Mr. Mitchell are engaged in a tremendous battle, which they or those who come after them will ultimately win.

They are, in my judgment, right, and have demeaned themselves with becoming dignity, and have given to the order of Justice Gould such consideration as it was entitled to, believing as they did, that it was absolutely void, because it took away from them and all others situated as they were personal rights guaranteed them by the Constitution, it is not the first time that brave men have dared to brook arbitrary power, and it will not likely be the last time.

These men are not lawbreakers, but they are for the enforcement of law and the exercise of their rights and personal privileges under it. The order is a complete embargo against free speech and free publication, which the Constitution guarantees and the lovers of liberty and free country have always defended. As long as the liberty of the press is safe, all other liberties can be assured by its power to animate the feeble and retrieve the lost.

Gompers and Mitchell, by their decent behavior and yet manly defiance of a tyrannical court order—void absolutely—will start the country to thought. Wednesday, December 23, 1908, will no doubt mark a crisis in the struggle of labor for a nobler vantage ground. The crisis must come sooner or later, and the sooner the better. Let us pray the starting of the tide from then that shall sometime and somehow sweep industrial despotism into the sea and set labor free—freer than the gold that rules to-day.

I have no doubt but that the press and speech and peaceable assembly, notwithstanding the assaults made on them by a subsidized press and a truculent judiciary, will remain free, as now, and that by and by they will spread their wings for flight into a nobler freedom—the freedom of charity, of brotherhood that made Lincoln the beloved of his kind who lived above—

The whips and scorns of time,
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely.

They, like John Hampden, like Samuel Adams, like Savonorola, like Galileo, who, before them, fought hydra-headed tyranny in one form and another, will succeed and freedom's battle win. The old liberty-loving Dutchman and the brainy young coal miner will help to vindicate the reality of liberty, and they will help to vouchsafe its enjoyments and blessings to millions of serfs and wage slaves who have never yet tasted its promptings to higher hopes and aspirations.

LITTLEFIELD'S CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENT FOR THE INJUNCTION.

I desire to notice, in passing, the able argument made in the first session of this Congress by Congressman Littlefield, in which he argued at length that under sections 1 and 2 of Article III of the Federal Constitution the federal courts had plenary power to issue all kinds of writs of injunction known to the procedure of the English courts of chancery to punish for contempt—direct or indirect—in all cases without the intervention of a jury, and that Congress had no power to interfere, and that any interference on its part by legislation would be unwarranted and void, because unconstitutional.

I am disposed to believe, with Mr. Littlefield, that Congress would have no power under the Constitution to change the equity practice as to injunctions and contempt proceedings ancillary thereto, provided the Supreme Court shall continue to stand for a technical construction of the constitutional law and hold fast to the practice of the English courts of chancery at the time of the adoption of the Constitution.

However, I do not believe that the Supreme Court of the United States, as a coordinate branch of the Government, and possessed of all the judicial power that could be cast upon it, could not, as an inherent quality of its sovereignty, and in the plenitude of its original power, originate equity doctrines meeting the conditions of the age and remodel the practice required to carry into full execution such new equity principles.

A quotation heretofore made from Justice Brewer in this speech bears out this contention, and is in the spirit of the original nature of the principles of equity and their enforcement. A serious objection to Mr. Littlefield's argument is that he shuts his eyes to the new conditions, and talks as if living three hundred years ago. He takes no note of the present factory system, the transportation system, and other great changes to which I have heretofore adverted, and which, then, were not even dreamed of by the greatest. Hence he starts out blindfolded, because he willfully puts himself in the midst of the dark ages of industrialism. While he strikes with the strength of a giant, he misses the mark and the scales stand dead still.

Jurisprudence is a progressive science, and expands and adjusts itself to the growing conditions of civilization, and if it does not, must inevitably sink into a despotism of arbitrary precedents. His speech is a constitutional argument in favor of the most unlimited use of the writ of injunction in industrial disputes.

He pleads for its use to control absolutely, and suppress by imprisonment, if need be, these great industrial battles waged on one side for simple justice and on the other for old conditions, and all the profits and favoritism.

These conflicts are but economic upheavals produced by the dynamics of spiritual justice—a justice akin to charity, a full-grown justice that will stop short of nothing but an equal division, founded on equality of creation and opportunities. This kind of special pleading may answer for a while, but the statesman must take the place of the specialist. He must open up the highways of our growing democratic civilization and let it sweep on and on to higher levels and nobler victories for the sons and daughters of men.

Mr. Littlefield is certain that he is on a rock foundation and that he is right. He is a conservative of the conservatives.

JUDGE JENKINS AS ONE CRYING IN THE WILDERNESS AND WITHOUT HOPE.

Judge JENKINS prints, in his speech of January 29, some of the bills introduced in this Congress for the relief of labor, occasioned from the hard stress that it is in on account of recent adverse opinions of the federal courts. He propounds sundry questions which were no doubt suggested by these bills. From them you would think that society and constitutional government were in great danger of being destroyed, and certainly so if these proposed measures should become laws. He said:

Congress is asked to surrender its protective power over trade and commerce in order that crime, if committed, may go unpunished; to deprive the court of the power to protect the citizens in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property; to declare that what is now a crime against persons and property shall not be criminal, in order to permit persons so disposed to interfere with constitutional rights of the citizen to enjoy life, liberty, and property; to declare that what has always been considered vested, valuable, personal, and property rights, guaranteed by the Constitution, shall not be entitled to protection; to deprive the citizen of the power to protect his property; to tear away the very substructure of government erected to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property.

These questions, of course, are intended to expose the dangerous character of this proposed legislation and to make clear that it threatens the security of property; that it would promote crime and endanger life and liberty by breaking down constitutional guaranties for the protection of life, liberty, and property, and propounded in a destructive spirit of criticism.

Warming up to his subject for the same set purpose of discrediting all proposed labor legislation, he hurls another volley from his question catapult into the breach, touching the powers of Congress, and whether Congress can take from or even restrict the federal judiciary in the exercise of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution; they are as follows:

Is not every citizen entitled to the full protection of the judicial power of the United States, both at law and in equity, in all cases not in conflict with the Constitution or laws of the United States, except as to rights conferred by a rule of law?

Does Congress possess power to deny any citizen the full protection of the full judicial power of the United States for his life, liberty, property, and rights, subject his life, liberty, property, and rights to the will of any person?

Is it not both possible and probable that if a court is prevented from issuing an injunction it may place it beyond the power of a court to pronounce a judgment that can be made effective? Therefore, does it not follow that to refuse a party an injunction it might amount to a denial of justice and deprivation of rights, rendering a judgment ineffectual?

Is not the granting of an injunction an exercise of judicial power vested in the courts and extended as provided in the Constitution?

Does Congress possess the power to discriminate to such an extent that the legislation would be a denial of the equal protection of the law? Can Congress deny one that which is allowed another under like circumstances?

Does Congress possess the power to say that no contract entered into between different parties, no matter what it may provide for, shall be deemed to be criminal?

Does Congress possess power to legalize crime? Does Congress possess the power to surrender its protective power over trade and commerce? Does Congress possess the power to surrender its protection over trade and commerce in order that personal and property rights may be destroyed and the citizen deprived of the power of protection to life, liberty, and property? Does Congress possess the power to regulate or in any manner interfere with contracts, unless the same in enforcement would regulate or operate as a restraint upon interstate commerce?

I think it is apparent that there is a confusion of ideas in the mind of this able lawyer and that he has given but little sincere thought to the problems of industrial conflict. Ajax-like, he undertook the tremendous task of beating into insensibility, using the Constitution as a club, the great ethical, economic principle of evenhanded justice to all alike, which is of later origin than the Constitution and which must be reckoned with in some satisfactory manner in the not far-off distant future.

It is the duty of the Government to find a way to give to every citizen, to whatever class he may belong, his personal as well as property rights or cease admitting that he has such rights, and then apologetically assert that they are too remote to be obtained and enjoyed. I charge that it is a reflection upon the legislators of the day to concede that any class or any man of a class is or may be wronged, and yet, by reason of the Constitution and decisions of the courts standing as a barrier, the rights of a class or a man of that class can not be enjoyed, is a concession that brings the law into disrespect and contempt, and the lawgivers and law interpreters must be placed in the same category.

I am sorry that Judge JENKINS is not present to hear what I am saying. Will some one tell me why the Judge did not in his able speech mention and discuss the "Trades-dispute act, 1906?" Why did he not divide the time between it and the writ of injunction, with its drastic procedure, and the common law?

These old laws challenge his admiration, and his genius corruscates brilliantly in contemplating how perfectly they buttress and brace and strengthen the Constitution, and with what effectiveness the injunction can be used to protect property and its most metaphysical rights, recently discovered, and for the protection of which the modern injunction is particularly adapted.

TRADES-DISPUTE ACT IGNORED.

He is so enamored with the new injunction and the old Constitution and the dangerous labor legislation proposed that he clearly overlooks the "Trades-dispute act, 1906," and all decisions that might help and benefit the struggling millions that must work to feed and clothe themselves and the rest of humanity.

Of the demands of labor, he says:

The labor interests of this country, that are very dear to us all, come here and say, "We have certain propositions which we have prepared which we submit for the consideration of the Congress of the United States, and we insist upon having those views written into the statute books of this country." As a Member of this House I have felt like giving consideration to the very deep and important constitutional questions involved, and I have no interest in this question beyond the great constitutional question involved. I want the people of this country who are interested in the perpetuity of American institutions to know what questions have been presented to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Are we not all interested in the perpetuity of the American institutions? Yes; certainly; but some of its institutions once good could be made better, in my judgment. Such acts as the "Trade-disputes act, 1906," are calculated to do more to perpetuate the institutions of this country by far than long, abstract arguments about the Constitution and how religiously it takes care of all the people and their property. I deny it. It does not take care of the helpless and oppressed and their personal rights and liberties with the same adequacy and resolution that it does of the rich and their property, and abundance of authority can be produced to substantiate the statement. His argument, summed up, means this to the working people:

Stop your striking, cease your boycotting, accept conditions as they are, for there is no help for you. I admit that you are very dear to us all, but we can not do anything for you, the glorious old Constitution will not permit it. Then, besides, it would seem as if in your blindness you wanted to tear up things generally.

In confirmation of this, read the extracts from the gentleman's speech that I have heretofore quoted in my remarks.

As much as I dislike to, I am forced to agree with Mr. Littlefield and Judge JENKINS, or rather with their conclusions, that the struggle of organized labor is about foreclosed for the present, so far as procuring results are concerned. I also agree with their further conclusion—that the Federal Constitution, statutes, and common law as now interpreted constitute a complete bar against organized labor getting anything of a helpful nature.

The Supreme Court of the United States will not do for labor what it did in the Dred Scott decision of the fifties for the rich slaveholders in settling that question under the Constitution that slaves were property; nor will it do for organized labor what it did for the bankers in the early seventies in the legal-tender cases; nor will it do for organized labor what it did for the millionaires of the country in the nineties in the income-tax cases. And yet there is as much authority now, and more justice, for amending the Constitution by interpretation in behalf of organized labor and for the protection of personal rights and liberty than there was for the protection of property decided for in the above cases.

WOULD AMEND CONSTITUTION.

But the influences in behalf of organized labor are not so great and powerful as in the cases mentioned. However, if labor would unite in one common bond and use its influence and political power as a balance, irrespective of party, and elect the Presidents and Congresses for the next twenty years, the Supreme Court would amend the Constitution to meet the spirit of the age so that salutary labor legislation could be enacted, giving an opportunity for a solution of the great economic question of evenhanded justice to all alike involved within the modern industrial conflicts.

I do not cite these cases in a spirit of censure, but simply for the purpose of enlightening that portion of the people not familiar with the actions of the highest court in the land, and what it may be induced to do when outside partisan pressure is potential enough. And I might note in passing that the court, under sufficient partisan pressure, by acts of Congress could be reorganized by lessening and increasing the number of judges for the accomplishment of the object premeditated and desired.

I do not approve of that method of manipulating the judiciary of the country, the capstone of our Government and highest repository of power in the Government; yet as precedents have established this method, I only raise the question in passing, and ask whether it might not be followed now, especially when it would be right to do so. And I might mention the fact that Congress has, within the last few days, circumvented the Constitution in the most subservient way by repealing, in part, an act of Congress passed at the first session of this Congress to make way for the eligibility of Senator KNOX to the office of Secretary of State, by appointment of the President. That Senator KNOX is well fitted for the position none will deny, but I hardly believe it safe to juggle with and evade the Constitution for such a personal purpose. Oh, such flimflamming, such unblushing flunkeyism—a spectacle fit for the gods.

Having said what I have about the Constitution, and not for the particular purpose of criticising it, but to inform the public that in origin, influence, and ultimate purpose it is aristocratic, and, if unamended for another century, under its protecting ægis will grow up a property aristocracy such as the world has never seen.

I desire to say a word as to how it was made and its character generally. The Constitution was framed by the finest lot of large-minded and noble-spirited aristocrats that the world has ever seen. Under the splendid genius of the great Marshall, who was the ambitious and mortal protagonist of Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, the foundations of the Constitution were laid deep and strong for the protection of property to the neglect of personal rights and liberty. By him its destiny as the completest written instrument for the protection of property against all encroachments of a personal character was fixed, and to-day it is the glory of the rich and powerful, and the checks and balances it puts on the majority by them are considered as divinely appointed.

First, every measure, however much wanted by the people, must pass the Senate; second, if it passes the Senate, it must be approved and signed by the President; and, third, it must run the gantlet of the veto of the Supreme Court by interpretation before it can be considered an established law of the land. By these checks on all legislation, initiated in the House of Representatives, the popular branch of the Government, such legislation is necessarily greatly modified, and very often defeated. But I have not the time to discuss this subject further in detail, and yet I wonder at the fact that the best-informed people know so little of the Constitution, its nature, and trend.

Richard Henry Lee, in opposing its adoption in the house of burgesses in Virginia, speaking of the power of the lower House, said:

> The only check to be found in favor of the democratic principle in this system is the House of Representatives, which I believe may be justly called a mere shred or rag of representation.

Martin Van Buren, in the Senate, once said, speaking with reference to the powers of the Supreme Court:

> There exists not upon this earth, and there never did exist, a judicial tribunal clothed with power so various and so important.

Mr. Boutmy, in his work on Studies in the Constitutional Law, said:

> It is one of Blackstone's maxims that in every constitution a power exists which controls without being controlled, and whose decisions are supreme. This power is represented in the United States by the small oligarchy of nine irremovable judges. I do not know of any more striking political paradox than this supremacy of a nonelective power in a democracy reputed to be of the extreme type.

Every student of constitutional law, or, for that matter, every person who has read the instrument, knows that the two methods provided for its amendment are almost impossible of accomplishment. It has been amended but twice within sixty years, and it is well known that it is next to impossible to amend it. To my mind a democratic constitution should be flexible and easy to amend, and just in proportion to its being easily amended to that extent is it democratic and no further.

One of the most prophetic indications of a better day coming is that some of the ablest writers and publicists are publishing to the world that the Constitution was actually man made, and that it is possessed of the infirmities of its creator, and that "the process of the laws" are cruelly manifesting these infirmities and at the same time suggesting changes that ought to be made in it by additions, subtractions, and divisions; that a rewriting would not be improper in many respects.

The following quotation from The Spirit of American Government, by J. Allen Smith, is apropos:

> A constitution is in no proper sense the embodiment of the will of the people unless it recognizes the right of the majority to amend. Checks which prevent legal and political readjustment are a survival from monarchy and aristocracy and are not found in any full-fledged democracy. Constitutions which are really democratic contain only such checks upon the people, if indeed they can be called checks, as are calculated to insure the deliberate expression of the popular will. Constitutional provisions designed to obstruct amendment are not only an anomaly in popular government, but they are in the very nature of the case inoperative. This follows from the fact that the law-making body, whether it be the people themselves or a representative assembly, is the final interpreter of the constitution and may enact laws which virtually amend it. To make such provisions really effective, the constitution must vest the power to prevent legislation in some branch of government not directly responsible to the people. Usually this is a king or hereditary class. Our Constitution, however, provides a substitute for these in its general system of checks, and especially in the independence of our national judiciary, which in addition to the exercise of ordinary judicial functions is also practically a branch of the legislature.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I hope what has been said will not be regarded as having been uttered in a captious and fault-finding spirit, for I assure all that it has not. I have but tried to point out the weak spots of those who are always ready to oppose the struggle going on by the working people in this country—who are using such means as they have and can contrive for the noble purpose of bettering their condition and finally extricating themselves from ages of thraldom—without offering or suggesting the least aid or even hinting at a remedy, but all the time arguing against all remedies and closing forever the door of all hope. I have had occasion to mildly criticise the laws and Constitution of the country, not to discredit, but amend and improve the same. I have tried to be clear and use language graphic and pointed enough to impress my hearers and readers so that they may not too soon forget. The right will triumph and labor will yet achieve its freedom. And I will be content to have been regarded as one of the humblest of the friends of the weak and oppressed.

This will, perhaps, be my last speech in Congress, and upon a subject very dear to my heart. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I thought it was twenty-three.

The CHAIRMAN. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the Chair is mistaken, but I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the origin of medicine has been contemporaneous with the origin of civilization. It is noticeable in the lower animals that when they become sick or injured, they often change their usual mode of living, seek rest, quiet, and often will seek some herb or healing substance. The savage in his primitive state, with superstition and experience; the tribe has certain habits and forms that are practiced on those who become injured or sick. There was much mystery about the practice of medicine in the olden time, and it was scarcely more than myth and superstition. It is recorded in the Scripture that Joseph, seventeen hundred years before Christ, gave instructions to his servants and physicians to embalm him when dead, thus showing that the ancients had some crude knowledge of anatomy. Moses and Solomon showed some knowledge of hygiene and of medicine. The instructions of Moses in reference to the care and treatment of those afflicted with leprosy was remarkable in that time for its accuracy in the knowledge of the disease. It is said the Egyptians placed those who became ill in a public place where anyone who happened to pass by and observing them might be able to give advice as to the best means of cure. The practice of advice has been reversed, as those who become sick in our time are visited by their friends, who usually are ready with information and advice as to the best means of cure, all free of charge. In the olden time when one who had been sick and had received treatment and recovered, he was compelled to go to the temple and there give a description of his illness and what remedy had been of benefit to him. The temples of Canopus and Vulcan at Memphis became the great public places where these records were zealously guarded. These records were kept for the inspection of the public, but the priests had charge of them, and thus collected a great amount of knowledge of more or less importance, and afterwards tried to found an exclusive practice of the art of healing. They had formed in this way what they called "Hiera Biblos," or sacred book. If they practiced according to these records and followed them closely, and if the patient died, they were held blameless, but if they departed from the rules as laid down by these records they were then punished by death. In many other instances in the Bible the question of hygiene and rules of health are given.

The Chinese are apparently the only people of all the world who have not changed to any great degree in their manners, their laws, and religious beliefs. One of the Emperors, who is supposed to have died two thousand seven hundred years before Christ, named Hwang-ti, is supposed to be the inventor of their practice of medicine, and these methods instituted by him largely serves them as their medical guide to the present day.

The Greeks furnish us with a history that is of most interest concerning medicine in an historical way. Among all the earliest Greeks in the field of medicine Æsculapius is the most eminent. He was probably the leading character of all the ancients. His success at that time was the marvel of the people. It was told that Pluto, the god of hell, became alarmed because he was receiving so few each day in his fiery place that he complained to Jupiter, who destroyed this audacious healer. Since the time of Æsculapius, the practice of medicine has undergone a gradual change and improvement. Superstitition and myth has given way to facts, and the practice of medicine is becoming more and more a matter of exact science. Yet it is not probable that the time ever will come when it can be said that it is an exact science. The changing conditions of civilization produce new problems that physicians and scientists must solve. The physician is daily having to meet new conditions of environment.

The discovery by Harvey of the circulation of the blood was a great step in the direction of a more rational understanding of anatomy. In the light of our knowledge of to-day it seems incredible that his discovery should have met with such opposition as it did at the time. One time he was almost ruined on account of the opposition to his claim of the circulation of the blood. In the early time it was difficult to get any accurate knowledge of anatomy, for the reason that the physicians were prohibited from examining the body after death. The clergy of that time thought it was a great sin to pollute that which was made in the image of God. It is recorded that an eminent physician of the early time, Ambroise Paré, won the siege of the city of Metz by gaining admission into the besieged place, and his presence so inspired confidence of the soldier whose fame they already knew that they believed that if they became sick he would be able to save them, there being much sickness in the city at the time.

One great characteristic of this eminent physician, Paré, was that when any new discovery was made by him it was immediately given to the public, so that all might have the benefit of his knowledge. In his work on surgery he says:

I have tried to dispense liberally to everybody the gifts that God has conferred upon me and that I am not the worse for it, as the light of a candle will not be diminished no matter how many come to light their torches by it.

Galen and Hypocrates gave valuable knowledge to the world in their time on the subject of medicine, Hypocrates's writings being very voluminous at that time and probably only excelled by the Greek Hermes of an earlier date, who devoted six volumes of the forty-two to medicine, though this work was probably a collection of several writers.

Jenner in his discovery of the use of bovine vaccine and the repeated vaccination for generations since that time has removed from the world, wherever it is practiced, the terror of an epidemic of smallpox. In the olden times epidemics of contagious and infectious disease took away thousands of people, and physicians and scientists of those times were unable to stay the awful progress. The treatment of the insane of the early time was one that was very inhuman. Those so afflicted were thought to be possessed of the devil and were treated more as criminals than sick persons. They were often restrained by being tied to chairs and compelled to remain in that position, thus being compelled to suffer by the treatment.

Boerhaave, of Holland, revolutionized the clinical observation in the field of medicine. Virchow during his life did much for pathology. Haller, of Germany, was a leader in the field of physiology a generation later. John Hunter had great influence in his time in demonstrating and improving the methods of operative surgery.

The discovery of anæsthetics used in surgical operations to be performed without pain was a great boon to humanity. The claim of first discovery has been in dispute, though it is probable that it was first used by a country physician in Georgia by the name of Long, but who had not given the knowledge of his discovery to the public. It remained for Morton, Jackson, and Wells to demonstrate publicly what could be done with ether. The last century has shown greater progress and development in the investigation of the cause and prevention of disease than ever before in the history of the world. The great epidemics that used to sweep over parts of the country could hardly take place to-day in any civilized part of the world. The finding of the germs of disease and knowing where that germ is found and how it gains access to the human body will have a tendency to put disease under our control or at least reducing it to a minimum if proper means were taken to prevent the germ from infecting the healthy person. It used to be thought that malaria was produced by breathing the gases that emanated from marshes and swamps and decaying vegetable matter. Scientists have demonstrated beyond a doubt that it is only communicated by the mosquito, and in order to get rid of malaria it is necessary to stop the breeding of this carrier of the poison. Only a few years ago it was thought that yellow fever was communicated directly from the sick patient afflicted with this disease to the healthy, but it is now known through the investigation of the yellow-fever commission which went to Cuba only a few years ago that this disease is communicated by the mosquito, which has first bitten the patient sick with the disease and then transferred the infection to the healthy person. The discovery of these facts in reference to malaria and yellow fever has enabled us to go successfully into Panama and continue the great work of digging the canal. And it is probable, if this discovery had not been made, that thousands of lives would have been lost in this great work.

The yellow-fever epidemics which used to sweep over the South, producing the death of hundreds of human beings and costing millions of money, causing cities to be depopulated, in the light of our knowledge will hardly ever occur again. Too much praise can not be given to Doctors Reed, Carroll, and Lazeare, who conducted the investigation as a yellow-fever commission, and Congress did a wise thing as a reward of their faithful service in pensioning their widows. It has been ascertained that many of these infectious diseases can be avoided if proper precaution is taken. [Applause.]

Typhus fever has become a disease almost extinct, due to the fact that it was discovered that it was produced by overcrowding of people in houses and ships. The strict supervision of lodging houses has been of great benefit in stopping the spread of this as well as every disease.

Typhoid fever, which takes away so many of our people each year, the majority of whom are young and in the vigor of life, can be prevented or at least become less prevalent if the people are shown how to take proper precaution in preventing this disease. It is the duty of the officials to see that pure water is at all times supplied to the public so that this disease may not be transmitted. It is said that one case of typhoid fever in a city of the United States being treated carelessly resulted in an epidemic which produced more than a thousand cases. The prevention of typhoid fever is occupying the mind of the health authorities of every part of our country to-day. Just now the whole civilized world is awakened to the importance of finding out how to cure and to prevent tuberculosis. It is said in the United States that 150,000 people die each year as a result of this disease, and the loss in money amounts to more than $700,000,000.

Physicians and scientists are continually investigating some way whereby they may be able to cure this disease that causes the death of more people than any other one in the world. Many times it has been thought that a cure had been discovered and was heralded over the world, but so far it has each time met with failure. It is to be hoped that with continued investigation some one in the future may discover some means whereby a person so afflicted may be cured. The prevention of the disease, so far as our knowledge extends now, can be brought about by the education of the people as to the cause and means of the spread of the germ producing this disease.

We now have three branches of medical service in our National Government—namely, the army, navy, and the Marine-Hospital and Public Health. A surgeon-general is appointed at the head of each department. The Surgeon-General of the Army has control of medical subjects pertaining to the army, the Surgeon-General of the Navy has control of such in the navy, and the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service is the civilian branch of the medical service of the Government and has control of matters of public health outside of the army and navy.

The public health department should be kept distinctly the civilian branch of the medical service, and the members should not be permitted to clothe themselves in the gold lace of uniform. They ought to be considered just doctors and scientists for the purpose of investigating disease and the best way to prevent and cure it. Each one of these departments has its own laboratory and sanatorium, and each conducting the department as best as it can and with the limited appropriation given for such work. There are able men connected with all three of these departments, and the surgeon-general of each is a physician of great learning. These departments of our Government ought to be combined in such a way as to secure better service.

The last Republican and Democratic platforms declared in favor of the establishment of a department of public health. President Roosevelt in his message to Congress urged that such action be taken as necessary for the establishment of such a department by a rearrangement of the present bureaus. I fully expect that after Mr. Taft becomes President he will urge on Congress the importance of carrying out this part of the platform, and both sides of this House will certainly be anxious to fulfill this part of the contract with the people. If a public health department were established so that all three branches of the medical service were working in unison, each would have more benefit of what the other is doing. In this way duplication of work could be prevented. A combination of these able physicians at the head of such a department would be able to do much better for the Government. It certainly would be a benefit to the people if more information could be given relative to sanitation and the best way to avoid such diseases as tuberculosis, typhoid fever, and other contagious and infectious diseases which at times are so prevalent in the country. The people, as a rule, are willing to do what they can to prevent disease when the way is pointed out to them. It seems to me when we appropriate millions and millions for the destruction of insects destroying crops—and I do not desire to question the wisdom of doing so—I also believe a certain sum should be set aside each year for use of a department of public health to investigate the cause and prevention of disease, and as a result great good would be brought about for the people. Many lives would be saved, much suffering prevented, and millions of dollars would be saved to the people. Our Nation of people would become stronger and better able to stand hardships when called on to do so, because I believe no nation can be a strong nation unless its people are a healthy people. [Applause.] In the last ten years more than $40,000,000 has been appropriated by the National Government for the purpose of preventing the destruction of crops by insects.

In the present appropriation bill for the support of the Department of Agriculture we have appropriated as much as $300,000 for the control of one kind of insect affecting the growing fruit.

The treatment of rabies by the Pasteur method has almost put an end to the outbreak of this disease in human beings. Physicians know now that many times the life of a patient afflicted with tetanus has been saved because of the knowledge of the germ giving rise to the disease and the discovery of more rational treatment with antitoxin in this malady. The discovery of the germ of diphtheria and the treatment by injection of antitoxin has reduced the mortality more than 50 per cent. Many other diseases might be enumerated which have been prevented and almost eradicated by the investigation of the cause and the best mode of treatment.

The department of health, if established and given an appropriation for the investigation of diseases of an infectious and contagious character, I have no doubt in time would be the means of saving thousands of human lives.

The Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, in his annual report for 1907, says in reference to tuberculosis:

With regard to tuberculosis, the suppression of which is engaging the activities of all civilized countries, the operations of the General Government relate to the exclusion of immigrants thus affected, the carrying out of the President's order for the prevention of the spread of this disease among government employees, the maintenance of sanitariums for tuberculous patients of the Army, the Navy, and the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and the encouragement, in so far as the General Government may participate, of all efforts of States and municipalities for its suppression.

The sanatorium for tuberculous patients conducted by this service at Fort Stanton, N. Mex., continues to give good results, 101 patients having been discharged during the past year as cured, or with the disease arrested.

[Applause.]

The Surgeon-General of the Navy has given, in a letter to me, quite an extensive account of the work being done by his department, and I desire permission to print his letter in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The States are now doing considerable work within their borders in an endeavor to prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases. But, Mr. Chairman, they can not be expected to do all this work alone, any more than they would be expected to eradicate insects affecting crops, enforce the pure-food law, or entirely manage railroad rate regulation. Some States have been doing a great work along this line, notably Pennsylvania, New York, Wisconsin, and Massachusetts, and I call your special attention to letters from the state boards of health of these States. Illinois furnishes free of charge antitoxin to all those afflicted with diphtheria, and has medical men looking after the health of the people of the State all the time. [Applause.]

The Agricultural Department is doing a good work in endeavoring to stamp out tuberculosis in cattle, which is one source of infection of human beings through the medium of milk. A strict supervision should be had over all dairies, so that no cow that is so infected should be allowed to remain in the herd and supply milk for the public.

Wisconsin has taken the lead of all the States in this line of work, and I am informed the percentage of cattle affected with tuberculosis is the smallest in that State of any in the Union.

Mr. Russell, who is at the head of the department of experimental stations, is one of the most successful in his line in the whole country. As a result of his work people go to that State more than any other to buy cows, believing that there is less chance to get one infected with tuberculosis. Every other State can do as well as this one if the men at the head of these departments will do their work as well.

These letters I desire to have printed to show what is being done by the different States so far as I have any information. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I desire to urge upon this body the importance of the establishment of a national board of health, with the three departments now existing in our Government, and an appropriation each year of a certain sum of money for the special investigation of the cause and prevention of contagious and infectious diseases. I believe if this were done that in a few years it will be demonstrated that it was wise legislation. I also ask, Mr. Chairman, to print in the RECORD an extract of the speech of Arthur Newsholme, M. D., medical officer to the local government board of England, delivered at the International Congress on Tuberculosis held in this city last September. [Great applause.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY,
Washington, D. C.

Memorandum prepared for the Secretary of the Navy in reply to Hon. M. D. FOSTER, M. C.

All of the operations of the Medical Department of the United States Navy are either directly or indirectly concerned with public health. Its first duty is, of course, to the naval establishment and to the territory and peoples which come within its purview as being without other proper medical surveillance and for humanitarian reasons, or the purposes of safeguarding the health of the personnel and maintaining a state of physical efficiency in the naval forces. Such general work in all the branches of medical science—medicine, surgery, and sanitation and hygiene—can not fail to widely benefit the human race, and the results constitute a continual, practical contribution to progress in the interest of human welfare. The late Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report for the fiscal year 1908, took occasion to express his pleasure in reporting "that the work accomplished in this branch of the naval organization has been of such a character as to be a matter for congratulation," and, while the routine duties and efficiency of the Medical and Hospital corps are matters of unfailing importance, many special features of progress and investigation relative to the cause and prevention of diseases that affect the human race have marked the history of the Medical Department during the past few years.

The studies, investigations, and work above referred to have all been quietly carried on in the course of the regular work of the officers and men of the Medical Department at the various stations and hospitals and on board ship, and what has been accomplished was without additional expense to the Government, so that, though the records of accumulated data and results obtained have been published from time to time in the annual reports of the Surgeon-General and the United States Naval Medical Bulletin, they have attracted but little attention beyond professional circles. A brief enumeration of some of the prominent items of the work of the Medical Department of the Navy may be pertinent to your inquiry and of interest.

The medical department stands ready at all times to assist in rendering such relief, personal and material, as may be necessary in civil communities, abroad or at home, which have been visited by catastrophies of whatever character or magnitude. The record of the past includes a long list of such instances, and the manner in which they have been performed, from every point of view, reflects credit upon the profession and the naval establishment. For example:

In January, 1907, when the country, through the navy, hastened to the relief of the stricken at Kingston, Jamaica, after the earthquake disaster, the most urgent assistance required was in medical and surgical directions. Reporting upon the work done, Admiral Davis said: "I can not speak without emotion of the work of our surgeons, headed by the fleet surgeon, H. E. Ames. The greatest physical strain and mental stress fell to their share. Their untiring devotion and energy saved many lives. Most of the good was effected by them. They have my sincere thanks."

While the U. S. S. Paducah and the U. S. S. Marietta were serving in Honduranean waters in May, 1907, the medical officers of these ships, with the assistance of others, engaged actively in the solution of health problems in the towns of Ceiba and Puerto Cortez. The energies of these officers were directed toward sanitary education, through widely distributed printed circulars; the formation of a sanitary scheme and the direction of the work involved; the treatment of the sick among the native inhabitants of the towns and Nicaraguan soldiers; and the general administrative and prophylactic medication against malaria. Much was accomplished in improving the condition of the towns named, and a great deal of suffering was relieved and prevented.

During the summer of 1907 naval medical hospitality was offered to the sick of the foreign ships visiting this country as invited guests at the Jamestown Exposition. The greatest number of cases admitted for treatment were from the Brazilian cruisers Barazo and Richuelo suffering with beriberi. While inmates of the hospital these cases were carefully studied by the medical officers with a view to determining the cause of the disease and means of preventing it. A report on this investigation was published in the Naval Medical Bulletin.

On the occasion of the fire disaster at Chelsea, Mass., in April, 1908, splendid relief was rendered to the sufferers by the members of the Medical Department of the Navy in that vicinity. The medical officer in command of the naval hospital at Chelsea early realized that relief of all sorts would soon be demanded, and necessary steps were at once taken to render any and every aid possible at the hospital and in the burning city. The work done at this time was most commendable and was so extensive and of such varied character that its value can not be properly estimated. In commenting upon the medical report, Admiral Swift said: "In the confusion which existed * * * the personal efforts, judgment, and the administrative capacity of Medical Inspector Ames were most important in relieving existing conditions and suggesting methods to the authorities of Chelsea, who found themselves confronted with a situation entirely outside of their training and experience."

Two medical officers of the navy, with supplies, were sent to the scene of the cyclone disaster which visited several of the Southern States and did great damage throughout a district some 50 miles long and about 1 mile wide in the vicinity of Purvis, Miss. During the few days that these two officers were on the ground they worked untiringly, in active cooperation with officers of the army and the state authorities and the various members of the medical profession resident in or near the district. Their energies were directed—not only in professional channels, but toward effecting organization and accumulating data, and the services performed were most creditable and of great benefit to the sufferers of the community and value to those who subsequently took charge of and carried on the work.

During the great yellow-fever epidemic that visited the Southern States, particularly Louisiana, in 1906, the Medical Department of the Navy was represented among the government officers who were rendering services in caring for the victims of the disease and seeking to prevent its spread.

In each of our island possessions under the supervision of the Navy Department, such as Culebra, Guam, and Samoa, the native populations are entirely dependent for medical and surgical relief upon the Medical Department of the Navy. Hygienic and sanitary supervision and investigation of the diseases peculiar to the different communities constitute an important part of the work in this philanthropic charge.

At Guam the medical care and supervision of the leper and gangosa colonies which have been established on that island fall to the lot of the Medical Department of the Navy, and the officers representing this branch of the service at that station have been diligently studying these two diseases—in the former with a view to its successful treatment or alleviation and preventing its spread; in the latter (a comparatively new disease), with a view to discovering its cause, preventing its spread, and establishing its treatment on a rational basis. What has been said with regard to gangosa may be also said of guha, otherwise known as "epidemic asthma," which is a new disease in the eyes of the world, common to Guam. Both gangosa and guha have been studied from all aspects, and reports have been published in the United States Naval Medical Bulletin and the Annual Reports of the Surgeon-General. The germ cause of gangosa has been discovered, and much is being done to relieve the sufferers and prevent the spread of this dreadful disease.

At Samoa the disease of greatest prevalence is elephantiasis, and this has been the subject of careful study and successful surgical treatment at the hands of the naval medical officers on duty at that station. The disease known as "yaws" and a peculiarly destructive form of conjunctivitis, also common to this people, have been carefully studied with resulting valuable observations by the naval medical officers at this station, and, in general, the study of the pathology of this island possession and the relief of disease conditions is being carried on. Reports are to be found in the publications of the Medical Department of the Navy.

At the isolated island of Culebra, sanitary and medical supervision is had by medical officers of the navy, and, in connection with this field of professional work, studies have been and are being conducted with marked success as regards prevention and treatment of the intestinal parasitic diseases which are common to the people of this island. Original observations on such parasites have been made and reported in the Naval Medical Bulletin, particularly on bilharziosis.

In the Philippines, at Panama, and at the various other outlying stations of the United States Navy, important and valuable work has been carried on by medical officers of the service in connection with the prevention and treatment of malaria, dengue, dysentery, cholera, etc., and much light has been thrown upon the significance of the symptomatology of various vague tropical disorders by the studies of these officers. Definite contributions on the various phases of tropical diseases, such as malaria, dysentery, and dengue, have been made to the advance of medicine, also, by these officers.

In Hawaii and at San Francisco, Cal., the subject of plague prevention has been given careful consideration, and at the latter-named place a board of medical officers was organized for the detailed study of the needs of Mare Island in this connection. Its report was exhaustive and illuminating.

The great danger to which the delicate mechanism of hearing—the ear drum, etc.—is subjected as a result of heavy-gun fire in the United States Navy has been the subject of careful study by the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and successful effort has been made by thorough test to find some device which will protect the ears of officers and men from the disastrous consequences—such as permanent deafness—of air concussion.

The question of heat exhaustion, which is common in all maritime services among those of the engine and fire room forces who are exposed to excessive heat, has been and is being made the subject of careful investigation by medical officers of the service. The results so far are incomplete, but it is believed that in the near future illuminating reports will be forthcoming. There is very little known about the condition in question, and it is one which merits this scientific study.

All of the well-grounded advances in medical science, such as the Flexner-Jobling serum for the treatment of cerebro-spinal meningitis, are taken up by the Medical Department of the Navy as soon as given to the profession, and in this way observations which are made upon new methods and procedures serve as valuable contributions to their permanent establishment as important agents in successful medical practice.

Two years ago a medical officer of the navy was assigned to duty at the bureau of sciences, Manila, and his investigations of intestinal parasites have resulted in important contributions to the advance of medical zoology.

The medical department of the navy has for years taken an active part in the universal campaign against tuberculosis. During the last two years increased effort has been made in this direction. Greatest care is taken to prevent its spread on board ship and in naval communities, and in this connection the hospital ship at sea has already proved its value and promises to be a great boon. It is also the aim of the work of the Medical Department of the Navy that those who contract this disease within the service shall not be thrown upon civil communities to constitute a focus of infection, but that they shall be treated and cared for in naval institutions until this danger is passed. A sanitarium for the treatment of the tuberculous of the navy has been established at Las Animas, Colo., and the record of this hospital in the treatment of these cases is excellent. The method of treating this disease at that institution by the injection of mercury is the discovery of a naval surgeon, and gives promise of being a most valuable agent in the fight against the disease. So true is this that it is regarded almost as a specific. Careful experimentation and observations are still being made, and since the report of this method of treatment in the Naval Medical Bulletin and other medical journals and its presentation at the International Congress on Tuberculosis, others throughout the country have undertaken to try the treatment and are reporting very satisfactory results.

The bacteriological and chemical laboratories of the United States Naval Medical School, Washington, D. C., continue to serve useful purposes expected of them. Aside from the rôle they play in the instruction of the young medical officers in all the latest advances in medical science, they constitute the center for medical study, investigation, and experiment in the navy. Here a great deal of original work is carried on, and new methods of laboratory technique for diagnostic precision or chemical determinations of value to the service are suggested.

The United States Naval Medical Bulletin, instituted in the spring of 1907 and issued quarterly by the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Navy Department, is an important factor in the diffusion of medical knowledge, to the ultimate good of humanity. In this publication are printed the original articles, clinical notes, and reports of advanced studies by medical officers from all over the world, and it serves as the mouthpiece of the service to the profession at large.

P. M. RIXEY,
Surgeon-General, U. S. Navy.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH,
Harrisburg, January 8, 1909.

Hon. EDWIN S. STUART,
Executive Chamber, Harrisburg, Pa.

DEAR SIR: As requested in your favor of the 6th, I beg to transmit herewith for the information of Hon. M. D. FOSTER, of Illinois, a brief summary of the moneys appropriated to the state department of health for the investigation and prevention of disease, as well as for the care of the consumptive poor.

The legislature of 1907 appropriated altogether to the state department of health $2,100,600. Of this amount $600,000 was appropriated under the act of May 14, 1907, providing "for the establishment and maintenance of one or more sanatoria or colonies in Pennsylvania for the free care and treatment of indigent persons suffering from tuberculosis." Copy of this act is inclosed.

Under this act a model village for the care of tuberculosis patients has been constructed near Mont Alto, in Franklin County. The present capacity for incipient cases is 460. The infirmary is almost completed and will accommodate 160. The sanatorium has been built with the idea of permitting extensions that will accommodate a very much larger number of patients. Four hundred thousand dollars of the total appropriation to the department of health for two years was set aside by the legislature "to enable the department of health to establish and maintain, at such places in the State as may be deemed necessary, dispensaries for the free treatment of indigent persons affected with tuberculosis, for the dissemination of knowledge relating to the prevention and cure of tuberculosis, for the study of social and occupational conditions that predispose to its development, and for continuing research experiments for the establishment of possible immunity and cure of said disease." Under this appropriation 107 dispensaries have been established and up to this time have treated over 8,721 patients. Trained nurses have visited these patients in their homes, teaching them and the other members of their families the doctrines of proper food, fresh air and sunshine, and how to prevent the spread of the infection.

Of the total appropriation of $2,100,600, $1,100,600 was for the general work of the department of health. This work includes the direct sanitary supervision over all territory in the 45,000 square miles in Pennsylvania, outside of cities and boroughs which under the law have their own boards of health. The State, however, is expected to assist and, if necessary, take charge of the suppression of epidemics of disease in every part of the State. For this work the department has, under the chief medical inspector, 66 county medical inspectors and 730 township health officers. These health officers, in addition to placarding all cases of communicable diseases and disinfecting the premises on the termination of the case, make regular and thorough investigations of the sanitary conditions of all schools in their district. They also investigate the sanitary conditions of all dairy farms in their territory. An important responsibility which has recently been added to their duties is the distribution of educational literature and instructions in connection with the campaign now being waged by the state department of health to enforce the provisions of the state statute for the prevention of ophthalmia neonatorum, blindness at birth.

The general fund of the department also provides for a thorough and systematic collection and recording of vital statistics, morbidity statistics, and marriage statistics. From this fund also is paid the cost of the State's free distribution of diphtheria antitoxin for the poor. During the year 1907 the department distributed in this way antitoxin for the treatment of 5,271 cases of diphtheria. Of this number 4,875 were cured, giving the remarkably low death rate of 7.13 per cent. In addition to this, 3,799 persons were immunized with state antitoxin to protect them from the disease.

The general fund also provides for the work of the sanitary engineering division. A state law provides that no sewerage system can be extended without the approval of the governor, the attorney-general, and the commissioner of health. Permits for such extensions are issued by the commissioner of health only in accordance with the department's plan to ultimately bring about the reclaiming of the waters of the State from sewage pollution. The state department of health is saving thousands and thousands of dollars to municipalities all over the State by the assistance that has been given them by trained sanitary engineers to prevent the extension of sewerage systems according to plans which would be money thrown away when a municipality was obliged to install a sewage-disposal plant. About 50 trained sanitary inspectors are constantly at work investigating the larger sources of pollution on the watersheds of the State, and the township health officers already mentioned are hunting down petty pollutions and nuisances that are a menace to public health and serving notices of abatement for the same.

The state department of health laboratories are assisting the physicians of the State in their diagnosis of cases by examinations of sputum and other pathological specimens, and assisting in the prevention of disease by the bacteriological and chemical examinations of water, milk, etc. In these laboratories, also, much scientific research work is being done under the direction of the commissioner of health, especially in tuberculosis.

Yours, very truly,
SAMUEL G. DIXON, M. D.,
Commissioner.

NEW YORK STATE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH,
Albany, January 11, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, M. C., Olney, Ill.

SIR: Your communication of January 1, directed to Governor Hughes, has been referred to this department for reply.

I assure you that I am much interested in the proposed legislation, and I will be glad to give you any information that I can as to the work that is being done in the State of New York. I should like very much to secure a copy of the bill, and if the proposed legislation meets with approval here, I would be glad to be of assistance in securing favorable action by the representatives of the State of New York.

As to the amount of money which is spent by the State of New York for the prevention of diseases, I beg to submit full information on this point, tending to show the pitifully inadequate sums apportioned for this work in a State now having a population of over 8,000,000. The State Board of Health of New York was established in 1880 with an appropriation of $15,000. The appropriations for subsequent years are as follows:

1882	15,000.00
1883	20,000.00
1884	20,000.00
1885	33,000.00
1886	20,000.00
1887	25,000.00
1888	25,000.00
1889	25,000.00
1890	25,000.00
1891	30,000.00
1892	35,000.00
1893	47,000.00
1894	73,000.00
1895	57,500.00
1896	35,000.00
1897	35,000.00

1898	$35,000.00
1899	37,000.00
1900	41,400.00
1901	67,422.54
1902	67,150.00
1903	68,400.00
1904	75,130.92
1905	69,760.00
1906	81,119.35
1907	129,179.07
1908	152,022.58

As to the amount of these appropriations available for the prevention of diseases: Out of this total appropriation we are obliged to pay a considerable sum for the salaries of clerks, and so forth, used in recording our vital statistics. The sanitary engineering division for work on stream pollution, and so forth, costs about $12,000. For the antitoxin laboratory and the manufacture of antitoxin for free distribution we have $18,000, and $10,000 for the hygienic laboratory for the analysis of water supplies, and so forth. For investigations we have $7,500. For suppression of epidemics of smallpox and other contagious diseases, $7,500. For tuberculosis, including the expense of our traveling exhibition, $10,000. The balance of the appropriation is divided up in small items for printing, office expenses, and other items of this character.

If there is any further information that I can give you, I would be very glad to furnish it.

Very respectfully,

EUGENE H. PORTER,
Commissioner of Health.

STATE OF WISCONSIN, STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Madison, January 4, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your communication to Governor J. O. Davidson, of this State, has been referred to this office for reply.

For the study and prevention of diseases in Wisconsin there is an annual appropriation to the state board of health of $10,500. Six thousand dollars of this is used in collecting and classifying the vital statistics and $4,500 for general board of health work proper. In addition to this we have an appropriation of $2,500 per annum for a hygienic laboratory. The legislature of 1905 passed a bill providing for the establishment of a state tuberculosis sanatorium and the creation of a state tuberculosis commission. In 1905 there was appropriated $90,000 for lands and construction of buildings toward such sanatorium and $25,000 for the two years to be used in maintenance. The legislature of 1907 appropriated $30,000 to construct additional buildings and $40,000 for the two years for maintenance. The state tuberculosis sanatorium as it now stands has cost Wisconsin in construction $120,000. With the addition of one more shack we can house 100 patients.

The state tuberculosis commission is a separate commission from the state board of health, although the law provides that one member of the board of health be a member of this commission, so that the work along the tuberculosis line is carried on jointly between the state board of health and the special commission.

If we can be of any further service to you, it will be granted upon request.

Very truly, yours,

C. A. HARPER, Secretary.

CALIFORNIA STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Sacramento, Cal., January 7, 1909.

M. D. FOSTER, Esq., Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 1 to Governor Gillett asking for information as to the amount of money spent by the State of California for the prevention of disease has been referred to me for answer.

This State has made but very small appropriations in the past for the direct purpose of preventing the spread of any particular disease. Two years ago an appropriation of $2,000 was placed in the hands of the state board of health for the purpose of disseminating knowledge of means of prevention and cure of tuberculosis. This year a bill carrying a larger appropriation for investigation will be introduced.

We have an appropriation of $100,000 in the hands of the governor for emergency epidemic work. This is renewed as it gets low. The appropriation for the board of health, exclusive of pure-food work, is about $20,000 per year. The board has paid a good deal of attention to the prevention of disease and has used quite a portion of its funds for that purpose.

Yours, very truly,

N. K. FOSTER, Secretary.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH OF MICHIGAN,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Lansing, January 8, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

MY DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 1st instant to Governor Warner, asking for information regarding the amount of money this State devotes to preventive work in communicable diseases, such as tuberculosis, typhoid fever, etc., has been referred by the executive department to this department for reply.

The nearest estimate of the amount of money this State spends upon the prevention of diseases is to quote the various appropriations made for that purpose. But these amounts will not truly represent what this State spends in preventive-disease work, as each local health jurisdiction (numbering about 1,600) bears the burden of much of the cost of preventing communicable diseases; and this latter there will be no way to determine, even approximately.

The state board of health in Michigan has annually appropriated for its use $24,000 for the purpose of preventing communicable diseases from spreading. The Tuberculosis State Sanatorium has had appropriated for it since the bill establishing it was passed $108,000, $88,000 of which has been set aside for erecting and equipping the sanatorium and $20,000 of which has been set apart for running expenses until July 1, 1909.

In addition to the foregoing, the dairy and food commission uses part of its appropriation in the investigation of tuberculous milk and other tuberculous products. Again, the state live-stock sanitary commission uses part of its appropriation to prevent the spread of communicable disease among cattle, such as tuberculosis, glanders, foot-and-mouth disease, etc., which are also communicable to man. It would not be practicable to say how much of their appropriations are spent in preventive work for the welfare of the human beings of this State.

All told, I think we can only quote the sums of money already stated, whose total is $132,000, which this State has spent on preventive disease work. As the state sanatorium takes annually about $8,000 for running expenses, the annual cost to the State of that institution and this department is $32,000.

Trusting this will answer your inquiry, I beg to remain,

Very truly, yours,

F. W. SHUMWAY, Secretary.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH OF KENTUCKY,
Frankfort, Ky., January 4, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Governor Willson has referred to me your letter of the 1st instant.

The State appropriates $5,000 for the state board of health. Out of this is expended $1,800 for a state sanitary inspector. Each city of over 10,000 inhabitants is required to have a salaried health officer. The State will aid the building of charitable sanitariums for the treatment of tuberculosis.

Hoping the above is the information you desire, I am,

Respectfully,

H. S. KELLER.

STATE OF WASHINGTON,
BOARD OF HEALTH AND BUREAU OF VITAL STATISTICS,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
Seattle, Wash., January 13, 1909.

M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of January 5 to the governor of this State has been referred by him to me for reply. It is impossible to give you accurate figures as to the amount of money spent by the different cities and counties throughout the State, and that appropriated by the State would give no adequate conception of the amount actually spent, as the State only acts as an advisory and directing body, the real expenditure falling upon the counties and larger cities.

The cities of the first class, of which there are 5 in the State, probably spend a total of $200,000 per year upon all sanitary matters. The 27 counties probably spend a total of $100,000 per year upon such matters, while the appropriation for the state board of health is $11,500.

Yours, very truly,

ELMER E. HIG, Secretary.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
AUDITOR'S DEPARTMENT,
Boston, January 15, 1909.

Hôn. M. D. FOSTER, M. C., Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 1st instant to Ex-Governor Guild has been referred to me through the bureau of statistics of labor, which has replied in part.

I am sending you house document No. 1, of the present legislative series, on pages 20 and 85 of which you will find certain information relative to the state board of health in this Commonwealth, the duties of which are largely in the line to which you refer. The amount asked for by this board for the present year is $143,300, which will doubtless be granted. On page 41 you will find information relative to our state sanatorium, which is entirely for the treatment of incipient and curable cases of tuberculosis. Under recent legislation this Commonwealth is building three additional sanatoriums for the treatment of tuberculous patients, at a cost of $300,000—$100,000 each. They will be located in different parts of the State and will undoubtedly each cost annually as much as the present sanatorium at Rutland costs.

I trust that this information may be available for your purpose, and remain,

Yours, very truly,

HENRY E. TURNER, Auditor.

COMMONWEALTH OF MONTANA,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Helena, January 5, 1909.

M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 1st instant, addressed to Governor Norris, has been referred to this department. In reply would say that the State of Montana expends $6,000 annually in the support of the work of the state board of health. In addition to this, counties and cities employ local health officers, whose salaries range from $1,200 to $100 per year. It would be very difficult to state the exact amount expended for this work in this State, but would judge, from what I have been able to learn from local health officers, that their average salary for county work is $750 per year. There are 27 counties.

About 20 cities have health officers, whose salaries range from $2,250 per year down to $100 per year. I would say the average is about $600 per year.

I sincerely trust a national board of health will be created.

Yours, very truly,

T. D. TUTTLE, Secretary.

BOARD OF HEALTH OF THE STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
Trenton, January 7, 1909.

Mr. M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 1, addressed to Hon. John Franklin Fort, governor of New Jersey, in reference to amount spent in this State for the prevention of diseases, has been referred to this office for reply.

There is in New Jersey a state tuberculosis sanatorium, located at Glen Gardner, and information in regard to the amount of money appropriated for this institution may be obtained by communicating with the medical director, Dr. Samuel B. English.

The total amount appropriated for this board at the present time for all purposes is about $68,000, but this covers the work of the board in all its departments, including the divisions of food and drugs, sewerage and water supplies, creameries and dairies, vital statistics, contagious diseases of animals, etc., and it is impossible for us to estimate definitely the amount of money expended specifically in preventing the spread of contagious diseases.

Very respectfully,

BRUCE S. KEATOR, Secretary.

THE STATE OF TEXAS,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH AND VITAL STATISTICS,
Austin, January 19, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your recent communication addressed to Gov. T. M. Campbell, which was referred to me for reply, will state that our department has approximately $45,000 for salaries and maintenance, etc. However, will state that most of our energies in the past have been expended along the lines of quarantine on coast and border and the prevention of smallpox in the State. We have a bill providing for a state board of health, which carries with it many of the features proposed by your National Board of Health movement; the incorporation of the live-stock sanitary commission, pure-food commission, and the present state health department into one board. We expect to improve the efficiency and get greater economy thereby.

The last legislature gave the live stock sanitary commission $12,000 annual appropriation for their maintenance, and the pure-food commission $3,000, making a total of approximately $60,000 for the three departments as separately maintained.

Very respectfully,
W. M. BRUMBY,
State Health Officer.

COLORADO STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Denver, January 6, 1909.

M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your inquiry addressed to the governor, will say that the legislature of Colorado provides $5,000 per annum for the use of the state board of health. This covers office expenses, clerk hire, and what little sanitary work we are able to do with so little money.

Yours, very truly,
HUGH L. TAYLOR, Secretary.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Pierre, January 4, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your inquiry of the 1st instant received. There is, perhaps, no State in the Union that has done so little in the establishment of a board of health as the State of South Dakota. We have a state board of health, but the money appropriated to sustain it is a very small amount, indeed; considerably less than $1,000, I think.

We are presenting the matter of having a more efficient organization in the State to prevent the spread of tuberculosis to the legislature, which will convene to-morrow.

Yours, sincerely,
COE I. CRAWFORD,
Governor South Dakota.

MISSISSIPPI STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Jackson, Miss., January 5, 1909.

M. D. FOSTER, Esq.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 1st instant to Hon. E. F. Noel has been referred to me. In reply, beg to advise that we have an appropriation of $5,000 per year expense fund and $2,500 emergency fund.

I would be glad to see the bill pass in Congress establishing a national board of health for the investigation and prevention of diseases, such as tuberculosis and typhoid fever, etc.

Yours, very truly,
S. H. MCLEAN, Secretary.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Des Moines, Iowa, January 4, 1909.

MY DEAR MR. FOSTER: Your letter is just at hand, and I will ask the secretary of the state board of health, Doctor Thomas, to send you the information you desire. Our people are generally coming to the belief that tuberculosis is an avoidable and largely an unnecessary disease, and it is confidently predicted by some of our foremost physicians that within a comparatively short time it will be exterminated, except where the people are so grossly indifferent that they invite it to their homes. I am sure you are starting in on a most humane work, and I congratulate you and the State of Illinois on having a man who feels that it is incumbent upon him as a public official to look after the public health.

With best wishes for your success, I am,
Most sincerely, yours,
WARREN GARST.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MAINE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Augusta, January 4, 1909.

Mr. COTTON.

DEAR SIR: Answering your inquiries, I would say that the regular appropriation for the state board of health is $5,000 a year. The state laboratory of hygiene has $4,500 a year, and the Maine sanatorium had an appropriation of $15,000. In addition to this, about $1,000 was spent in the protection of the State against epidemic diseases, principally smallpox.

Yours, truly,
A. G. YOUNG, Secretary.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Tallahassee, January 4, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, M. C., Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 1st instant, making inquiry as to amount of money spent by the State of Florida in the prevention of disease, I beg to advise that we levy a 1-mill ad valorem tax for the support of the state board of health.

At present the 1-mill levy produces about $135,000 per annum.

Very truly, yours,
DANIEL A. SIMMONS,
Private Secretary.

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Cheyenne, January 4, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: At the request of Governor Brooks, I wish to advise you in reply to your letter of January 1 that our last legislature made an appropriation of $2,000 for the carrying on of the duties of the state board of health, this being for the two years, 1907 and 1908.

In the matter of tuberculosis, our state veterinarian has been making as bitter a fight as any one of our state officials. His appropriation was $1,500 for the two years stated above. At the International Tuberculosis Congress held at Washington this year this State was represented by the secretary of the state board of health, Dr. A. W. Barber, and our state veterinarian, Dr. W. F. Pflaeging.

Trusting that this information may be of some service to you, I remain,

Yours, very truly,
A. J. MATHER,
Secretary to the Governor.

TENNESSEE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Nashville, January 6, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of January 1, addressed to Governor Malcolm R. Patterson, I have to advise that the sum of $10,000 is appropriated for the restriction and prevention of contagious diseases in Tennessee.

Very respectfully,
STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
By J. A. ALBRIGHT,
Secretary and Executive Officer.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH,
Richmond, January 8, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 1st instant to the governor has been referred to me for reply. I send you by the same mail a copy of all the statute laws of Virginia relating to the public health.

In the first law printed in this bulletin you will see the organization and the appropriation that is made to the department.

Our last legislature reorganized the state board of health and appropriated $40,000 a year to carry out the work.

If there is any further information that we can give you, I shall be very glad to give it.

Very truly, yours,
ENNION G. WILLIAMS,
Commissioner of Health.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH OF MARYLAND,
Baltimore, January 8, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, M. C., Olney, Ill.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 1 has been referred to me by his excellency, Austin L. Crothers, governor of Maryland, for reply. I am sending you a report of the State board of health for 1905, on pages 8 to 13 of which you will find a statement of the amount of money appropriated to this board. The only specific disease for which we have a separate appropriation is tuberculosis, for which we receive $5,000 annually. The amount of money expended on typhoid fever comes largely out of our vital-statistics appropriation, our appropriation for food and drink, and our general-expense account. Out of the infectious-disease appropriation we also maintain a laboratory for the examination of blood for the Widal test and typhoid fever, the examination of the sputum for tuberculosis, and the examination of throat swabs for diphtheria. Our food and drink appropriation is largely applied to the examination of water, milk, and the inspection of animals killed for slaughter.

In addition to our report for the year 1905, I am inclosing you a complete set of the laws and printed matter relative to the control of tuberculosis in this State.

Very truly, yours,
MARSHALL LANGTON PRICE,
Secretary.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
BOARD OF HEALTH,
Point Pleasant, W. Va., January 8, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter directed to Hon. William M. O. Dawson, governor of West Virginia, was this day referred by him to me. West Virginia is very backward in educational lines relating to contagious and infectious diseases. The State only appropriates $2,000 annually to the state board of health; they are allowed fees collected, etc., which amount to about $3,500. We are asking this legislature to give more of an appropriation sufficient to carry on educational work along hygienic matters; just what they will do it is hard to tell.

We certainly concur in your effort to establish a national board of health, and shall only be too glad to assist you in any way possible, and if there is anything I can do, or the state board of health, do not hesitate to call upon us.

Very truly, yours,
H. A. BARBEE, Secretary.

IOWA STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Des Moines, January 7, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your communication of January 1, addressed to Gov. Warren B. Garst, has been referred to me for reply.

The Iowa State Board of Health receives an annual appropriation of $5,000 to cover all expenses of the board, and an annual appropriation of $6,000 to support and maintain the bacteriological laboratory.

Under separate cover I am sending you a copy of the Fourteenth Biennial Report of the State Board of Health and would respectfully call your attention to the opening chapter, in which will be found a statement of the finances of this board, together with a comparison of the amounts appropriated by the various States for the use of the state board of health.

In connection with national legislation concerning the department of public health I would suggest that if Congress will authorize the Postal Department to extend the franking privilege to state boards of health, it would add greatly to the efficiency of the work done by these departments. I believe a bill providing for this will be introduced in Congress, and I would commend it to your consideration.

Very respectfully, yours,

LOUIS A. THOMAS, Secretary.

GEORGIA STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Atlanta, Ga., January 8, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 1 to the governor has been referred to me for reply.

Up to about five years ago no state board of health was in existence in Georgia, the present organization having been created by an act of the legislature in 1903. The appropriation for the first two years was only $3,000, but since that time the amount has gradually risen until last year there was appropriated $16,000. This is a very meager amount, but every indication points to the probability that it will be increased from year to year until something like an adequate amount is appropriated.

Very respectfully, H. F. HARRIS, Secretary.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Columbia, S. C., January 13, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 1st instant to Governor Ansel has been referred to me, and I take pleasure in giving you the information desired, which is as follows:

For the prevention of disease, $15,000; for expenses incidental to the board meeting, etc., $3,000; clerk hire, $500; enforcement of pure food and drug act, $1,000.

This office will deem it a privilege to render you any assistance within its power along the lines mentioned in your letter.

Wishing you success with your bill, I am, and beg to remain,

Very respectfully,

C. F. WILLIAMS, M. D.,
Secretary and State Health Officer.

STATE OF VERMONT,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Montpelier, Vt., January 12, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to your favor of the 1st instant addressed to Governor Prouty, I am directed to inform you that the State of Vermont annually expends for the investigation and prevention of diseases, $22,000. It will also expend during the next two years about $55,000 annually for the extermination of diseased cattle, which in reality is an expenditure for the promotion of the public health.

Yours, very respectfully,

J. M. HARNEY,
Executive Clerk.

UTAH STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Salt Lake City, January 9, 1909.

Mr. M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your communication of the 1st instant, addressed to Governor John C. Cutler, has been referred to me for reply. I am greatly in favor of the establishment of a national board of health or some such federal organization for the prevention of disease, and trust you will be successful in your efforts.

The amount appropriated by the State of Utah for the use of the state board of health for the biennal period ending December 31, 1908, was $15,500. This amount is not adequate to the needs of the department, but we endeavor to make it go as far as possible.

Yours, very truly,

T. B. BEATTY, Secretary.

STATE OF KANSAS,
DEPARTMENT OF THE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Topeka, January 5, 1909.

Mr. M. D. FOSTER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter addressed to Governor Hoch has been referred to this department, and replying will say that during the year 1907 county health officers reported a total of $18,677 as the amount spent by the counties in the suppression and control of contagious and infectious diseases. The state board of health has a fund of $800, which is used for sanitary work. A sum of $2,500 a year is set aside for an emergency in case of epidemic. Other annual appropriations are for salaries, expenses of the board in attending meetings, etc.

Very truly, yours,

S. J. CRUMBINE, M. D., Secretary.

ARIZONA BOARD OF HEALTH,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Tucson, January 18, 1909.

Mr. M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your letter to Governor Kibbey of the 1st instant has been referred to me for reply. I have the honor to inform you that the sum of $21,479.08 has been reported to me as the amount expended for public-health work in this Territory during the year 1908. I regret to say, however, that the expenditure has not been in the line of prevention, except in so far as the cost of quarantine is paid out of this sum.

Yours, very truly,

EDWARD S. GODFREY, Jr., M. D.,
Secretary.

LOUISIANA STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
January 21, 1909.

Mr. M. D. FOSTER,
Tweny-third District, Illinois, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 1, 1909, addressed to the governor of Louisiana, was referred by him to Dr. D. Harvey Dillon, president of our board.

I beg leave to say in reply to your request for information as to the amount of money spent by the State of Louisiana for the prevention of disease, that the legislature appropriates $20,000 biennially, $10,000 of which is intended for use yearly, with the proviso that in the event of emergency, due to widespread epidemic of any kind, the state board of health is at liberty to draw without limit on the state treasury. This we are very rarely called upon to do.

Yours, very truly, J. A. ESTOPINAL, M. D.,
Secretary.

STATE OF OHIO, STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Columbus, Ohio, January 13, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, Olney, Ill.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 1st instant to Governor Harris has been referred to me for reply.

We have no way of knowing the exact amount spent by boards of health in this State in the prevention of disease. The appropriation made for this board for all purposes during the past year was $40,000, but very little of this amount is used in making inspections in contagious disease, as the work of this board is more specially directed to prevention in the way of improved water supplies and general sanitary conditions.

Yours, truly, C. O. PROBST, Secretary.

MINNESOTA STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
St. Paul, January 14, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: A letter from you, dated January 1, to Governor Johnson relative to information concerning appropriations for the Minnesota state board of health has been referred to me, and I beg to answer as follows:

General fund	$11,000
Laboratory fund	13,000
Vital statistics fund	1,500
Sanitary engineering fund	1,000
Communicable disease fund	2,500
Pasteur Institute fund	5,000
Total	34,000

We are not satisfied with these appropriations, however, for we can not carry on the work of the State as it should be carried on, and we expect to ask of the present legislature appropriations as follows:

General fund	$24,500
General laboratory fund	15,000
Branch laboratory fund	10,000
Traveling laboratory fund	7,500
Vital statistics fund	7,000
Communicable disease fund	5,000
Pasteur Institute fund	7,500
Sanitary engineering fund	10,000
Total	81,500

In addition to this, a bill will be introduced asking for $25,000 to carry on educational work against tuberculosis.

Very truly, H. M. BRACKEN.

OKLAHOMA STATE COMMISSIONER OF HEALTH,
Shawnee, Okla., January 13, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of January 1, addressed to Governor Haskell, has been referred to this department, with the request that we give you the information that you desire.

Up to 1907 there was an annual appropriation of $1,100 on the part of Oklahoma for the support and maintenance of its state board of health. With the meeting of the first state legislature I asked for an appropriation of $10,000 and received $7,000. This year I am asking for 1910–11 an appropriation of $17,000 per year, and fully expect to receive it.

This is not sufficient, but I feel that an appropriation of $7,000 was quite a gain over $1,000. If I can receive $10,000 next year more than this year I feel that this will place us where we can do some good work.

Yours, very respectfully, J. C. MAHR,
State Commissioner of Health.

RHODE ISLAND STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
Providence, January 5, 1909.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your request for information for material relating to a national board of health may be answered as follows:

The state board of health, consisting of seven members appointed by the governor, with the confirmation of the senate, is entirely an advisory board, having but few powers. Its work consists of a general conservation of the public health and the control and prevention of diseases, especially of a communicable class.

The general appropriation for clerical services and for salary of the chemists is $6,000 annually. The bacteriological department is also maintained by special appropriations of $3,000 for the study and prevention of tuberculosis and $3,500 for the study and prevention of diphtheria. These sums cover the expenses of bacteriologists, the free distribution of diphtheria antitoxin, the presentation of a traveling tuberculosis exhibit, and the free distribution of sputum cups.

If as ex-secretary of the State and Provincial Boards of Health of North America and as present incumbent as president of the American Public Health Association and as a member of the national committee on national legislation of the American Medical Association I can be of any further service, please command me.

Yours, truly,

GARDNER T. SWARTS,
Secretary.

THE CAUSES OF THE PAST DECLINE IN TUBERCULOSIS AND THE LIGHT THROWN BY HISTORY ON PREVENTIVE MEASURES FOR THE IMMEDIATE FUTURE.

[Arthur Newsholme, M. D., medical officer to the local government board of England.]

It is almost a self-evident proposition that a disease does not increase or decrease apart from factors favoring or impeding its occurrence. Of the existence of these factors we can entertain no doubt, even though they may not be recognizable; and my task is to analyze in regard to tuberculosis the evidence as to the causes of the remarkable reductions in the death rate from it experienced in the United Kingdom, the United States, and in certain other countries. Is it a disease having a "natural tendency" to decline? That, I take it, is another way of asking whether tuberculosis is declining under the influence of unrecognizable causes. Or is it a disease which is declining under the influence of causes whose character and possibly also whose extent can be recognized and identified?

Not infrequently it is contended that whatever may have been the chief causes of the decrease of tuberculosis, we need not attempt further the difficult task of unraveling them; for the disease is decreasing in many if not in most civilized countries, and that therefore we may reasonably content ourselves with aiding the increased action of the improved domestic and industrial sanitation and of the greater well-being of the population, under the complex influence of which the decrease has occurred.

Such complacent trust in vague generalities is not justified by the considerations which should influence every hygienist. It has to be remembered that the amount of money and energy available for the public service is always limited; and that of the many measures that would aid directly or indirectly in preventing or curing tuberculosis only a portion can be put into simultaneous action. To adopt any measure yielding less than the utmost value for the resources expended is equivalent to allowing an amount of avoidable disease proportionate to the relative inefficiency of the measure adopted. The rational as distinguished from the random or capricious selection of preventive measures is therefore supremely important to the public health service; and in such a selection actual experience, critically analyzed, is the safest and the final guide. Hence the importance of our present inquiry into the relative importance of the different elements of economic and sanitary environment, in their bearing on the incidence of tuberculosis in different communities.

In the heavy toll levied by tuberculosis on every community we find a further and more urgent reason for an analytical study of the causation of tuberculosis and a determination of the more fruitful directions in which time and energy can be expended. Those who look optimistically on the great declines in the death rates from pulmonary tuberculosis are apt to overlook the present enormous loss of life. In England and Wales, for instance, over 60,000 deaths are still annually referable directly to tuberculosis, 11 per cent of the total deaths from all causes at all ages. Of the deaths from tuberculosis seven-tenths are caused by phthisis and of the latter 77 per cent occur during the working years of life, from 20 to 65. Each death, furthermore, is preceded by a period of invalidity which on the average runs into years.

Such are the facts facing us as to the present loss of life caused by tuberculosis. We can not exhibit the efficiency of various measures against this disease in an exact proportion, because the conditions affecting the prevalence of tuberculosis are very complex. I think, however, that we have been able to gain some knowledge as to their relative order of importance, and it is by bearing this order carefully in mind that effort in the immediate future will have its most economical and its most fruitful effect.

THE CAUSA CAUSANS.

The problem with which we are concerned will be stated in the light of experience, which involves in the main a statistical presentation of facts. This experience must be stated in the light of our experimental knowledge of the causation of tuberculosis. We know that the tubercle bacillus is the indispensable causal element in tuberculosis. Most of us must have seen men fall victims to tuberculosis, though they were previously in robust health, and—apart from exposure to infection—had lived under excellent conditions. And most of us have had occasional experience of cases with a completely negative family history of tuberculosis, where heredity as well as an unfavorable sanitary and social environment, apart from infection, could be excluded. Nor do we know of any means for so raising the resistance of the population as a whole as to render it immune to infection. To argue that populations in which tuberculosis has declined have become more resistant to infection in virtue of the operation of natural selection not only ignores the factors of environmental improvement, but also overlooks the experience of countries in which, as in Ireland, natural selection, though similarly in action, has been associated with a stationary or an increasing death rate from tuberculosis.

The allegations as to the ubiquity of the tubercle bacillus and as to the impracticability of circumventing it save by an enhanced resistance do not diminish the practical importance of the teaching of experimental pathology, that the tubercle bacillus is the essential cause of tuberculosis and that action against this bacillus must be the most direct means for preventing the disease. More exact observations have shown that the tubercle bacillus is only present in the immediate vicinity of consumptives. Probably not more than 1 in 250 (for the calculation on which this estimate is based see p. 63 of The Prevention of Tuberculosis, by A. Newsholme, Methuen & Co., 1908) of the general population at any one time is recognizably consumptive, and of this proportion many cases are not "open." Quite erroneous inferences have been based on the detection of tuberculous lesions, chiefly arrested, at autopsies, in from one-third to one-half of hospital patients dying from other diseases. Most of these have never had symptoms of tuberculosis, and probably very few of them have been "openly" tuberculous, and these few only for a short time of their lives.

PREVENTION OF INFECTION.

We can hold fast to the undoubted fact that the prevention of tuberculosis in the final issue means the prevention of infection. To lay stress on heredity, when a family history of tuberculosis is so often obtainable in families in which there are cases of tuberculosis in the present generation, is to attach undue importance to a factor which, apart from the greatly enhanced chance of infection involved in family phthisis, must always occupy a minor position in practical preventive measures. The correctness of the view that prevention of infection is the main problem is indicated not only (a) as already shown by the pathology of the disease but also (b) by the successful extermination of tuberculosis in numerous herds of cattle in one generation by segregation, (c) by the analagous experience of other diseases, and (d) by actual experience in the diminution of human tuberculosis.

As already seen, a notable decline in the death rate from phthisis has occurred in certain countries. Two schools of thought explain this decline. One teaches that the result has been secured mainly by removing or ameliorating the conditions which increase susceptibility in a population. The other school, from the pathology of the disease and veterinary experience, declares that decline of tuberculosis must be brought about by diminishing infection. It is remarkable that, with the partial exception of Koch, the members of this school have, as a rule, not based their statement on past experience.

In his address at the London Congress on Tuberculosis in 1901 Koch expressed the opinion that "the only country that possesses a considerable number of special hospitals for tuberculous patients is England, and there can be no doubt that the diminution of tuberculosis in England, which is much greater than in any other country, is greatly due to this circumstance." In a report to the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography at Brussels in September, 1903, I showed that, although the very limited number of special hospitals for consumptives in England could not be regarded as having had so great an effect on the death rate from tuberculosis as claimed above, "If the total number of tuberculous patients treated in general hospitals, and still more those treated in workhouse infirmaries, be included, there is good reason for attaching a high importance to the removal of those patients from their relatives and to the nursing of them under conditions in which personal infection is greatly limited in amount." I propose to set out the evidence on which the above conclusion, which I have since then further extended, is based. Before doing so, it is convenient to compare the experience of tuberculosis with that of diseases in which, as in tuberculosis, a notable decline has been secured. Although each disease must be a law unto itself, it is not without advantage to consider whether in the experience of other infective diseases instances can be cited in which conditions affecting susceptibility have been more important than infection itself.

ANALOGIES.

So far as I know it is in smallpox alone that greatly reduced prevalence has been secured by rendering the human soil specifically immune against insemination by disease. Plague, enteric fever, and diphtheria are only partial exceptions to this statement.

Enteric fever has become greatly reduced. This reduction has occurred through general sanitary amelioration, a chief element in which has been the provision of pure public-water supplies. There can be no difference of opinion as to the accuracy of the statement that those measures of sanitary improvement have operated chiefly, if not entirely, by intercepting the specific infective material of enteric fever on its way from one patient to another. Omitting typhus fever from consideration for a moment, we may glance at the course of certain other diseases.

Plague has almost disappeared from America and from Europe. What link has been broken in the chain of infection-producing epidemics of this disease may still in certain respects be doubtful, but that interception of infection and not a change in the constitution of the population of these continents is the cause of their present relative immunity will, I think, be universally agreed.

So likewise with malaria, all the vague generalizations as to malarial conditions of soil and air have been ousted by the definite knowledge that the essential conditions for the occurrence of this disease are opportunity for the growth of the larval mosquito, and freedom of intercommunication between the malarious host, the mosquito, and non-malarious mankind. The experience of individual communities proves this statement, and among these may be quoted from Doctor Ross that of Ismailia, as typical of a community in which it has been practicable to adopt preventive measures against infection without the disturbing effect of migration. A similar experience in Habana is shown in the same figure. Yellow fever supplies an even more striking illustration of accurate scientific investigation followed by practical adoption of means for preventing infection. To an American audience it is unnecessary to do more than add the triumphant success of scientific administration in Habana against the Stegomyia fasciata.

In Malta fever we have another almost startling illustration of the law that when a specific contagion is discovered, and its operation prevented, the disease caused by it disappears. For years attempts were made unsuccessfully by improved sanitation and other general measures to diminish the immense amount of sickness caused by this disease, but with no material effect until Dr. (now Sir) David Bruce discovered that the goat was the intermediate host of the Micrococcus melitensis, and that by boiling all goats' milk or preventing its use, the transmission of the disease could be stopped.

Hydrophobia teaches the same lesson. No measure of any sort has been taken to increase the resistance of the population at risk. Yet with the rigid enforcement of muzzling orders this disease at once declined, increasing again when they were relaxed, and disappearing with their consistent and persistent enforcement whenever infection was possible.

Two further diseases, namely, typhus fever and leprosy, may be instanced in further detail, because of the closeness with which the circumstances of their occurrence resemble those in connection with which tuberculosis occurs.

TYPHUS FEVER.

The comparison between phthisis and typhus fever can best be elicited by contrasting the course of these two diseases in Ireland and in England, respectively. In England and Ireland typhus fever has declined almost to the vanishing point. While phthisis has been steadily diminishing in England, it has shown no such diminution and some increase in Ireland. Diminution of susceptibility, increasing personal resistance to infection, are often regarded as more potent in respect of the spread of both typhus fever and phthisis than diminution of infection. The course of typhus fever in the two countries is consistent with the view that improvement in general well-being of the two populations, associated with better nutrition, diminished overcrowding, and improved housing have, as is commonly stated, been the main determining cause of the diminished mortality from this disease. But if this be the correct explanation as regards typhus fever, and if typhus fever is not more susceptible than phthisis to the influence of improved sanitation, the reduction of phthisis must be due to some other cause, or, conversely, this explanation is erroneously given. Facts show that well-being of the population has steadily improved in both countries, though to a greater extent in England than in Ireland. Whatever part the absence of well-being may play in the causation of these two diseases, its part evidently is subsidiary to some other cause so far as phthisis is concerned. The same statement may safely be made in regard to typhus fever in view of its great infectiousness. I have elsewhere shown that the enormous reduction of typhus fever in both countries has occurred chiefly in consequence of the immobilization of infectious patients in hospitals and of their relatives in their own parishes by the operation of local poor-law relief. Doubtless improvements in housing, diminished overcrowding, and improved nutrition of the population of both England and Ireland have been important auxiliaries of the improved medical diagnosis, treatment, and segregation of patients. The failure of phthisis to decline under steadily improving social conditions in Ireland, which will be further considered later, shows that as regards this disease the differentia between England and Ireland is that a large mass of poor consumptives are treated in England for prolonged periods in workhouse infirmaries, whilst in Ireland by far the greater portion of their illness is spent at home. ("Presidential address on poverty and disease as illustrated by the course of typhus fever and phthisis in Ireland," by A. Newsholme, Journal Roy. Soc. Med., vol. 1, p. 262, and "The prevention of tuberculosis," p. 262.)

LEPROSY.

The history of leprosy is an interesting chapter in the history of disease, more particularly so in its bearing on the history of tuberculosis. Both diseases are caused by bacilli producing granulomatous tissue changes; in both there may be a long period of latency before the signs of disease appear; and in both the disease is commonly protracted and intermittent in its progress. Both likewise are diseases to which the designation "subinfectious" has been applied, though the name is misleading, and is no more applicable to them than to syphilis, in which similar phenomena of long latency of symptoms and of protracted and intermittent course are seen, and in which, furthermore, hereditary predisposition is not known to occur. The further interest attaches to leprosy that acute differences of opinion exist as to the causes of its partial or complete disappearance from England and some other countries, recalling the similar differences of opinion as to the cause of the great decline of tuberculosis in certain countries during the last forty years.

The disappearance of leprosy has been associated with the existence on a very considerable scale of leper asylums in the countries from which the disease has disappeared. In medieval England such lazar houses were numerous, and although complete segregation of all patients was never secured, there doubtless was segregation of a large percentage of the total cases during a considerable part of their illness. Here, again, as will be shown shortly, the resemblance to what has been happening in regard to tuberculosis is striking.

There is no intrinsic difficulty in accepting it as a fact that in leprosy—in which, as in tuberculosis, infection occurs chiefly after protracted exposure of an intimate character—the isolation of lepers must, if carried out to a sufficient extent, have served to produce a steady decline and eventually disappearance of the disease. This conclusion is confirmed by the experience of Norway, which amounts almost to a check experiment. In this country, until far on in the nineteenth century, there were few leper asylums. As Dr. Van Dyke Carter put it, there never prevailed in Norway "the same systematic and rigorous opposition to the leprous pest as was aroused in Europe generally." During the first half of the nineteenth century leprosy was increasing in Norway. Thus the yearly average number of fresh cases of leprosy ascertained and registered in 1840–1845 was 43; in 1846–1850 it was 124; in 1851–1855 it was 219; in 1855–1860 it was 233; and in 1861–1865 it was 225. Even allowing for the likelihood of increasing accuracy of registration, there was no evidence of decline in this district. In 1856 notification of cases by medical men became compulsory, and for all years onward the official statistics state the total number of known cases of the disease and the number seggregated in asylums. It will be observed that the steady pursuit of an intelligent policy of segregation of leprous patients, almost entirely without compulsion (some indirect compulsion has been exercised by refusing noninstitutional relief) has been associated with a steady and continuous decline of the prevalence of leprosy. At no time has there been total segregation of all known cases. Of the total cases, about 16 per cent were segregated in 1856–1860, 27 per cent in the next period, 30 per cent in 1871–1875, 32 per cent in 1876–1880, then 36 and 46 per cent in the two next periods, the proportion of segregation in the three most recent quinquennial periods being about 52 per cent of the total known cases. In the light of our knowledge that leprosy is a communicable disease, of its history in other countries, and of the close corelation between the phenomena of segregation and diminution of disease (which is expressed by a coefficient of correlation of 0.95 for the entire period), it is reasonable to give the chief place to segregation as the means by which the diminution of disease has been secured.

PREVALENCE OF TUBERCULOSIS.

The preceding survey of successful preventive measures against infective diseases affords us only a single instance—that of smallpox—in which the most effective measure has been one raising personal resistence to infection. In this instance the means of increasing resistance are specific and not general in character.

We therefore pursue our further investigation of the prevalence of tuberculosis with the knowledge that, so far as tuberculosis has behaved like other infective diseases, the chief means of its reduction has been, and the most efficient means toward its prevention in the immediate future should continue to be, the prevention of invasion by the tubercle bacillus. This investigation can only be pursued by statistics showing the past experience of communities. We must therefore for a moment consider whether the available data can be trusted. I have considered this question in fuller detail elsewhere. It concerns itself chiefly with the point as to whether past and present statistics of the disease in a given country may be compared without serious error. The experience of England and Wales is significant on this point. The most probable transfer is between bronchitis or pneumonia and phthisis. Evidently there has been no such considerable transfer between these diseases as would vitiate comparisons between past and present.

The same conclusion is confirmed by a comparison of the age incidence of the death rates from bronchitis plus pneumonia and from phthisis at different age periods in 1861 to 1870 and in 1901, respectively. The curves for bronchitis plus pneumonia at the earlier and the most recent period show that no such change in the age incidence of the death rate from these diseases has occurred as would be likely to have been visible had there been a disturbing amount of transference from phthisis to these two diseases. The argument outlined hereafter, and set forth more fully elsewhere, is based chiefly upon a comparison of past and present in each country considered apart from other countries, in conjunction with the social phenomena of the same country, and there can be no reasonable doubt that the national statistics, as utilized in the following pages, can be trusted.

So far as present current experience is concerned, international comparisons of death rates from tuberculosis or phthisis may undoubtedly be made without serious fallacy, especially for great cities. The following table, within limits of error which do not prevent comparisons, shows real differences in the incidence of fatal phthisis:

Annual death rates from phthisis per 1,000 of population in different cities.

Paris (1901–1903)	3.65
Dublin (1901–1903)	3.28
Belfast (1901–1903)	3.08
New York (1903)	2.40
Boston (1903–4)	2.04
Berlin (1901–1903)	2.04
Manchester (1901–1903)	2.01
Providence (1902–1904)[a]	1.94
Glasgow (1901–1903)	1.68
London (1901–1903)	1.65
Edinburgh (1901–1903)	1.51
Copenhagen (1901–1903)	1.38

And the same remark applies to the national death rates in the following table:

Annual death rates from phthisis per 1,000 of population in different countries.

Ireland (1901–1903)	2.15
Norway (1901–1903)	1.92
German Empire (1904)	1.83
Massachusetts (1901–1903)	1.67
Scotland (1901–1903)	1.47
England and Wales (1901–1903)	1.23

INFLUENCE OF ENVIRONMENT.

A preliminary survey of these current death rates does not confirm the general impression that social and sanitary amelioration has been the direct cause of such reduction of phthisis as has occurred. It is true that Norway and Ireland are the poorest countries on the list and have the highest death rate from phthisis; but this high rate may either be due to poverty, keeping sanitation and nutrition at a low ebb, or may be the indirect result of not adopting those expensive methods of nondomestic treatment of the sick which have been adopted in the other countries named above. At present we can only go so far as to say that insanitation and malnutrition can scarcely be regarded as predominant factors, in the light of the experience of the large cities mentioned above. The majority of the population belong to the wage-earning classes, and their experience, in the main, determines the death rate. It can not seriously be maintained that the social and sanitary circumstances of the working classes in Belfast are 83 per cent and in New York are 42 per cent worse than those of the same class in Glasgow; that those of Paris are 45 per cent worse than those of Manchester; that those of Berlin are 26 per cent worse than those of Edinburgh; that those of London are 16 per cent and of Boston are 48 per cent worse than those of Copenhagen, and so on.

It would not apear therefore that any definite relationship exists between the magnitude of recent death rates from phthisis in different cities and countries and the relative social and sanitary condition of the populations of those cities. Before studying these communities further in the light of history as crystallized in their mortality experience over a series of years, we can with advantage compare them as at present circumstanced, in respect of certain items of social and sanitary environment.

URBANIZATION.

Communities may be roughly classed as urban and rural, and international experience shows that the death rate from phthisis is higher in the urban than in the rural. Thus, turning to the preceding tables, it will be seen that the death rate from phthisis is higher in London than in England, in Glasgow than in Scotland, in Boston than in Massachusetts, and so on. And yet a comparison of different countries shows that those countries in which the greatest aggregation in towns has occurred have secured the greatest reduction in their death rate from phthisis. It is evident, therefore, that increasing urbanization must have had opposed to it some influence which has not only counteracted the tendency of aggregation of population to increase the phthisis death rate, but has also either alone or in association with some other influence or influences actually reduced this death rate.

Experience in England and Wales (given in full in The Prevention of Tuberculosis, p. 221) shows that there is a marked difference between the experience of selected typical urban and rural counties as regards phthisis and as regards all causes except phthisis. This difference is shown chiefly in the experience of the female sex, and is summarized in the following tabular statement:

	Males.		Females.
	Rural death rate.	Urban death rate.	Rural death rate.	Urban death rate.
Phthisis	100	151	100	104
All causes except phthisis	100	131	100	133

Thus, while males in urban counties have a death rate from phthisis which is 31 per cent higher than that in rural counties, in females the difference between the two does not exceed 4 per cent. The fact that in respect of all diseases, in the aggregate, other than phthisis, the two sexes experience an almost equal excess of mortality in urban counties point to the conclusion that special circumstances other than those which have influenced general mortality are acting in respect of tuberculosis.

Were this special circumstance domestic overcrowding or defective nutrition, its influence would be visible, especially in the experience of women, but it is precisely in the case of the female death rate that the effect is least visible.

OVERCROWDING, FOOD, WAGES.

That domestic overcrowding is not the chief determining cause of excessive phthisis, or rather, that its pernicious influence can be and is being more than neutralized by other measures, is indicated by a comparison of the amount of overcrowding in different cities of the [a] Persons of American parentage 1.43 only.

United Kingdom, as shown in the following table, the housing figures of which (for 1901) are taken from a paper by Sir R. Matheson, registrar-general of Ireland.

	Number of one-room tenements per cent of total dwellings or tenements.	Number of one-room tenements having 5 or more occupants each in every 100 tenements of all classes.	Number of persons in one-room tenements with 5 or more occupants in every 100 of the total population.	Average death rate from phthisis, per 100,000 living, in the 3 years 1900, 1901, and 1902.
Dublin	36.70	8.69	10.61	329
Belfast	1	.09	.10	313
London	14.66	.57	.70	171
Liverpool	6.14	.22	.24	190
Manchester	1.90	.04	.05	208
Edinburgh	16.98	1.80	2.33	164
Glasgow	26.11	4.28	5.24	177

Thus in Glasgow, which has twenty-six times as large a proportion of one-roomed tenement dwellings as Belfast and fifty-two times as many persons in its one-roomed tenements with five or more occupants, the death rate from phthisis, instead of being higher, is 43 per cent lower than that of Belfast. This does not imply that in a given town the death rate from phthisis is not higher in the smaller and more overcrowded tenements. Abundant statistics show this to be the case. But it is clear from the above table that size of dwelling or even degree of overcrowding may be overshadowed by the effect of other influences, the nature of which will shortly be indicated.

An attempt may now be made to compare the present experience of different communities in regard to social factors other than urbanization and overcrowding, though the possibilities of accurate comparison are somewhat limited. They extend sufficiently far, however, to enable comparisons of considerable value to be made.

The following table gives some approximate indications:

	Relative price of wheat, 1901–2.	Comparative wages—		Relative phthisis death rate.
		In skilled trades.[a]	Of unskilled laborers.[b]
England	100	100	100	100
Germany	131	63	79	149
United States	101	193	143	136

[a] Memoranda, etc., prepared by the board of trade (Cd. 1871 and Cd. 2,337).

[b] Shadwell, on Industrial Efficiency (Vol. II, pp. 81 and 91).

Even after free allowance has been made for differences in utilization of available means, it can not be said that any indication is offered by the preceding figures of relation between social comfort and amount of phthisis.

HISTORICAL EXAMINATION.

The comparison of possibilities of nutrition as indicated by cost of food and amount of wages can be pursued further when the facts for each country are considered historically and not in contrast with the corresponding facts for other countries. Without going into the details given elsewhere (Op. cit. p. 230) we may briefly summarize some of the chief facts.

The relative experience of the different parts of the United Kingdom and of Germany as regards changes in the total cost of food is set out in figure 11. It will be observed that these do not show consistent relation between the course of average total cost of food and that of the phthisis death rate. In Ireland the curves of cost of food and of phthisis have proceeded in opposite directions; and in Germany the discrepancies in the course of the two, although in the same direction, are very marked.

In the experience of the United Kingdom it is practicable to extend the comparison to the total cost of living. (For details as to means of measuring "total cost of living," see p. 239, Prevention of Tuberculosis.) There is no proportion between phthisis and cost of living in England; and it may be added that in Scotland and in Ireland the curves of the two phenomena travel in different directions.

Nor does the consideration of wages alter the preliminary conclusion suggested by studying cost of food and of living. Wages have increased in all the countries under consideration, although the present level of these wages is much higher in some than in other countries. In Ireland the wages of agricultural laborers, although they remain lower than in England, have increased in the proportion of 63 to 100 between 1860 and 1900 as compared with an increase from 76 to 100 in England. Nor have other elements of social progress lagged behind in Ireland. And yet its phthisis death rate does not show the decline manifest in the English rate.

Turning from circumstances of social to those of sanitary environment, we may next consider the latter in their historical aspect. Overcrowding is the most mischievous factor in town life. We have already seen that urban always have a higher phthisis death rate than rural communities. This fits in well with the facts of the census returns of 1901, which show when urban are compared with rural districts that ten times as large a proportion of the total population lives in one-roomed tenements, and nearly twice as large a proportion in two-roomed tenements; furthermore, that ten times as many one-roomed tenements and twice as many two-roomed tenements are overcrowded in urban as in rural districts. We have also stated that the countries whose populations have become most urbanized have had the greatest reductions in their death rate from phthisis; and that present death rates from phthisis show no relation between amount of overcrowding and death rates from phthisis. What has been the historical relation between diminution of overcrowding and of phthisis? The instance of Ireland is most instructive. The death rate from phthisis in Ireland has increased. This higher death rate has been associated with a progressive improvement in conditions of housing, as shown by the foregoing facts taken from a paper by Sir R. Matheson.

Percentage of different classes of houses in Ireland.

Class.	1841.	1861.	1881.	1891.	1901.
First class	3.0	8.3	9.7	10.5	11.2
Second class	19.9	37.6	46.9	53.6	59.3
Third class	40.1	45.7	39.2	33.8	28.4
Fourth class	37.0	8.4	4.2	2.1	1.1
Total	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0

The fourth class of houses comprises chiefly houses of mud or other perishable materials, having only one room and window; the third class, a rather better class of house, having two to four rooms and as many windows; the second class is equivalent to what would be considered a good farmhouse, having five to nine rooms and windows; and the first class comprises all better houses.

Comparing Ireland with England and Scotland, Matheson finds that in 1901 in England 3.6 per cent, in Ireland 8.7 per cent, and in Scotland 17.5 per cent of the total dwellings consisted of only one room; further, that the percentage of the total population living in these one-roomed tenements and having five or more persons in each tenement was 0.15 in England, 1.78 in Ireland, and 3.27 in Scotland. Thus Scotland has more than double the proportion of one-roomed tenements that Ireland has, and in nearly twice as many of these the number of occupants exceeds five. Evidently, therefore, some counterbalancing influence or influences have prevented Ireland from securing the lower phthisis death rate which its relatively small increase of urbanization and especially its steady improvement in conditions of housing ought to have secured for it. A worse position in these respects has not prevented a reduction of phthisis in Scotland, and the adverse influence or influences must therefore have been operating either exclusively or very excessively in Ireland. The character of this counterbalancing influence will be set forth later.

The figures of housing in Berlin are also suggestive. During the last forty-five years the number of one-roomed tenements out of every 100 tenements of all sizes has been about 50 throughout these forty-five years, while the number of two-roomed tenements in the same interval has only varied from 24 to 27 per cent, of three-roomed tenements from 10 to 12 per cent, and of larger tenements from 11 to 12 per cent of the total number. A very large proportion of the population of Berlin live in block dwellings, and the average size of these block dwellings has increased. Doubtless the standard of these dwellings as to cleanliness, as elsewhere, has improved; but it is a remarkable fact that although half the families in Berlin live in single rooms, the death rate from phthisis in that city has declined 45 per cent between 1876–1880 and 1901–1903.

In New York a similar story has to be told. Dr. Hermann Biggs (1903–4, p. 191) says:

"There has been a more rapid fall in the tuberculosis death rate in New York City than in any great city in the world, and this notwithstanding the fact that the conditions in many respects are much more unfavorable, because of the very dense population in the great tenement-house districts of the city, and the large element of foreign-born population. It should be remembered that in no city of the world is there such a density of population as exists in many of the wards of the Borough of Manhattan."

And yet the death rate from phthisis in New York has fallen from 4.27 in 1881 to 2.40 in 1903, or 44 per cent; while in London in the same interval it has fallen from 2.18 to 1.60, or 26 per cent.

In Norway again improved housing as well as increased well-being have not been associated with any decline in the death rate from phthisis.

To avoid misunderstanding let me state at once that the discrepant results as to the association of overcrowding and phthisis do not prove that the association between the two is accidental. In view of the known pathology of the disease, no circumstance could be more calculated to exercise a more uniformly adverse influence on phthisis than overcrowding. The discrepancies, however, suffice to indicate that overcrowding must be classed with urbanization as a factor, which, though of proved effect on the phthisis death rate, has usually been unable to overcome counteracting influences by means of which the phthisis death rate has been diminished.

POVERTY AND PHTHISIS.

The degree of overcrowding as well as cost of food and total cost of living, and amount of wages, are important indices of the general well-being of a population. A further and more general index is to be found in pauperism, the figures of which may be employed to check the preceding results.

Owing to the different methods of relieving poverty, we can only examine the figures relating to poverty in the countries of the United Kingdom, using for this purpose the poor-law returns. Before doing so, it is desirable to realize what figures of pauperism really indicate. Pauperism is officially relieved poverty; and poverty itself, while most often due to absence of means, may also arise from the unskillful, careless, or mischievous use of means, from thriftlessness, sloth, or intemperance. The conditions which accompany poverty, such as protracted exposure to infection, insufficient nutrition, and ignorance, work in a vicious circle with the conditions that cause it till it is difficult or impossible to distinguish those elements of poverty which represent destitution and are relievable by the provision of ampler means of subsistence from those which are of an origin independent of material supplies, and which would persist even in a community free from economic deficiencies. Poverty therefore is in itself a most complex phenomenon, not to be remedied by any single set of measures; and figures of actual poverty, even if they could be had, would not in themselves suffice to estimate the causes from which the poverty arose nor the steps which would be necessary to remove them. In fact, however, we have not figures of poverty, but only of pauperism—that is, of state-relieved poverty. The amount of pauperism depends obviously not alone on the extent of poverty, but also on the test or standard by which the scale of relief is determined; and a given amount of poverty will, beyond doubt, yield very different figures of pauperism at various epochs and in various districts according to the scale of relief which happens to be applied. In the United Kingdom during the period under observation there has been a marked correspondence between the variations of phthisis and those of pauperism.

This is shown for England in the following table:

England and Wales—Percentage declines of phthisis death rates and of rates of total pauperism.

Percentage of decline.	1866–1870 to 1871–1875.	1871–1875 to 1876–1880.	1876–1880 to 1881–1885.	1881–1885 to 1886–1890.
Phthisis rate	9.4	8.1	10.2	10.3
Total pauperism rate	17.7	22.1	3.7	4.2

Percentage of decline.	1886–1890 to 1891–1895.	1891–1895 to 1896–1900.	1896–1900 to 1901–1903.	1866–1870 to 1901–1903.
Phthisis rate	10.9	9.6	6.8	49.8
Total pauperism rate	9.5	5.4	6.0	52.3

The total decreases for the entire period—49.8 per cent for phthisis and 52.3 per cent for pauperism—are surprisingly close. Individual quinquennia show some discrepancies, but as phthisis has a long course and may have a still longer period of latency, and as any administrative action is likely to operate slowly, a close quantitative relation between the figures for short periods can not be expected.

I do not propose to give here (see The Prevention of Tuberculosis, pp. 243, 251) the figures for the three parts of the United Kingdom in detail, but I must content myself with the general statements that England and Scotland with decreasing pauperism show decreasing phthisis, and Ireland an increase of both phthisis and pauperism, and that in the three countries the two factors are correlated by the high coefficients of correlation of 0.89, 0.90, and 0.83, respectively. Evidently, therefore, in each of these countries pauperism comprises enough phthisiogenetic influences to make its figures vary closely with the figures of phthisis. This does not necessarily show that the variations in pauperism explain the variations in the death rate from phthisis. Within the bundle of phenomena which constitute pauperism such an explanation may be found, but until we ascertain which individual element or elements of the bundle contain the explanation, to explain the figures of phthisis by those of pauperism is for any practical purpose to explain a complex ignotum by a yet more complex ignotius.

IMPORTANCE OF SEGREGATION.

So far we have found that although each general improvement in communal health and each measure tending to produce it must work powerfully toward the reduction of tuberculosis, each of these influences has had a most irregular relation in communal experience to the variations in the disease.

Improved general health, increased well-being, and sanitary education have operated in Great Britain, Germany, Belgium, Denmark, and Massachusetts side by side with great decrease in the phthisis death rate; while the same influences in France, Norway, and Ireland have produced little or no decrease of this death rate up to five years ago. And similarly there is no constant relation between the degree of sanitary and social well-being in different countries and cities and the amount of mortality imposed by tuberculosis.

Our next task is to show how these discrepant results can be reconciled; and especially how it became possible for a high degree of domestic overcrowding in many countries to be associated with a low phthisis death rate and conversely. The explanation can, I submit, be summed up in the following statement:

A given amount of overcrowding with a large amount of institutional segregation of consumptives is associated with less phthisis than when overcrowding is less but accompanied by only a small amount of institutional segregation of consumptives. If this statement can be substantiated the important practical conclusion follows that the quickest way to diminish the risks of overcrowding is to favor by every means of persuasion the removal of the sick from among the healthy. This should, of course, be accompanied by strenuous endeavor to diminish overcrowding, apart from the question of such removal.

We may claim at once that we are justified in assuming that means for preventing the dissemination of tuberculosis sputum and tuberculosis spray during coughing must be an important and probably even the chief means of diminishing tuberculosis, and that this prevention is much more easily effected in an institution than if the patient is at home.

I have not discussed here the share borne by cows' milk in disseminating human tuberculosis. I must content myself with the statement that the evidence appears to me to point to the conclusion that, apart from tuberculosis in children, this is a minor vehicle of infection as compared with personal convection by human patients, though very important when considered among the sources of infection external to man. Some difficulty has been experienced by certain writers in realizing that the segregation of a minority of the total cases of phthisis can have had a marked effect on the prevalence of this disease. They appear to be judging phthisis by the same measure as they would apply to smallpox, which in an unprotected community spreads rapidly if a few cases are overlooked. The case of tuberculosis, like that of leprosy, is governed by the consideration that these diseases as a rule require intimate and protracted contact for their spread. Two hypothetical illustrations will serve to elucidate the order of magnitude of the influence exercised by institutional segregation.

(a) Leprosy.—In the forty-five years between 1856–1860 and 1901–1905 the total cases of leprosy per 100,000 of population have declined in Norway from 181 to 22. During the same period the percentage of total cases which are in asylums has increased from 16 to 52. If it be assumed that one-third of the total cases of leprosy on an average have each been segregated for half a year, and that each case is infectious for five years, it follows that if segregation is an effective means of preventing infection, and leprosy spreads solely by infection, the annual reduction in the amount of this disease should be 3.3 per cent. It is about 2 per cent, which is sufficiently near in an estimate involving so many hypothetical data.

(b) Phthisis.—In the town of Brighton one-fifth of the total deaths from phthisis occur in its infirmary. If we assume that this proportion holds good for England as a whole, and that one-third of a year is the average residence of these patients in the infirmary (this is not far from the fact), then about one-fifth of the total severe cases of phthisis are segregated during one-ninth part of their illness; and assuming that segregation is efficient and personal infection is the chief cause of phthisis, the annual reduction in the phthisis death rate should be about 2 per cent. In actual fact it has usually been under 2 per cent per annum since 1871.

These illustrations are submitted not as possessing exact quantitative value, but as indicative that unde ther hypothetical conditions set forth above, the segregation of a minority of the total patients is competent to produce the result which has in fact been secured.

Segregation of consumptives may be either domestic or institutional. It is evident, however, that institutional segregation is different qualitatively from domestic segregation. The average home, both in its bedrooms and its living rooms, has far less special accommodation per head, and a far lower standard of precautions against infection, than the average institution. Two persons usually and three often occupy the same bed in the home; never more than one in the hospital. In institutions, and by reason of the abundance of gratuitous labor, notably in workhouse infirmaries, the average standard of cleanliness is far higher than in most homes. Spittoons and spit cups are provided and cleaned, washing of body and bed linen is not spared, and the floors, etc., of each room are kept scrubbed and kept free from dust. In private houses the crowding of furniture, the presence of mats and carpets, and the exigencies of life in the families of the poor, do not encourage and sometimes do not even permit of such frequent and persistent cleanings. It follows that the inmates of the home, including children of the most susceptible age, must be far more exposed to infection when the patient remains at home than are the inmates of an institution to which he is transferred.

It remains to see how far the institutional segregation of infective patients which is secured in institutions in general has in actual fact served to control the spread of the disease.

There is the preliminary fact that the institutional as distinguished from the domestic treatment of sickness in general has steadily increased in all the countries in which a decline in the death rate from tuberculosis is known to have occurred; and there either has been no increase in or there is still only a small amount of institutional treatment of sickness or this treatment has been notoriously defective in character or short in duration in the communities showing little or no decline of the death rate from tuberculosis. The detailed evidence on which the preceding general statement is based is given in full elsewhere.

SEGREGATION RATIOS.

Evidently this evidence must concern itself rather with determining what I have called the segregation ratio, i. e., the proportion of total cases segregated, than with the number of patients in institutions in proportion to the total population. The segregation ratio, when it can be accurately determined, determines the extent to which potential infection is prevented from operating. It can seldom be expressed with complete accuracy; but by using different methods of indicating the proportion of total to segregated cases we can obtain an approximate indication of the ratio required. Thus in England and Wales in the period 1866–1903 segregation measured by the fraction of total deaths occurring in institutions has approximately doubled, and the death rate from phthisis has approximately halved; in London segregation has not quite doubled and the phthisis death rate is rather more than half. A comparison between indoor, i. e., institutionally treated, and total pauperism—the former of which may be taken as representing segregated and the latter as total phthisis—brings out an equally close correlation between segregation and reduction of phthisis death rate. The coefficient of correlation in these instances varies from 0.90 to 0.91. Even in the experience of single towns, in which the results are often inevitably masked by migration, a close correlation is shown between the proportion of total deaths from phthisis occurring in public institutions and the reduction of the phthisis death rate in the same towns. Thus the experience of Salford for the period 1884–1904 gives a coefficient of correlation of 0.67, and of Sheffield of 0.80 for the period 1876–1905.

I can not introduce these local figures without pointing out that neither the truth nor the error of an argument in regard to an infectious disease of very protracted duration like phthisis could be demonstrated by the figures of single towns. Such a disease tends to break up the home and induce migration of patients, disease contracted elsewhere being chronicled in the district to which the patient drifts. This fallacy of migration is still more evident when comparison is made between the various parts of a city, although it be large; and it is for this, among other reasons, that I have been obliged to ask you to survey a far wider field than would be necessary in the examination of an acute disease running a rapid course.

That the duration of institutional treatment of phthisis would suffice to have a material effect on its ability to spread is indicated by the available facts on this point. Thus in Brighton infirmary during 1897–1905 each consumptive patient was treated institutionally on an average for one hundred and seventy-five days; in Kensington infirmary in 1888 the average duration of treatment of each patient was one hundred and forty-four days; and in Sheffield infirmary in 1904 it was three hundred and eleven days.

Summarizing all this experience, it will be seen that in England and Wales a large and continuously increasing amount of institutional segregation of phthisis, measured by the fraction of the total mortality occurring in institutions, has been uniformly accompanied for nearly forty years by a large and continuous decrease of the disease. The same association appears when segregation is measured in the more direct form of the fraction of deaths from phthisis in the whole community occurring in institutions as seen in the experience of certain large towns.

When these results are compared with those obtained by regarding segregation as measured by the fraction of total pauperism which is treated in institutions, or by the ratio in which the number of paupers treated in workhouses and workhouse infirmaries stands to the total number of deaths from phthisis in the community, the conclusion obtained by the use of the other measures of segregation is confirmed, high segregation ratios of about 0.90 being obtained.

THE CASE OF IRELAND.

The official figures for Ireland (the figures of outdoor pauperism given here for Ireland do not include the very large number of sick treated at the expense of the state in connection with the Irish dispensary system) appear not to show that close covariation between the segregation ratio and the phthisis death rate indicated in English and Scotch experience. It is true that in Ireland a decrease of institutional segregation (measured in terms of the total amount of disease to be segregated) has been accompanied by an increase of phthisis, but there is less numerical concordance between the two factors than in the experience of England. The reasons for this are given in full elsewhere (op. cit., p. 282), and it suffices here to indicate the chief reasons, which are that not only is the workhouse accommodation in Ireland generally very bad, but also the duration of treatment in it is very much curtailed as compared with that in England.

So far we have established a coincidence between the variations in the phthisis death rate and the amount of segregation of consumptives in the United Kingdom. Had our survey of all the possible factors influencing phthisis been confined to the United Kingdom segregation would have been the prima facie claim to be regarded as a predominant influence in reducing the phthisis death rate. The segregation ratio has diminished in Ireland while phthisis has increased, and in England and Scotland increased segregation has been associated with diminished phthisis. On the contrary, the factors indicating improving social and sanitary welfare have increased in all three countries, while the phthisis death rate has risen in Ireland and fallen in England and Scotland. The consistent covariations in three countries of one factor affecting phthisis could, however, give no more than a prima facie claim, even though incidentally the other factors commonly regarded as having a predominant influence had by the same limited survey been excluded from their place. The very constancy of the covariation between segregation and the phthisis rate necessitates an extension of the inquiry into this covariation over a wider area. The result of such an inquiry can only be briefly summarized here.

OTHER COUNTRIES.

In Norway there has been very little institutional treatment of phthisis and no reduction of phthisis prior to three or four years ago. Most Swedish towns similarly show but little reduction of phthisis and scant hospital treatment of the disease.

In Prussia, and still more in Berlin, an enormous proportion of the total consumptives are treated in general hospitals. Sanatoria are not included in this statement. In Prussia in 1881–1885 for every 100 deaths from tuberculosis in the general population 17 were treated in hospital; in 1901–2 the proportion had risen to 100:64. In Berlin in the same interval the proportion rose from 100:77 to 100:136. Similarly in Brussels a steadily increasing proportion of cases of phthisis treated in its general hospitals has been associated with a steadily falling death rate from phthisis.

In Paris, although a large proportion of consumptives enter hospitals, they only spend a few days there, and there has been in the past great overcrowding in their wards. On the whole, therefore, it is doubtful whether these hospitals have played an effective part in reducing total infection; and this fact, coupled with the uncertainty as to the comparatability of the phthisis death rates for a succession of years, makes it impracticable to include the French statistics in the consideration of the problem.

In the American cities from which I have been able to obtain returns the evidence points in the same direction as that of English experience. In 1882–1884 22 per cent and in 1901–1903 26 per cent of the total deaths from phthisis in New York occurred in the hospitals, and in San Francisco the proportion increased from 30 per cent in 1885–1887 to 38 per cent in 1902–1904. The information supplied me by Dr. Herman H. Biggs shows that in New York every case of phthisis in recent years has had the opportunity of being treated and segregated in a hospital during twenty-one weeks. This being so, there can be no difficulty in associating the decline of phthisis in American cities as elsewhere with the large amount of institutional treatment of the disease which has been available.

GENERAL SUMMARY.

We have seen that in the communities examined the various elements of well-being do not in every case vary uniformly along with the phthisis death rate which they are supposed to and undoubtedly do influence. In other words, they have not been in actual history constantly predominant influences on the course of phthisis. Institutional segregation, on the other hand, while operating in the same group of adjuvant and opposing influences, has constantly maintained its inverse relation with the course of phthisis. Each of the factors has been tested in the actual experience of many large communities over the same period of history under precisely the same opposing and adjuvant conditions. In the series of communities subjected to this test institutional segregation has been the only factor the variation of which has been always associated with a variation in the prevalence of tuberculosis in a constant relative direction. It would not have been surprising had the influence of institutional segregation been masked by that of opposing factors, as has been seen to have occurred in many countries with the important influence of urbanization; or, contrariwise, if more than one influence had varied with the prevalence of tuberculosis in a constant relation. In either case the question as to which influence had predominated in affecting the prevalence of tuberculosis would have been left open. In fact, however, no influence except that of institutional segregation has appeared in actual experience in a constant relation to the amount of tuberculosis, and the evidence shows that it has been the predominant influence in changing the incidence of this disease.

The institutional treatment which it is claimed has played a predominant part in the past reduction of phthisis has been, in the main, the institutional treatment of patients who were disabled by sickness, rather than of earlier and less severe cases. This is not the occasion for discussing the evidence as to the relative infectivity of early and advanced cases of disease. There can, I think, be no doubt that advanced cases are more infectious than earlier cases. But no responsible administrators having regard to the prevention of tuberculosis will content themselves with the treatment of advanced cases. They will treat early cases in the hope of securing recovery of the patient; and intermediate cases in the hope of restoring a modicum of health, as well as of educating the patient so that he will no longer be a source of infection to his family and his fellow-workmen. These points are evident; they can, so far as my experience indicates, be more completely insured by institutional treatment than by the training which the patient receives at a dispensary or through a domiciliary visit. Thus in Brighton by providing 25 beds for the treatment of early, moderately advanced, and advanced cases of phthisis we have secured under a voluntary system the notification of twice as many cases of phthisis as there are deaths from this disease in the town, and have secured the minimum of a month's sanatorium treatment and training for more than half of these notified patients. Apart from the training associated with a short stay in a sanatorium the chief immediate preventive measure against phthisis is the institutional treatment of advanced cases of the disease.

If we consider the closely aggregated conditions under which an enormous proportion of our city populations are housed we shall be able to realize what is, I believe, the fact, that had it not been for the steadily increasing extent of institutional treatment of the sick, and especially of the consumptive sick, which has characterized most of our great centers of population, we should have experienced not the decline of phthisis which has occurred, but a great increase in its prevalence. Some apology is needed for presenting much tedious detail in my exposition of this subject, although I have been able to give only a brief outline of the detailed facts given elsewhere. Every detail is, however, needed in arriving at the truth in such a momentous matter.

It is easy to deplore that statistics do not present themselves in that systematic form which permits wide conclusions from relatively limited experience. In this respect they differ from well-conceived laboratory experiment in the deductive reasoning connected with which such form is rightly required. With equal truth and reason one might express regret that in pathology and medicine one is compelled to work backward from the investigation of the complex structure and functions of the human body rather than forward from the simplicity of the microscope and the test tube. The more cumbrous "clinical" methods of statistics might be dispensed with were we able to place the body under laboratory conditions. Social physiology and medicine are even more complex than the same sciences applied to the individual and statistics must be used to decipher their mysteries. As they are required, our plain duty is to use them with the same care to avoid fallacy and the same pains to control our results as are expected in deductive experiment. We are not engaged in academic labors, of which the prize goes to the winner, and each man may neglect his preparation if he choose.

The servant of public health is working on the lives of men, and should be laying the foundations of national prosperity and happiness. He belongs to an order of sanitary priests and belies his vocation and betrays his trust if he does not use the material at his disposal fully and faithfully. He is his brother's keeper; and as in these matters knowledge means added life and happiness and usefulness to the communities whose welfare is his charge, he will reject no method of labor and spare no endeavor which offers the prospect of increased power over disease.

"The day is short, and the work is much, and the laborers are slothful, and the reward is great, and the master of the house presses."

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I will read as a part of my remarks the following bill:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 718 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 718. That before any notice is given of a motion for an injunction out of a circuit or district court the party or person sought to be enjoined shall have at least five days' notice thereof, which said notice shall be in writing and shall state the time and place and the court or judge thereof before whom said motion will be made, unless the court or judge thereof shall be of the opinion that irreparable injury will result from delay, which fact must be made to appear from the affidavits of not less than three responsible persons, and said order can only be granted upon the condition that the party seeking the order gives security therefor to the approval of the court."

SEC. 2. That section 725 be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 725. That the said courts shall have the power to impose and administer all necessary oaths and to punish by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, contempts of their authority as herein provided; that contempts committed during the sitting of the court or of the judge of chambers in its or his presence, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, are direct contempts; and such power to punish direct contempts therein shall not be construed to extend to any cases except the misbehavior of any person in their presence, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, including the misbehavior of any officers of said court in their official transactions; and direct contempts may be punished summarily, without a written accusation against the person arraigned; but if the court shall adjudge him guilty thereof a judgment shall be entered of record, in which shall be specified the conduct constituting such contempt, with a statement of whatever defense or extenuation the accused offered thereto, and the sentence of the court thereon. All other contempts are indirect contempts. That upon the return of an officer on process or affidavits duly filed by the party seeking the injunction showing any person guilty of indirect contempt a writ of attachment or other lawful process may issue, and such person be arrested and brought before the court; and thereupon a written accusation, setting forth succinctly and clearly the facts alleged to constitute such indirect contempt, shall be filed by the party seeking the injunction, and the accused shall be required to answer the same by an order which shall fix the time therefor, and also the time and place for hearing the matter, and the court may on proper showing extend the time, so as to give the accused a reasonable opportunity to purge himself of such contempt; but, pending the trial, and until the final trial and termination of the case, the accused shall be admitted to bail in such sum as the court may direct. After the answer of the accused, or if he refuse to answer, the court shall proceed at the time so fixed to hear and determine such accusation, upon such testimony as shall be produced. If the accused answer, the trial shall proceed upon the testimony, as in criminal cases, and the accused shall be entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him; but such trial shall be by the court, or upon application of the accused a trial by jury shall be had, as in any criminal case. If the accused be found guilty, judgment shall be entered accordingly, prescribing the punishment. That the testimony taken on the trial of any accusation of indirect contempt may be preserved by bill of exceptions, and any judgment of conviction therefor may be reviewed upon direct appeal to or by writ of error from the Supreme Court and affirmed, reversed, or modified as justice may require."

Mr. Chairman, I have introduced the above bill knowing that it will not be enacted into law at this session of Congress, but with the hope of keeping the question alive, to the end that it or a similar bill may be enacted into law by the Sixty-first Congress. In presenting my argument upon the question of amending the law as it now exists and in behalf of the measure which I have introduced, I will present it as free from politics as possible and upon broad grounds, free from class or bias.

The question I desire to discuss is the question of trial by jury in contempt cases and the constitutional power of Congress to limit the granting of injunctions; and in presenting it I shall refrain from abuse or criticism of the courts, confining myself to the exigencies of the occasion, dealing with the law as I find it, and urging such legislation as I deem expedient to remedy the existing evil, if there be any emanating from the law, and the practice in cases of this kind now.

Section 718 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides:

That whenever notice is given of a motion for an injunction out of a circuit or district court, the court or judge thereof may, if there appears to be danger of irreparable injury from delay, grant an order restraining the act sought to be enjoined until the decision upon the motion, and such order may be granted with or without security, in the discretion of the court.

Section 725 of the same statutes provides that—

The said courts shall have power to impose and administer all necessary oaths, and to punish by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, contempts of their authority, provided this power to punish contempts shall not be construed to cover any cases except the misbehavior of any person in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, the misbehavior of the officers of said court in their official transactions, and the disobedience or resistance of any such officers or any party, juror, witnesses, or other persons to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of said court.

It will be observed that section 725 provides that the court shall have power to punish for contempts of its authority by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court. It undertakes to make a distinction between direct and indirect contempts, not in the ultimate punishment to be inflicted, but in the acts and things which go to make contempts of court. I believe the law should draw a plain distinction between the acts constituting direct contempts from those which constitute indirect contempts, and I believe that the procedure dealing with these two kinds of contempts should be different, provided the contemnor desires to be dealt with differently. Direct contempts which come under the immediate cognizance of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct and impede its progress, should be dealt with summarily by the court, but a totally different rule of practice should obtain in indirect contempts. I admit that when we undertake to frame a definition of indirect contempt, we find it rather difficult because of the width and scope of the field as applied to indirect contempts by the courts, through lack of a statute defining indirect contempts. Yet, by declaring what shall constitute direct contempts, as decided by the practice of the courts, and then declaring that all others shall be indirect, we arrive at rather a definite and accurate understanding of what shall constitute an indirect contempt.

I may say that I am in favor of the injunctive arm of the court, and not for one moment would I, by statute passed by any legislative body or by judicial construction, strike down this arm of the law. The right of trial by jury is a question which, for the past twenty years or more, has agitated the minds of the American people, a great deal more, it is true, in campaign times and immediately antecampaign times than at any other time. I shall not say that this has been with the hope of securing the votes of any particular class of people, but shall leave the reason why for the calm judgment of the people themselves. The election being over, and the people having resumed their normal mental condition, now, or in the immediate future, would be a very opportune time to consider this important question. Believing the day has come when we should have some legislation along this line, and offering no criticism upon the many champions of this reform, it strikes me that their presentation of the case has been by far too narrow.

This question having been largely forced to the front in the past by great economical questions growing out of labor and capital, has led a large number of people to believe that it is only the laboring class who are demanding this reform in legislation, and thereby a prejudice against it has grown up among another large class of people who otherwise would give the movement their hearty moral support and cooperation. Yet the law, as it now stands, catches all alike, so far as the power of the courts to issue injunctions and so far as their power to punish for contempts of their authority is concerned. What I desire to do, if possible, is to present the question so as to show the necessity for this reform in legislation, hoping to gain moral support for it from every possible source.

For the past twelve years this has been one of the burning political questions discussed by all, from every conceivable point of view, in every election. The platforms of the Democratic and Republican parties in the last campaign both pledged the people to some reform along this line. The Republican platform, speaking upon this subject, says:

* * * We believe, however, that the rules of procedure in the federal courts with reference to the issuance of the writ of injunction should be more accurately defined by statute, and that no injunction or temporary restraining order should be issued without notice, except where irreparable injury would result from delay, in which case a speedy hearing thereafter should be granted.

The Democratic platform declared unequivocally for a trial by jury in indirect contempt cases.

Mr. Taft, the President-elect, in a speech delivered in New York January 10, 1908, said:

I would favor a provision allowing the defendant in contempt proceedings to challenge the judge issuing the injunction and to call for the designation of another judge to hear the issue.

In his letter of acceptance, in an attempt to amend his platform, he says:

I have been willing, in order to meet a popular but unfounded impression that a judge, in punishing for contempt of his own order, may be affected by perscnal feeling, to approve the law which would enable the contemnor, upon his application, to have another judge sit to hear the charge of contempt. * * *

Here is an open confession by the Republican party in its platform that something is wrong; that something should be done to amend this wrong; and this admission is strongly reenforced by the statement of Mr. Taft in his New York speech, and in his letter of acceptance. The difference in the positions of the two parties on this question is: The Democratic platform, in cases involving indirect contempts, insists upon a trial by jury, and the Republican party on granting to the contemner a change of judges in the event it is desired on the part of the party charged with having violated an order of the court. The Democratic party insists upon submitting these questions of fact to a jury. The Republican party insists upon submitting them to a judge who, like a jury, must hear the evidence upon the subject before he can determine the rights of the parties thereto. An admission that another judge might be called to consider the question of contempt is an open admission that some change in the existing law or procedure is needed, and a radical change at that. If you have a change from one judge to another to try the question of contempt, why not have a change to a jury of 12 men to try these questions of fact? Would the judge be any more competent to try the questions of fact than a jury of 12 men? I think not. Mr. Taft, in another place in his letter of acceptance, states that the Democratic party's position upon this question is a dangerous attack upon the judiciary of the land. Why is it a dangerous attack upon the judiciary to allow a jury trial in indirect contempt cases? Would it mean the ultimate overthrow of our judiciary system to allow a jury trial in indirect contempt cases? Grant that it would be an innovation upon the mode of procedure now in force in regard to the practice of punishing for indirect contempts, and grant, further, that it would be revolutionary so far as this practice is concerned; it does not follow that it would be anarchistic or destructive in it tendencies to the judiciary of the land nor to the institutions of our country. The right of the trial by jury has for the past eight hundred years been regarded as one of the most sacred rights to which the Anglo-Saxon race is heir. It was a right wrung by the peasants of England from King John at Runnymede and embodied in Magna Charta, the great charter of all liberty-loving people, which has come down to us from that day through the ages of time, ever held as one of the priceless jewels of our inherent political rights. From that time to this that right has been claimed by the Anglo-Saxon race, and I hope will continue to be claimed by it wherever it may be found, either in the Republic of the United States or throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman, one of the causes for which the King of England was arraigned in the Declaration of Independence was that he had denied the right of trial by jury to some of his subjects living in the colonies. When the time came to construct a republican form of government upon the wreck and ruins of the colonial system, the builders of this government and the framers of the Constitution, true to their former convictions on this subject, and true to the arraignment of the King of England, as set forth in the Declaration of Independence, declared in the Constitution of the United States that "the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury." Fearing that this right of trial by jury was not thus properly safeguarded by the article referred to, in less than two years after the adoption of the Constitution, amendments 6 and 7 were submitted and adopted by the legislatures of the various States, and thereby became a part of this instrument and declared by it to be the fundamental law of the land. Amendment 6 to the Constitution provides:

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy a right to a speedy and public trial by a jury of the State, * * * and to have the assistance of counsel in his defense. * * *

Amendment 7 provides:

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy exceeds $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved.

Article III, section 1, of the Constitution provides:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

It will be observed that this section of the Constitution referred to places plenary power in Congress to ordain and establish inferior federal courts, such as the United States circuit court and the United States district court; and, Congress having the power to ordain and establish these courts, it follows that Congress has plenary power to prescribe the rules and practice of these courts, and having the power to prescribe the rules and practice governing them, it has complete power, not only to define and state what contempts shall consist of, but it has complete power to prescribe the manner and modes of punishment which shall follow in contempt cases.

I listened the other day with rapt attention to the able argument, delivered upon the floor of the House by Judge JENKINS, of Wisconsin, upon the lack of constitutional power in Congress to pass laws preventing the issuing of injunctions in certain cases. While it was an able presentation of the question from his viewpoint, yet I can not subscribe to the doctrine annunciated by him in all its details. I believe Congress has the power, under the Constitution, to prescribe the practice of federal courts in the issuing of injunctions by inferior federal courts. If Congress has the power to create inferior courts, as provided by the Constitution, to my mind it is clear that it must and does have the power to prescribe the rules of practice which shall govern them, and to prescribe how and in what manner injunctions may be issued, and how and in what manner parties litigant, civil or criminal, who come before them in their several jurisdictions, shall be treated.

Mr. Chairman, Judge Cooley, one of the greatest expounders of constitutional law of the present age, in his splendid work, on page 11, says:

The Government of the United States is one of enumerated powers; the National Constitution being the instrument which specifies these powers, and in which authority should be found for the exercise of any power which the National Government assumes to possess. To accomplish these purposes, the Congress is empowered by section 8 of Article I to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court. To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

Judge Cooley again says:

Within the legitimate scope of this grant Congress can determine for itself what is necessary and in support of this principle.

Cites the case ex parte Curtis (106 U. S., 371), wherein Chief Justice Waite, while speaking of the powers of Congress to carry into effect all laws that are delegated in Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, says:

Within the legitimate scope of this grant Congress is permitted to determine for itself what is necessary and what is proper.

If this principle be the law, should Congress determine that it is not only necessary, but proper, to prescribe the limits within which injunctions may be issued, as well as to prescribe the modes of practice which shall govern inferior courts in the trial of cases before them, then it is clear that Congress has such constitutional power. (I may remark it was under this clause of the Constitution that the Supreme Court (110 U. S., 421) held that Congress had the constitutional power to make treasury notes of the United States, otherwise greenbacks, legal tender in payment of private debts in time of peace as well as in time of war, when the Constitution declared that nothing but gold or silver should be legal tender in the payment of debts.)

Judge Redfield, another eminent jurist, in the case of Thorpe v. Rutland and Burlington Railroad Company (27 Vt., 140), lays down the following doctrine as being the law:

It has never been questioned, so far as I know, that American legislatures have the same unlimited power in regard to legislation which resides in the British Parliament, except where they are restrained by written constitutions. That must be conceded, I think, to be a fundamental principle in the political organization of the American States. We can not well comprehend how, upon principle, it could be otherwise. The people must, of course, possess all legislative power originally. They have committed this, in the most general and unlimited manner, to the several state legislatures, saving only such restrictions as are imposed by the Constitution of the United States or of the particular State in question.

This is universally conceded to be the rule with reference to the States. Has not the Congress of the United States the same power, through the people who created it, within the constitutional limits it itself prescribes?

Cooley again, on page 127, says:

In creating the legislative department and in conferring upon it legislative power, the people must be understood to have conferred the full and complete power, as it rests in and may be exercised by the sovereign power of any country, subject only to such restrictions as they may have seen fit to impose and to the limitations which are contained in the Constitution itself. The legislative department is not made a special agency for the exercise of specifically desired legislative powers, but it is intrusted with a general authority to make laws at its discretion.

Justice Story, another equally eminent jurist, in his treatise on the Constitution, section 1590, makes it clear that it is obligatory upon Congress to establish inferior courts, as provided in the Constitution; but nowhere does he say that, after having created an inferior court, it can not prescribe and define what its powers and duties may be.

Mr. Chairman, one of the best-considered cases which I have been able to find bearing upon this proposition is the case of Wayman et al. v. Southard et al., Tenth Wheaton, page 1, a decision rendered by Chief Justice Marshall. I may say that this case was certified to the Supreme Court of the United States by the circuit court of the State of Kentucky, involving several propositions. One of the propositions involved was whether or not Congress had power to prescribe the mode of practice of inferior federal courts. In speaking upon this proposition, on page 13, Chief Justice Marshall says:

All the legislative power is vested exclusively in Congress. Supposing Congress to have power under the clause for making all laws necessary and proper and to make laws for executing the judicial power of the Union, it can not delegate such power to the judiciary. The rules by which the citizen shall be deprived of his liberty or property to enforce a judicial sentence ought to be prescribed and known, and the power to prescribe such rules belongs exclusively to the legislative department. Congress could not delegate this power to the judiciary or to any other department of the Government. The right to liberty and property is a sacred vested right under the Constitution and laws of the Union and States. The regulations by which it is to be divested for the purpose of enforcing the performance of contracts are of vital importance to the citizen. The power of making such regulations is exclusively vested in the legislative department by all our constitutions and by the general spirit and principles of all their government. It is the office of the legislator to prescribe the rule, and of the judge to apply it; and it is immaterial whether it respects the right in controversy or the remedy by which it is to be enforced.

Having by statute spoken these inferior tribunals into existence, by the same or another statute Congress has complete power not only to prescribe the kind of cases in which injunctions shall issue, but in addition thereto has power to prescribe the mode of practice which shall obtain in any kind of case pending for trial before inferior courts. I advert to this argument in response to the argument made by the gentleman from Wisconsin the other evening. Judge Sedgwick, in his valuable work on Statutory and Constitutional Construction, second edition, page 577, says, in speaking of amendments 6 and 7:

The right of a trial by jury under the Constitution of the United States is secured by three provisions, to be found in the section of the third article and the sixth and seventh amendments to the Constitution, the two former of these relating to criminal laws. The latter relates to civil causes. One of the strongest objections originally taken to the Constitution of the United States was the want of an express provision securing the right of a trial by jury in civil cases, and this gave rise to the seventh amendment.

If the case of Twentieth Wallace and that of One hundred and fiftieth United States be the law, that a contempt is a criminal case, then it is clear that under the sixth amendment to the Constitution the party demanding it is entitled to a trial by jury. Indeed, I believe that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that a jury trial should be granted in all cases of a criminal nature and as bearing this belief out an act was passed by Congress in 1789, found in First Statutes, page 77, which plainly provides that district courts shall have, exclusive of the courts of the several States, cognizance of all crimes and offenses that shall be cognizable under the authority of the United States committed within their respective districts or upon the high seas, and the trial of issues in fact in the district courts in all cases, except civil causes or admiralty or maritime jurisdiction, shall be by jury.

The whole tenor of our law, from the Constitution of the United States down to the constitutions of the various States, recognize the right of trial by jury in all criminal cases, the Constitution plainly providing that in all criminal cases the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate; and to contemplate that the Constitution grants a right of trial by jury in all criminal cases, and to realize that under a construction placed upon existing law by the courts themselves that a jury is not permissible in trials of contempts, and then to realize the failure of Congress to pass a law to faithfully carry out all of these plain constitutional provisions is astounding. Especially does this impress itself upon us in view of the numerous petitions, requests, and appeals made by a large class of citizens of this country to Congress asking it to enact a law which would enable them to avail themselves of these plain constitutional provisions. It can not be argued that the punishment of contempts is a civil proceeding, because the Supreme Court of the United States, in different decisions, has expressly held otherwise. In the case of New Orleans v. New York Maire Steamship Company (20 Wallace, 387), it is expressly held that contempts of court is a criminal offense, and this same doctrine was reaffirmed by Chief Justice Fuller in the case of re Swan (150 U. S., 637), where the Chief Justice lays the doctrine down as follows:

That contempts of courts is a specific criminal offense.

We have, therefore, section 718 giving to the courts power to issue restraining orders, and section 725 giving to the same courts power to punish for contempts of their authority, and at the same time no statute in force to back up these constitutional provisions, under construction placed upon existing law by the courts, whereby the contemner can demand the right of trial by jury, although in the two cases cited above the Supreme Court of the United States holds that contempt cases are criminal in their nature. If the decision in the case in twentieth Wallace and in re Swan be law, that contempt cases are criminal, then the rules and practice relating to criminal law should obtain in all cases where the question of contempt is involved. If they be criminal cases, the contemner should be put in the attitude and in the position of any other defendant charged with having violated some of the penal statutes of the Government, and when put in this attitude he is then in a position to demand a trial by jury and, in addition thereto, surround himself with all reasonable doubt of his guilt.

The practice grown up in the punishment of contempts of court in this country inverts the order of procedure. Instead of throwing the burden of proof upon the Government to establish the guilt of the defendant beyond all reasonable doubt, the rule has been inverted and the burden of proof is now thrown upon the defendant to show that he did not violate any rule of the court—a legal absurdity.

The Constitution again declares that no man's life or property shall be taken from him without due process of law. The jury system has come down to us until it is a part and parcel of the judiciary system of the land, and when the contemner is denied the right of trial by jury he then has not only his property but his liberties denied and taken from him without due process of law.

One of the objections made to this mode of procedure is placed upon the ground that it would delay the procedure of courts. Have we reached the stage in life where human rights and human liberty must be sacrificed in the interest of time and, I may add, in the interest of property?

How about the delay now when men are charged with violating contempts of court? This is one of the evils complained of to-day, contemners never being permitted to get a hearing until exhausted financially and otherwise. How about the continuance of the cases of Gompers, Mitchell, and Morrison until after the election, when these men were and had been ready for trial weeks and months before the election?

If a charge involves the inherent rights and liberties of the individual, guaranteed to him under the Constitution, and if the individual can not demand a jury trial to determine his personal rights and liberties, then indeed the framers of the Constitution lived and worked in vain, and we become the subjects of legal construction instead of constitutional rights and privileges. The jury system, since its early adoption, has always stood, and I hope always will stand, as one of the surest bulwarks against military, political, and judicial despotism.

The gist of the bill which I have introduced is to be found in section 2, which seeks to throw around the contemner the protection ordinarily thrown around a defendant charged with violating a criminal statute, giving him not only the right of trial by jury in indirect contempt cases, but giving him the benefit of all reasonable doubt. If we are not careful and mindful of these constitutional rights given to us by our forefathers, the day is fast approaching when one by one these inalienable rights which we now enjoy will be undermined, and we will be but the representatives of a once proud, glorious, and independent people.

To the end that this Government may never perish from the earth, but shall live forever in all of its grandeur and glory, let us return to the Constitution of the United States and live under and beneath its strong protecting arm, not fearing to enact a law granting the right of trial by jury to contemners in cases of indirect contempts. We need have no fear in the enactment of such a law as this. It will not undermine the judiciary system of our country, but, on the contrary, will go far to rehabilitate and reestablish that degree of confidence in the minds of the people in the courts of the land which they ought to and should have, and which they do not this day entertain. [Great applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall explain the bill as we proceed with the reading of it, and I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase and installation of searchlights for the defenses of our most important harbors, $210,000.

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if provision is made in this bill for the fortification of San Pedro Harbor, in California?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There is no provision made in this bill for the fortification of what is known as "San Pedro." San Pedro is the port for the city of Los Angeles, but about 12 miles distant. There never was any report in favor of the fortification of San Pedro until since the last session of Congress. After this bill was prepared, and before it was reported to the House, a report was transmitted favoring the fortification of San Pedro. No amount, however, was put into the bill at that time, as the reporting of the bill had already been voted.

I would have no objection, so far as I am personally concerned, to putting into this bill such an appropriation as would commence the purchase of a site at San Pedro, provided the language was general, as it always is in cases of this character. If the gentleman desires to offer an amendment to that effect I will not object.

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after line 17, insert:
"For procurement or reclamation of land or rights pertaining thereto, needed for site, location, construction, or prosecution of work for fortification and coast defenses, $250,000."

Mr. MANN. Is it certain that this money will be used for this particular purpose?

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. I so understand it, and that was the object of my asking the gentleman in charge of the bill if anything had been provided for fortification of this particular harbor. I desired to insert in my amendment, "San Pedro Harbor, California," but I was informed by the gentleman in charge of the bill that that was unusual, and he asked me not to insert a particular locality. The proceedings on the floor at this time will indicate the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. So if this item goes into the bill it is, in a way, a direction to the War Department to use the money for San Pedro Harbor?

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. There is nothing in the amendment——

Mr. MANN. I understand that, but I mean in the way it goes in it will be an indication.

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. The discussion here indicates that that is the purpose of my offering the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say that this is the usual method of appropriating money for sites for seacoast fortifications.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is this an increase of the appropriation for seacoast defenses?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is a straight increase of one-quarter of a million dollars.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I was going to congratulate the gentlemen who prepared the bill, because it was a very moderate and conservative bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And the gentleman will find it still moderate and conservative as it passes the House. This is the only increase the chairman of the subcommittee will consent to.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The committee might as well have put it in as to put it in in this way.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have explained that there was no estimate of this before the committee; that the report came in afterwards.

Mr. McLACHLAN of California. Mr. Chairman, the last fortification bill, approved May 27, 1908, contained the following provisions:

The Secretary of War is directed, by a suitable board, to investigate and report fully to Congress as to the advisability and necessity of seacoast fortifications for the protection of the harbor of San Pedro, Cal., and the cities in that vicinity, and, if such fortifications are deemed advisable or necessary, to furnish an estimate of the cost of sites and fortifications separately.

In compliance with that law the Secretary of War appointed such a board, which made a thorough investigation of San Pedro Harbor during the summer of 1908, and its report is to be found in Senate Document No. 656, Sixtieth Congress, second session, which, in my judgment, contains the best argument that can be made in favor of the amendment which I have offered to this bill, and reads as follows:

[Senate Document No. 656, Sixtieth Congress, second session.]

SEACOAST FORTIFICATIONS, SAN PEDRO, CAL.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of War submitting information as to the advisability and necessity of seacoast fortifications for the protection of the harbor of San Pedro, Cal., and the cities in that vicinity.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the following paragraph in the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1908:

"The Secretary of War is directed, by a suitable board, to investigate and report fully to Congress as to the advisability and necessity of seacoast fortifications for the protection of the harbor of San Pedro, Cal., and the cities in that vicinity, and, if such fortifications are deemed advisable or necessary, to furnish an estimate of the cost of sites and fortifications separately."

I transmit the accompanying communication from the Secretary of War submitting the information called for.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1909.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 12, 1909.

The PRESIDENT:

In compliance with the paragraph at the top of page 2 of Public, No. 143, being the fortifications act approved May 27, 1908, which reads: "The Secretary of War is directed, by a suitable board, to investigate and report fully to Congress as to the advisability and necessity of seacoast fortifications for the protection of the harbor of San Pedro, Cal., and the cities in that vicinity, and, if such fortifications are deemed advisable or necessary, to furnish an estimate of the cost of sites and fortifications separately," I have the honor to transmit herewith the information called for embodied in one report, as follows:

First. Report of the General Staff as to the "Advisability and necessity of fortifying the harbor of San Pedro, Cal."

Second. Estimate of the cost of sites and fortifications, separately, submitted by the Chief of Coast Artillery, based on report of a board of officers and approved by the General Staff.

It is recommended that only so much of the funds needed to provide for the protection of San Pedro Harbor, California, as is required for the purchase of the land, namely, $400,000, be appropriated at the present session of Congress.

Very respectfully,

LUKE E. WRIGHT,
Secretary of War.

PART I.—ADVISABILITY AND NECESSITY OF SEACOAST FORTIFICATIONS FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE HARBOR OF SAN PEDRO, CAL., AND THE CITIES IN THE VICINITY.

San Pedro Harbor and Wilmington Harbor are names given to different parts of what are really the same body of water. Wilmington is at the inner end of Wilmington Slough; San Pedro about 2 miles from Wilmington and at the San Pedro Bay or outer end of the slough. San Pedro Bay is part of the Pacific Ocean.

San Pedro and Wilmington are small towns of a few thousand inhabitants each. The harbor is of importance commercially as the port of Los Angeles, distant 22 miles, and with a population of about 280,000.

The first inquiry that suggests itself is to ascertain how the question of fortifying this harbor has been viewed by the various boards that have investigated the needs of coast defense for the United States and whose approved reports express our coast-defense policy.

There have been two of these boards—the Endicott Board, which submitted its report in 1886, and the Taft Board, which submitted its report February 1, 1906. Neither of these boards made any reference in its report to the subject of defenses for San Pedro Harbor.

Returning to a consideration of the harbor itself, it may be remarked that there is practically no natural harbor at this point. Wilmington Slough, before dredging was commenced by the United States Corps of Engineers, in 1871, had a depth of less than 2 feet at low tide at the entrance. As for San Pedro Bay, it was practically an open roadstead until the building of a breakwater, commenced in 1898.

The negative action of the Endicott Board may be accounted for by the fact that at the time this board made its report no such thing as a San Pedro Harbor was in existence.

In deciding what harbors should be fortified the Taft Board was guided by instructions to "examine and report at what ports fortifications are most urgently required" and to "recommend the armament, fixed and floating, * * * that may be necessary to complete the harbor defenses with the most economical and advantageous expenditure of money."

With reference to the Taft Board, it appears that "the board, after carefully weighing the relative commercial and strategic importance of the ports and harbors of the United States and the insular possessions, modifies and revises the list of ports submitted by the Endicott Board as requiring defense." After presenting this revised list the Taft Board report further states that, "while the military needs of the coast as they exist to-day can be determined and provided for, the growth of the country, the construction of railways and other lines of communication, may give a commercial and economic importance to other ports which they do not possess at present."

We see that the Taft Board was directed to make its recommendations along conservative and economical lines, in accordance with the well-established policy of the Government in expenditures for the military establishment, and that the board qualified its findings by a recognition of the fact that future commercial and strategic development might call for the fortification of ports not included in the list submitted.

Let us consider the status of San Pedro Harbor, contemporary with the Taft Board report, or rather in the latter part of the year 1905, the period to which may be referred the data on which the report was based.

At that time the harbor improvements, including railroad terminal and wharfage facilities, were so far from completion that commercial economics dictated the receiving of almost all the foreign freight for Los Angeles at either San Francisco or San Diego, whence it was transported to destination by rail. Coastwise traffic comprised practically the entire commerce of San Pedro Harbor.

In the three years that have elapsed since then considerable advance has been made in these harbor improvements, and commerce has expanded apace. From a report dated December 17, 1907, by the officer having in charge the engineer district which includes San Pedro Harbor, to the Chief of Engineers, it appears that the commerce of this harbor, amounting in 1906 to 1,004,000 tons, had increased to the sum of approximately 1,144,466 tons for the first eleven months of 1907.

The value of the port commercially is, in a very large degree, dependent on the kind and extent of the railroad terminal and wharfage facilities provided by business interests. The development of such facilities is determined by considerations of profit. As soon as it becomes a paying proposition to receive foreign shipments, or coastwise shipments in heavy-draft vessels, intended for Los Angeles, at San Pedro, rather than by rail from San Francisco or San Diego, just so soon the necessary facilities for handling such shipments at San Pedro will spring into existence.

The critical point of commercial advantage for San Pedro Harbor seems already to have been successfully passed. The era of business activity which the harbor has entered upon is clearly indicated in the following further quotation from the above-mentioned engineer report: "The Southern Pacific Company is pushing the completion of a large slip with timber and stone bulkheads and creosoted piling wharves. As before stated, this slip is to have a length of 1,850 feet, is 250 feet wide, and is to be dredged to 30 feet at low tide." Mention of other considerable business activities in the development of this port is made elsewhere in the same report.

The following, with reference to San Pedro Harbor, from a Southern Pacific Railroad Company publication, is of interest: "When completed, a good and commodious harbor will be provided, and as the plan (United States Engineer project) includes the extension of the present jetty (breakwater) and the dredging of the inner harbor to accommodate the rapid development of commerce here, ample and safe refuge will be provided for vessels of the largest size. It will embrace an area of 1 square mile, and in this can float the tonnage of half the world." The foregoing indicates the trend of civilian thought. From it we may gather what may confidently be expected to be brought about by the development of the near future.

In this connection we may also quote again from the engineer report: "The completion of the Panama Canal will tremendously stimulate ocean traffic on the Pacific coast of the United States, and as San Pedro is the gateway for the most important commercial center south of San Francisco, and as it is the only point in southern California now reached by more than one transcontinental railroad, the trade will certainly come there if the facilities are available."

The next step in harbor improvement by the National Government is the extension of the existing breakwater. A project for such extension has been prepared and will no doubt meet with the approval of Congress.

San Pedro will undoubtedly become a very important port both as to the amount of commerce handled by it and as to the large safe anchorage which it will afford for deep-draft vessels. There will also be splendid railroad terminal and wharfage facilities. In fact, the harbor will soon be suitable for the embarking or debarking of large military expeditions.

A brief survey, with reference to the case under discussion, of some of the considerations which make the fortification of any given harbor necessary seems desirable. These conditions may be stated as follows:

1. When the property to be protected locally against a raid by the enemy is of such value as to render adequate fortification economical as a matter of insurance. A raid by the enemy might be either a purely naval affair, involving the bombardment of the harbor settlements and the destruction of shipping, wharves, and railroad terminals, or it might include the landing of a force sufficient for an expedition against Los Angeles, followed by the quick withdrawal of the same.

Considering existing conditions and making due allowance for the development which will unquestionably take place, both in the immediate vicinity of San Pedro Harbor and in the Los Angeles country generally, before the earliest date when proper fortifications, with their armament and accessories, can be installed, it is believed that the immediate fortification of San Pedro Harbor is desirable, if for no other reason at least as a provision of local insurance.

2. When the harbor is required as a base for our own fleet. Inasmuch as the fortified harbors of San Francisco and San Diego are only about 480 miles north and 100 miles south, respectively, of San Pedro, it would seem that there is no need of going to the expense of fortifying San Pedro Harbor merely from the standpoint of the needs of our own fleet.

3. When the harbor offers superior advantages to the enemy as a base for—

(a) Purely naval purposes. The use by an enemy of this harbor as a purely naval base would be with a view to operations against other points on our Pacific coast or against the Panama Canal.

It may be assumed that our enemy is coming from the Orient. In view of the limitations of fuel capacity in ships, such an adversary would be compelled to utilize some stopping place between Asia and the Pacific coast of America. An attempt would possibly be made to seize such an intermediate base, either in the Aleutian Islands, say at Unalaska, or in the Hawaiian Islands, as at Pearl Harbor. San Pedro is within easy reach of either of these places, its distance being approximately 3,500 miles from Unalaska and 2,100 from Pearl Harbor.

The radius of action of a war ship, with reference to a given base, may be defined roughly as the maximum distance from that base to which it may steam, fight an action, and still have left fuel enough to return to the base. It is therefore somewhat less than half steaming distance. When one considers that the entire extent of our Pacific coast line is easily less than the radius of action of any vessel whose fuel capacity would permit it to make the trip from Asia to an intermediate base, or from the intermediate base to San Pedro, it is apparent that so far as location is concerned, San Pedro would be a good base for an enemy to operate against our Pacific coast.

From the Pacific entrance of the Panama Canal to San Pedro the distance is only about 3,000 miles, whereas from the same point to Pearl Harbor and Unalaska it is about 4,700 and 6,300 miles, respectively. San Pedro would be a valuable stopping place for a fleet passing either way between the Panama Canal and either Pearl Harbor or Unalaska. Being only about 100 miles farther from the canal than is San Diego, San Pedro offers practically equal advantages with the former for operations against the canal, while it offers considerably greater advantages for such purposes than San Francisco, which is about 480 miles farther away.

It appears, therefore, that as a purely naval base San Pedro offers to an enemy considerable advantages.

(B) Invasion by an army. In deciding on a point for attacking us the following would enter into an enemy's considerations:

(a) Value of the territory. Let us take, as indicated on the sketch map herewith, a strip of land including San Pedro, which for convenience may be designated as the "Los Angeles country." From a point on the coast just to the north of Santa Barbara, where the mountains run down close to the sea, it extends along the coast as far south as the Mexican border. Toward the interior it is bounded by an imaginary line which, drawn along the crests of mountain chains, circles eastward and southward from the northernmost coast point, passes through Saugus and San Bernardino, and thence proceeds more westwardly until at a point about 35 miles from the coast it reaches Mexico.

This area may be estimated roughly as having an average length of about 200 miles, with an average width of about 50 miles, and comprising therefore about 10,000 square miles.

The soil of the valleys is remarkably fertile, while the mountains abound in forest and mineral wealth. Ores, petroleum, asphaltum, lumber, grain, vegetables, fruits, and live stock are there in profusion. Manufacturing facilities, especially in the city of Los Angeles, are well developed. It is claimed that 80,000 horsepower of electrical energy is being utilized in that city alone, although the immense water power of its neighboring mountain stream is as yet scarcely touched. Civilization, with its railroads, wagon roads, electric street cars, telephones, educational institutions, and conveniences of all kinds, is found in a stage of most modern development.

Many countries with vastly fewer advantages support a population of 400 to the square mile. At no greater than this average the Los Angeles country could support a population of 4,000,000. Its present population may, in the absence of reliable figures, be estimated roughly at about 600,000.

When one thinks of the great extent of this Los Angeles country, its immense natural and artificial wealth, and takes also into consideration the mild, equable climate, which makes it one of the most attractive dwelling places in the world, no effort of the imagination is needed to realize the temptation it offers to those oriental powers whose population is pressing hard on the means of subsistence.

(b) Ease of conquest. Occupation by the enemy would be made easier by the absence of fortifications, and in proportion as the commercial facilities of the harbor develop. Without fortifications, every addition to the existing breakwater, every increase in the width and depth of the inner harbor, and every improvement in the wharf and railroad facilities is just so much provision of means for an enemy to take possession and to maintain himself in such possession.

Recent study discloses the fact that, assuming there were no effective naval opposition, a certain oriental power could, within a month of the time its hostile intentions began to be even strongly suspected (a formal declaration of war would no doubt come a good deal later), land on our Pacific coast an expedition of an estimated maximum of about 100,000 men, and that such a force could be augmented, by the end of two months more, to a total of possibly 300,000. The ease with which San Pedro Harbor, unfortified, and through it the entire Los Angeles country, could be seized is apparent.

(c) Strategic relation of the conquest of the Los Angeles country in any scheme for the conquest of the entire Pacific coast country west of the Rocky Mountains. From a defensive point of view, our Pacific coast country is divided naturally into three grand divisions, which may be referred to, in order from north to south, as the Puget Sound (including the territory tributary to the Columbia River), San Francisco, and Los Angeles countries. The Rocky Mountains act as a great natural barrier between these subdivisions and the interior. Likewise, these subdivisions are separated from one another by mountains.

It is sufficient to note these facts in a general way and to remark that while complete, each in itself, for defensive purposes, these areas are yet so related to one another as to readily permit of progressive occupation by an enemy, provided such enemy act so quickly as to forestall on our part any adequate defense at the communicating passageways.

There are certain harbors the possession of any one of which would give an enemy from the Orient a foothold of especial advantage toward the conquest of the whole Pacific coast of the United States. The fortifications of such harbors are so interrelated in the scheme of general defense that they constitute what might be called a "chain of defense." San Pedro Harbor would be of such especial advantage to the enemy. Inasmuch as a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the plan of general Pacific coast defense fails if this easy door of entry, San Pedro Harbor unfortified, remains open.

(d) Ease of retaining possession. Assuming that a powerful enemy has obtained control of this Los Angeles country, what is the chance of our regaining possession? Referring again to the accompanying map, we find indicated with arrow heads the only passageways between this territory and the interior that would be at all practicable for an army from the interior operating to recover it.

The pass at the northern coast extremity admits of easy defense. All the other entry ways from the land side have the same general defensive features, excepting the one toward Mexico. It is clear that, even were the neutrality of Mexico no stumbling block, attack at the latter point would necessitate approach over a country full of mountains and deserts, where campaigning would be a matter of extreme difficulty.

To bring troops against this Los Angeles territory from the interior (and we must assume the existence of the only condition under which a hostile occupation of our Pacific coast country is at all possible, namely, that the attacking power has attained supremacy on the seas) use must be made of the transcontinental railway lines. All the transcontinental lines of southern California, three in number, enter the Los Angeles defensive zone through the passageways mentioned. These lines are indicated on the map as extending to Salt Lake City, Kansas City, and San Antonio, respectively. The nearest transcontinental railway neighbor to the north crosses the Rocky Mountains east of Sacramento and enters the San Francisco defensive area. Sacramento is nearly 500 miles to the north of Los Angeles.

Sea, mountain, and desert combine to make the position of the invader, once he has taken possession of the Los Angeles country in force, well-nigh impregnable.

The changed conditions since the Taft Board report that now render the fortification of San Pedro Harbor imperative may be summed up as follows:

(1) The development of San Pedro Harbor.

(2) The great potential strength as an enemy which a certain oriental power has recently acquired.

As an additional argument in rounding out this report it may be stated that the suggestive effect of public discussion of war contingencies on the Pacific coast has undoubtedly been to provoke international antagonisms of the gravest character. Adequate fortification at San Pedro would certainly remove one now conspicuous cause of that kind of agitation which leads to unfortunate discussion of our foreign relations, and it would thereby promote that appearance of friendliness which the United States desires to maintain toward its neighbors.

The conclusion seems justified that the early fortification of San Pedro Harbor is a requirement of the welfare of the Nation.

PART II.—ESTIMATE OF THE COST OF SITES AND FORTIFICATIONS, SEPARATELY.

The following estimates, prepared in compliance with the oral instructions of the Chief of Staff by the Chief of Coast Artillery, in cooperation with the chiefs of the supply departments concerned, show the cost of fortifying San Pedro Harbor, California. The project on which these estimates are based is set forth in the second indorsement on A. G. O. 1415074 and accompanying maps and includes the purchase of about 173 acres of land, the emplacement thereon of eight 12-inch mortars, four 14-inch, and four 3-inch rifles, and all accessories for their service, the installation of a mine defense, and the construction on the site it is proposed to purchase of a four-company coast artillery post:

Engineer Department.
Purchase of site (See 2d ind. on A. G. O. 1415074.)	$400,000
Emplacements (For eight 12-inch mortars and four 14-inch and four 3-inch rifles.)	855,000
Electrical installation	250,000
Searchlights (Six 60-inch and one 36-inch.)	111,000
Casemates, galleries, etc., for submarine mines	77,000
Total for Engineer Department		$1,693,000
Fire control		100,000
Ordnance Department.
Guns and carriages (For eight 12-inch mortars and carriages and four 14-inch and four 3-inch rifles and carriages.)	784,000
Tools, machinery, cost of inspection, etc	50,900
Ammunition	233,600
Submarine mines	66,919
Total for Ordnance Department		1,135,419
Quartermaster's Department.
Barracks and quarters (For a four-company coast artillery brick.)	534,850
Grading, roads, and walks	70,000
Water and sewer system	72,000
Electric lighting of post (This provides for post distributing system only; power to be furnished from plant included in engineer estimate of $250,000 shown above.)	50,000
Total for Quartermaster's Department		726,850
Grand total of estimates		3,655,269

Under the conditions that exist to-day, I believe it to be a crime to allow this harbor to remain longer in its present unfortified condition. To do so, I believe, is to invite disaster to that portion of our common country.

This Government has expended over $4,000,000 for the improvement of that harbor, and contemplates the expenditure of a still greater sum. Even now it will float, in still water, the largest fleet in the world. During the last year it had a commerce of nearly 1,250,000 tons, and in a short time it will be one of the greatest three harbors on the Pacific coast.

California has a coast line of over 1,000 miles, and the only fortifications we have are at San Francisco Harbor, 500 miles north of San Pedro, and San Diego Harbor, 100 miles south of San Pedro.

Surrounding this harbor are the cities of Long Beach, Wilmington, and San Pedro, with a population of 30,000 people within easy range of hostile guns at sea. The city of Los Angeles is near by, with a population of over 300,000 souls, and there three great transcontinental railroads converge. The comparatively level land tributary to this harbor is about 200 miles long and 50 miles wide, bounded on the east by the Coast Range, on the north by the Tehachapi Range, on the west by the Pacific Ocean, and on the south by the Republic of Mexico. The only approaches to this territory from the east are through two narrow defiles in the Rocky Mountains, which could be readily fortified by a hostile army that might gain possession of this territory from the sea. Indeed, such is the conformation of these mountains that it might be impossible to dislodge a determined enemy that once gained possession of that territory.

Within that territory live 600,000 people, as progressive and enlightened as any to be found in all the world. Marvelously rich in natural resources that have only commenced to be developed, with a climate unsurpassed, it is attracting the best people of all lands.

These very conditions that I have just described also invite the attention of any hostile foe across the sea, and the absolute defenselessness of this harbor is an invitation to strike this very spot, with the Coast Range shielding it from our repelling army from the east.

The city of Los Angeles has recently voted bonds to the amount of $23,000,000 to bring water over the mountains from a valley 220 miles away to support its people. The expensive conduits of this water system would be the first to be destroyed, and I need only take time here to call to your imagination what would be the condition of the people of that city should a hostile foe gain possession of that harbor.

Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote on my amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FORTIFICATIONS AND OTHER WORKS OF DEFENSE.

UNDER THE ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

For construction of gun and mortar batteries, $5,064.
For modernizing older emplacements, $100,000.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, although what I have to say has no connection with the bill. Mr. Chairman, this is the last day of the present Congress in which private war-claims bills, including the omnibus bills, can be considered under any circumstances, except by unanimous consent. That is the reason why I attempted to make the motion I did this morning, so that we might avail ourselves of this last opportunity. It has often been stated, and truly stated, by the Speaker that a majority of this House can do anything, under the Constitution and laws, that it desires. Consequently a majority can vote against the consideration of any bill, and the question of consideration can be raised on every bill. So that when we have a call of committees the question of consideration could be raised and a vote taken adverse to the consideration of any other bill until the omnibus war-claims bill can be reached. Finally, on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] to go into the Committee of the Whole to consider the bill now before the committee, I asked for the yeas and nays, in order that the Speaker might see the temper of the House, with the hope that he would make the recognition which he had indicated he would if the temper of the House seemed to demand it. Upon that demand for the yeas and nays only 16 gentlemen arose in favor of it, other than myself. So, Mr. Chairman, that is an advertisement to the entire country, a statement upon the part of those who did not rise, that they did not think enough of war claims to even demand the yeas and nays in order that the Speaker might know the temper of the House was favorable to the consideration of war claims. These gentlemen who represent claims of churches, schools, academies, colleges, and lodges all over the country, as well as claims for private individuals, can tell their constituents that they did not even stand up to demand the yeas and nays on a proceeding by which we were trying to reach consideration of their bills.

These gentlemen come before the Committee on War Claims and plead and beg to have their bills reported. The committee has been industrious and reported many hundreds, and they are on the calendar, but when it comes to getting up and showing their nerve and making a fight, they do not do it. Now, the committee has done all it can, especially the minority members, who have exhausted their resources, and they have not been supported by gentlemen upon this side or upon that. Today you buried the omnibus war claims bill, and did not even put up a headstone; did not even give it the yeas and nays to see who wanted their claims acted upon if possible to reach a condition whereby they might be considered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman said that Members on this side did not assist him.

Mr. SIMS. Only 16 Members asked for the yeas and nays, even if the whole 17 were on this side, which was not a sufficient number to get the yeas and nays ordered. This action was evidence to the Speaker that there was practically no sentiment favorable to considering war claims.

Mr. MANN. They were not all on that side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to state that a motion was made that the House adjourn on Wednesday last. If the House had adjourned, we would have had a war claims day. Did not the gentleman from Tennessee vote against adjournment and in favor of a recess so as to cut out the war claims day?

Mr. SIMS. I voted against adjournment because I wanted the bill then under consideration to be finished and passed. It had an amendment on it to stop the c. o. d. jug trade in intoxicating liquors in this country, and I would do the same thing again. But to-day we had an opportunity to show whether Members wanted to consider war claims bills or not, and only 16 Members besides myself rose to demand the yeas and nays, which seemed necessary in order to convince the Speaker that the sentiment of the House favored such action.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to state now that hereafter I shall make the point of order against every speech not made to the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman will wait a moment. I simply wish to say this. I am reminded of the story of the man who kept a summer hotel. At one part of the daily repast a man at table asked for pie and the proprietor came into the room and announced in a loud voice that he wanted his guests to understand that those who had pudding could not have pie. Those gentlemen who are anxious to get this so-called "Knox prohibition bill" passed could not at the same time arrange the legislative business so that they could consider war claims. They took their pudding instead of their pie.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. The House took a recess after the penal code had been passed in the House, without even the gentleman from New York voting against it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this House could have adjourned last night and then this would have been the legislative day of Friday and a war claims day, but we took a recess last night long after the penal-code bill had passed. It is all nonsense about there being any contest between these two measures.

Mr. MANN. And we took a recess without a dissenting voice.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill and I am going to make the point of order against every speech not on the bill.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Iowa will not make his point of order until I have had a chance to explain for myself the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]. I desire to say to this House that I am one of the 17 who stood up in favor of procuring what I consider the people of this country are entitled to, and that is a consideration of an appropriation for claims which this Government has admitted by its own acts, by its own courts, that it does owe to certain people of this country and which this House is failing to pay by refusing to consider the omnibus claims bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reserve lights, $10,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa, what does the gentleman mean here by "reserve lights?" It does not seem to be in the current law, and it is an extra appropriation here.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will state it has been determined by the War Department that there should be some little storage-battery electric lamps for use in the magazines in case there is any disaster to the general electric apparatus. These lights are of that type, partly for an actual reserve and partly that the Coast Artillery may be trained in their use—that is, by using them at times when the regular electric lights are turned out, and thus enabling them to train and fit themselves for actual service conditions when the electric lights may be destroyed or temporarily injured.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is this amount for the apparatus or is this for the current of electricity?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Neither. These are in the nature of dry-battery lights—lights to be used in and about the magazines when the ordinary system of electric light is not available.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They are not electric lights at all.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They are electric lights, but they are dry batteries; yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for machine and automatic guns, and for mountain, field, and siege cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $160,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert at the end of line 12, page 4:

"Provided, That no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be expended for powder other than small-arms powder at a cost in excess of 64 cents a pound."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is simply in accordance with the action taken by the House upon the naval appropriation bill as to the price to be paid for powder other than small-arms powder and that action of the House has been concurred in by the Senate as to powder purchased for the navy, and the same rule, in my judgment, should apply to the powder authorized in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the Government of the United States requires about 4,500,000 pounds of this smokeless powder per annum. The capacity of the army and navy powder factories is about 1,500,000 pounds, so that it has been buying in the neighborhood of 3,000,000 pounds per annum. Of this only five or six hundred thousand pounds is bought under this bill; about four-fifths of it is bought under the naval bill. It is true, as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, that the Senate has concurred in the House action in fixing the maximum of 64 cents upon powder purchased under the naval bill. I do not, in view of that fact, feel that it is incumbent upon me at this time to make a determined effort to prevent that amendment going upon this bill, although I believe it to be illy advised, and my action in not vigorously protesting against the amendment is based only upon the fact that the great body of the powder bought by the Government of this character is bought under the naval bill and that only a minor portion of it is covered by this bill.

I do want to say a few things about the subject of powder. Powder of the smokeless variety was first bought by this Government about 1896, and then cost a dollar a pound; but at that time the Government furnished the alcohol for the powder, worth about 9 cents, as I remember it, for the amount of alcohol necessary to produce a pound of powder, so that practically the price of powder was then $1.09. Subsequently a chemical system was devised of recovering a large portion of the alcohol thus used, so that the actual loss of alcohol per pound of powder gradually fell from 9 cents to only about 4 cents, the balance of the 9 cents' worth of alcohol being recovered. I shall make no further reference to this subject of the reduction of the cost of alcohol per pound except to say that the Government furnished the alcohol until 1907, so that the amount that the alcohol cost per pound must be added to the cost given down to that period. In 1896 we paid a dollar a pound; in 1897 we paid the same; in 1898 we bought it at 80 and 85 cents; in 1899 we paid from 80 to 85 cents; in 1900 we paid 70 to 85 cents; in 1901 we paid from 70 to 85 cents; in 1902, from 69 to 70 cents; in 1903, from 70 to 80 cents; in 1904, 70 cents; in 1905, from 75 to 80 cents; in 1906, 70 cents; in 1907, 69 cents, and in 1908, 67 cents per pound; but the fall from 69 to 67 cents was in fact a drop in price of at least 5 cents per pound, because at that time the arrangement was changed so that the powder company furnished the alcohol, and not the Government. The amount of alcohol not recovered had also fallen, so that the actual loss in alcohol per pound was probably not much in excess of 3 cents at that time.

So that there has been a constant decline in the price of powders in the years since 1896, when it was $1.07 to $1.09, to the present, when it is 67 cents a pound.

In the estimates furnished to the committee by the War Department 63½ cents, in round numbers, was given as the cost of powder to the private manufacturer, with certain matters not taken into consideration. Among those was the item of freight.

The powder bought of the private manufacturers is delivered wherever the War Department or the Navy Department may see fit to order it delivered, freight paid. It is in fact delivered either upon the Atlantic coast or at the Benicia Arsenal. About one-fourth is delivered at Benicia Arsenal, and the freight from the eastern powder mills is about 2½ cents a pound.

Mr. SHERLEY. Two and three-tenths cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that I may conclude my remarks upon that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to conclude his remarks on the subject. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I was saying the freight costs approximately 2½ cents a pound, and my friend from Kentucky says 2.3 cents.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have the figures; $2.30 per hundred.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Two and three-tenths cents a pound to ship this powder to Benicia Arsenal. Of the amount that is furnished to the War Department, about one-fourth is delivered at Benicia Arsenal—that is, an average additional cost of the powder is about 5.8 cents per pound, by reason of paying 2.3 cents freight upon that shipped west. That alone would raise the estimate before the committee above 64 cents, the maximum that could be paid under this provision offered by the gentleman from Kentucky; but this estimate includes 6 per cent interest only upon the actual portion of the powder plant engaged in the manufacture. It will scarcely be claimed that a man would embark in manufacturing with the understanding that he was to receive as his gross profits 6 per cent upon the value of as much of his factory as he could keep employed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state what capacity the plant has, the capital of which is fixed at $1,500,000?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is given in this table, as I remember it, but I can not state it at this moment. But it said that it is estimated upon running at full capacity.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And what would the full capacity be? It is an important thing to know how much they consider is being used of this plant.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not give it to the gentleman from memory.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the attention to it for this reason——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I see the statement shows it is estimated that such a plant would produce 1,047,063 pounds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I had this in mind. We know from our testimony that from an investment of $340,000 we can have a plant that will turn out a million pounds a year.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will reach this question in a moment, if the gentleman will allow me to proceed in my own way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I beg pardon. I did not want him to pass that by.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will reach it in a moment. Now, that is one item that is in here—6 per cent upon the portion of the plant actually employed, and no more. Now, no man would go into manufacturing to get a return of 6 per cent upon the portion of his plant that was actually employed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Is the gentleman referring to the Indianhead plant?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; I am referring to any plant. This is a hypothetical estimate of what a plant running at full capacity can do, as given by the War Department.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Is it not a fact that the Indianhead plant cost only about $650,000, and that its capacity is more than you have stated?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; it is not a fact in any ordinary sense. The Indianhead plant is running now twenty-four hours in a day; and there is no estimate on the value of the real estate, as I understand it. We owned that before. I think I am correct in both statements. But that has nothing to do with this proposition, which is an estimate of 6 per cent upon the cost of a hypothetical plant, as found by the War Department. If you should even allow 8 per cent upon the amount of the plant engaged, not upon the whole plant, it would raise the price 3 cents a pound, or to the full amount allowed by the War Department now.

But still more interesting is the fact that this War Department estimate of fire loss is based solely upon the experience of the Government at a single powder plant at Indianhead, by taking the loss in seven years and dividing it by 7. And in order to ascertain how fair that was I made an estimate, and find that the rate of insurance allowed was 50 cents on $100, or exactly the amount charged for a farm risk in the Mississippi Valley, and that was supposed to represent the danger to a powder plant.

Now, this powder question has its embarrassments to me. There were four independent and separate powder plants at one time, as I understand it, capable of producing smokeless powder for the Government, all now under one management, and one of the four plants, that in California, absolutely closed. The Government, therefore, has no one to buy of save this one company.

When that condition arose a joint board, composed of army and navy officers, changed the policy with reference to buying powder, and in place of taking bids from this one powder company, this joint board estimated what it thought powder ought to be worth and offered that price, made the bid itself instead of receiving bids from the powder company; offered 67 cents a pound, and that offer was accepted by the Du Pont company.

Unfortunately, we have not sufficient capacity at the national plant to produce the amount of powder that we consume in this country now. We are running the plant at Indianhead twenty-four hours in the day. The drying rooms and accessories in the Dover plant are not sufficient to run that plant twenty-four hours in the day. An appropriation has been carried in the naval appropriation bill to enlarge the powder plant at Indianhead, and the sundry civil bill, this day reported to the House, carries an appropriation to enlarge the army powder plant at Picatinny.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman state how large that appropriation is?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman knows quite as well as I do.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want the committee informed.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman, then, will inform the committee in due season. Within twelve months from now we ought to be in a position to manufacture all our own powder, if that seems desirable, but we are not in a position to do it now nor until these powder mills are enlarged. If, then, this powder company will not take the price fixed by Congress, in reduction of the price fixed by the army and navy board, these appropriations fail.

I can but feel that it was unfortunate that my friends discovered that 64 cents and not 67 cents was exactly the right price just the year before we had sufficient powder capacity to make our own powder if we wanted to.

But both Houses of Congress having voted as to five-sixths of the powder to put in this restriction, I feel no further responsibility on the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to go so elaborately into this question as my colleague on the committee. Anyone who will carefully investigate the question, however, can not but feel that the joint board was somewhat overcareful not to do an injustice to the private manufacturer. One of the items of cost which is allowed, and which brings the price of powder for the private manufacturer up to sixty-three and a fraction cents, is the item of 6 per cent interest on the investment of $1,500,000 for the plant. It is universally stated that the private manufacturer can acquire plants and can conduct them much more cheaply than the Government, yet in estimating how much it costs the private manufacturer to acquire and equip his plant, the army and navy board allows to the private manufacturer $1,500,000, whereas the navy or the army by an investment of $340,000 is able to obtain a plant of equal capacity. If we were to consider that the amount invested by a private manufacturer in his plant was about the same as the investment of the Government, the 9 cents a pound which is allowed by the joint board to represent interest on the investment instead of amounting to 6 per cent upon the amount of investment amounts to 27 per cent upon the amount of investment. So that it would seem to me that even on the showing of the joint board there is ample margin in these figures not only to guarantee a reasonable return upon the investment, but to allow an ample profit upon the business, considering it even an extra hazardous business.

I suggest that while the price of powder has gone down from year to year, during that time in our recent history when the Government consumed such enormous quantities of powder, the price paid was much beyond what the Government should have been compelled to pay for it. But with the extension of our plants and with the information that has been coming, the price has gradually been forced down. More than that, Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt whatever that not only are all of the smokeless-powder plants in this country in a combination, but they even have a combination with all of the foreign manufacturers of this powder. Under the agreement which exists, or which has only recently expired, it was provided that if the Government of the United States applied for information from one of the foreign manufacturers as to what the price of a certain class of powder would be, that manufacturer was compelled to inquire through the chairman of a certain board of the foreign manufacturers from the chairman of the American manufacturers what price was being quoted to the Government by the American manufacturers, and under the agreement the foreign manufacturer could not quote a lower price than was being paid by the Government to the American manufacturer. Knowing what we do about the operations of these combinations, it is apparent that they do not conduct their business at a loss, even when the sole purchaser is the Government. Upon all of the information available I am convinced that the manufacturers can supply powder for 64 cents a pound and make all the profit they should be justified in expecting to make from this business with the Government.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would ask the gentleman whether or not it is a fact that the price of powder has been gradually declining the last six or eight years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not familiar with the world markets.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In this country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Iowa has stated the way the price has decreased to the Government from private manufacturers.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is what I have reference to, and whether it is not a fact that the price of powder has decreased to the Government in the last five or six years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Whether or not the gentleman does not attribute that to the fact that the Government, in the last few years, has gone into the manufacture of powder.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Partly that and partly to the fact that information has been acquired as to the methods under which these companies have combined for the purpose of extorting an unreasonable price from the Government. Sometimes fear of what may happen is more effective than actual knowledge of what is being done.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Do I understand the gentleman to say that these companies have combined to extort an unreasonable price for powder?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my opinion.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Has the gentleman any evidence of that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have stated some of the information upon which I base it.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. That is contrary to the reports of Admiral Mason and General Crozier, who state they have always been reasonable in their prices.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is their opinion; and against their opinion I am compelled to place my own in the discharge of my duties. General Crozier believes that the price is reasonable, although he admits that he would be very much surprised if it would cost the Government more than 50 cents a pound to manufacture it. This excludes, however, certain elements of cost which should be included.

He and many others disagree with me as to whether the Government can do things more cheaply than the private manufacturer. He believes that in most instances the private manufacturer can manufacture more cheaply than the Government. So, if the Government can manufacture for 51 cents, of course, from that standpoint, the private manufacturer can manufacture more cheaply than that.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman himself believe the same thing?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Sometimes; on some things.

Mr. MANN. Have not we evidence that they can manufacture cheaper?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe they do. These figures of the General Board, in my opinion, are too high. That is why I have no faith in them. Take the 9 cents per pound, the 6 per cent a year on $1,500,000 for the plant that can not turn out any more than the plant costing the Government $340,000, and I feel that I am justified in my assertion.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to prolong this debate. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has in substance said that, inasmuch as the House and the Senate have expressed this view on this matter and on items very much larger than contained in the bill, he has no desire to resist the amendment. This statement of the gentleman might have been overlooked owing to the strenuous statement that followed it in regard to what he conceived to be the price of powder. The question is no longer new in this House.

I have endeavored conscientiously, with the information at hand, to arrive at what I believe to be a fair price for the Government to pay—fair to the Government and fair to the manufacturer. I believe that it is demonstrable that the price of 64 cents represents easily a fair and proper profit to the powder people, and from the statement made by the army and navy board, and with the supplemental items furnished by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, my previous conviction is more than ever fixed.

The question of transportation was talked of when we had the subject up under the naval bill as if it added several cents to the cost of powder. In point of fact, it will add about one-half a cent.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Slightly rising one-half a cent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Very slightly rising one-half a cent. The question of insurance is raised, and the gentleman states that the figures are no more than that for a farmhouse; but he does not go on to say what he thinks the increase would be per pound for powder, even at what would be a proper rate, considering the risk.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman, if he will permit an interruption——

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Out in the region where I live insurance companies carry risks up to 5 and 6 per cent on frame houses on business streets, but they will not carry a powder magazine at any price. Consequently I infer that insurance companies regard the insurance of powder magazines as rising 5 or 6 per cent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and if you take it at that you will only add a small increase to the cost.

Now, it is impossible without making a more detailed speech than I desire to take up the various items. All of this information is in the RECORD, and was put there in connection with the naval bill. Unless the House is going to reverse its action and, in my judgment, no evidence has been adduced warranting such reversion, this amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. As I understand, the investigation as to the cost of powder for cannon, which is much cheaper than the powder for small arms, it amounted to within a small fraction of 64 cents a pound.

Mr. SHERLEY. I answer by saying that the two boards added to the actual cost of powder, considering only labor and material, the items of administration cost, which they figure at 2 cents; taxes, at 0.001 cent; interest on capital of $1,500,000, at 6 per cent, at 0.09 cent; rejection, 0.025 cent; making a total of 63.48 cents.

But let me say, also, in that connection that the statement of the investment is totally inaccurate, as explained by my colleague and as shown in the items we are carrying in the sundry civil bill to increase the plant of the powder manufactory for the army. The statement of a million and a half investment is totally inaccurate.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That price of 64 cents did not take into account some of the items of expense that would necessarily follow, so if you put them in it would run over 64 cents.

Mr. SHERLEY. I argued all that on the naval bill. Now, two of the other items that they figured on were the cost of the experimental work, and any profit which the private manufacturer is entitled to in addition to the 6 per cent on the capital. Inasmuch as 6 per cent on the capital is based on the fictitious capital, nearly twice as big as it ought to be, I do not think we ought to consider that item.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes or ten minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. The other items allow for extra-hazardous risk and pensions for old and disabled employees. Now, every one of these items, in my judgment, could be allowed, and they would not nearly total the difference between what it costs the private manufacturer to manufacture powder as against the Government. I have never known the Government to do anything as cheaply as private manufacturers did it, and it is proved by what I called attention to on this floor before on this very matter. Take the question of alcohol. The private manufacturer, by using advanced methods for the recovery of alcohol, reduced the cost of alcohol very, very materially. The Government did not. Now, then, that is just one illustration where by instituting such methods in private manufacturing operation they bring about economy that makes the total cost less. It is a safe proposition always that a private manufacturer can do the same thing 10 or 20 per cent cheaper than the Government can do it. If you figure that in you have got all these extra items more than accounted for.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but I do want to challenge the statement made by him and the gentleman from New York as to the capitalization of this proposed $1,500,000 plant. In that supposititious case taken by the War Department, $1,500,000 is taken as the capital of the company invested in plant and in material to make powder and put in powder drying for six long months, and in this case you only take the cost of the plant itself, and upon that assumption it is announced the statement of the War Department is fictitious, although the War Department counts the value of stock, which is the money here appropriated in this bill, and not money invested in the two plants.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's statement is his statement, and I do not think the record bears out the fact, when he takes into consideration the question of material invested, stock on hand, and so forth; and I do not believe any other company would be justified in figuring the capital invested in the company in considering not only what the plant cost, but the entire cost of the stock that is carried from time to time.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does not the gentleman know that in this powder which requires six months to dry there is more money invested in stock than in buildings?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but you construe the word "capital" as legitimately to include certain items, and I deny that these items are legitimate in that connection.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But you assume they got their material for manufacturing without any capital invested.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not assume anything of the kind. I assume, and figure on a fair proportion, that they will not have to invest a million and a half dollars in order to get a powder plant that will produce 1,000,000 pounds of powder a year, and the facts do not warrant it.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. In your estimate of cost, do you make any allowance for powder that does not come up to the standard?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; there is a reduction figured at about 2 cents a pound.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Two cents a pound for that?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; two and a half cents.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Do you mean to say you should not allow interest on capital invested in material?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not say anything of the kind; but I will say to the gentleman I do not know of any business where you would figure not only on the investment, but also for the money tied up from time to time in the output of that factory.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. It would be for this six months, for it takes that long to dry.

Mr. SHERLEY. But all of it does not take six months to dry and all the capital is not tied up for six months. It is constantly being turned over on the amount that has been dried and the amount that is drying.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. But there is always six months' product on hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes' further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Take the case of any manufacturer who would invest a million dollars in business. Supposing that all the money he proposes to invest is absorbed in the construction of the plant. Would the gentleman think he could conduct business on that basis, if the amount that he had already put in the investment was all that he could employ in the business?

Mr. SHERLEY. He would have to have some working capital.

Mr. MADDEN. And would be entitled to interest on the investment and capital.

Mr. SHERLEY. He would have to have a certain amount of working capital to take care of the actual investment—the sum that may be put into the manufactured product outside of the fixed investment.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman's point is that if they come out with a profit they would not be entitled to interest on that?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; certainly not; as the manufacturer is constantly turning over his money just the same way as in other businesses where the actual capital invested represents a very small proportion of the amount of money that is subsequently involved in the product. Take the whisky business for instance, where the tax is $1.10 a gallon, where the original cost of the whisky would run from 22 to 30 cents a gallon. The moment the tax is paid we have $1.10 in addition to the cost, and yet any man who has considered the nature of that business knows that the capital invested and upon which it is expected that dividends will be earned is very much less than the money tied up in the whisky produced. The man takes his whisky and borrows on it, and in that way carries the tax that he pays to the Federal Government, and it is not principal invested. It is never figured by any of them as part of the principal, and that is true of other businesses.

Mr. MADDEN. Take the matter of whisky in the case illustrated by the gentleman. The tax is not paid on the whisky until it comes out of bond.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true; but very frequently the distiller takes it out of bond, and it is then held by him pending a sale.

Mr. MADDEN. Held by the party buying?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; held by the manufacturer. There are many occasions on which the manufacturer frees his own whisky. I do not want to get down to a discussion of bookkeeping and finances. The gentleman from Iowa has conceded that the same action was taken in regard to the provision for the purchase of powder contained in the navy bill, and I trust that the same action will be taken by the committee now.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the proposition to limit the cost of this powder to 64 cents a pound is an exceedingly dangerous one. I have great confidence in some of the officers of this Government, among others the Chief of Ordnance. I think that General Crozier is one of the most careful, painstaking, and conscientious officers this Government has ever had. In the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, backed in a smaller degree by the hearings of the Committee on Military Affairs, they figured out the cost of the powder within a very small fraction of 64 cents, allowing only 6 per cent on the investment.

Mr. SHERLEY. General Crozier does not figure it that way.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. He merely submitted the figures of other officers.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And submitted additional evidence bearing on this when we considered taking this action on the military bill. Furthermore, I believe that if the Government is not to buy powder at a higher rate than 64 cents, but is to make its own powder, I fear that you will be unable to procure powder, and the operations of the army and the navy will be suspended until you can manufacture all the powder that is needed. No additional preparation is made to do that.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is hardly accurate, because a good proportion of the powder is now manufactured by the Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Less than one-third for the army.

Mr. SHERLEY. About one-third of the powder used by the navy, and they use more than in the army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am talking about what they buy. You can make all you want and shoot it away, regardless of cost. When you come to the Government manufacturing it, you do not limit the cost of what we manufacture. We manufacture it if it should cost twice that.

It does not matter what it costs; we would still manufacture it; but it is what we are buying I am talking about. They got it down to a fraction below 64 cents, and that does not include freight charges. That may be a small difference; nor does it include the cost of experimental work and many other items which swell the actual cost above the limit proposed in pending amendment.

The gentleman says these manufacturers have made experimental work, by which they save the alcohol. Does not the gentleman realize the fact that if, by their enterprise and skill, they have devised machinery by which they can use the alcohol over and over again, by redistilling and bringing it back again, they are entitled to something for that?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. What does the gentleman think all the money expended in experimentation would figure, figuring it on the cost per pound and considering the output of many million pounds?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should imagine it would be very small per pound.

Mr. SHERLEY. A very small fraction of 1 cent on a pound.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. A small fraction, but it only takes small fractions to run it up beyond the cost price that the Government can pay if this amendment is adopted. I admit it is only a small fraction, probably a very small fraction, but it is some expense; and the gentleman's argument, I will say to my friend, was based on the theory that these private manufacturers should not have the benefit of their great ability to cheapen the price of powder in any way.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no; that is the gentleman's conclusion.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We will have to leave that to the committee. If they save something on alcohol by improved machinery and processes, the gentleman's argument is that the Government should take the benefit of all that away from them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no; I merely used that one fact as an illustration.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, let the advantage of improved machinery and processes be divided; let the Government receive part of the benefit and the manufacturers part of the benefit.

Mr. SHERLEY. I gave that as an illustration of how much cheaper they do business; and instead of taking the figures of the Government, you may discount them 10 per cent.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then you do not take into consideration the low pay of the officers of the Government, who receive salaries for which you could not hire foremen in a private factory. An army officer serves for less than any other man doing the same work. That is true of your river and harbor work. The army engineers receive only a fraction of the compensation which a civil engineer would receive if engaged in that class of work. The reason they work for so much less is because they have life positions, and this Government cares for them after they reach the age of 64.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman has counted that in, how about the difference in the labor cost, between eight and ten hours a day? Will the gentleman answer that? If he is figuring what a great saving there is on the pay of a few army officers, will he also figure on the great saving there is to a corporation whose employees work two hours a day more than government employees engaged in the same work do, and without any holiday?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is a question the gentleman will have to figure out with the Federation of Labor. That organization insists that a man working eight hours a day will do more work than the same man working nine hours a day. It used to be that they worked ten hours. The hours of labor are gradually shortening, on the theory that a man will do more work and better work in fewer hours than he will in longer hours. And eight hours has been fixed as a reasonable number for effective work.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not mean to tell this committee that he believes the Government gets the same unit of labor for the price paid that the private manufacturer does in this particular instance.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, I have no information on that. I take simply the figures here; but I will say to the gentleman, if he wants my opinion on the hours of labor, that I shall be glad to see the time come when every public work, whether conducted by the Government or by private individuals, will be done under a limit of eight hours as a day's work.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am perfectly willing to do the same thing, but when you figure the economical cost I do not want the gentleman to evade the issue by going off on a question of sociology.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, Mr. Chairman, we are neither of us doing that. We do not either of us know exactly the difference of production of these men. We have nothing to base any judgment upon. I have only this one proposition that I want to bring before the committee, and I imagine that it is useless to do so, although I did not hear the statement of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Iowa]. I want to bring this proposition before the House, though. I am not willing to go against the best authority we can get and fix a price that is liable to deprive this Government of the powder that is necessary for the carrying on of our operations for the ensuing fiscal year. The target shooting of our army and navy is what makes our armed defensive force so efficient as to make them more than equal to the armed force of any nation.

Now, I want to go a little further with this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My five minutes are going rapidly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much reserve powder has the Government now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of breaking into the reserve powder.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You are using it up all the time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; we are adding to it. We are putting in new powder back of it, the powder we buy, in order to keep up the supply without deterioration. We issue the older powder all the time, and put new in the reserve. I never want to see the time come when we shall trench on the reserve supply of powder, because the time may come when we shall need it and it may be impossible to get it as rapidly as needed. Now, I will go on.

Third. Any profit to which the private manufacturer is entitled in addition to the 6 per cent on the capital.

I want to say that there is not a great manufacturing concern in the United States that is manufacturing hazardous goods that is satisfied with 6 per cent profit on the capital. If you fix that as a limit to the profit that men can make in engaging in this manufacture, you say to them, "Go out of business," because they can make 6 per cent on several lines of work that are not hazardous. Manufacturing powder is extrahazardous.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest at that point that the private powder plants in America have a capacity of 10,686,000 pounds a year of smokeless powder, while the total government orders are only 3,000,000 pounds, or less than one-third of the capacity.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am coming to that in a minute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Iowa also stated that the amount of capital figured on was the amount invested in that part of the plant turning out powder for the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken; I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like a few minutes more. I ask for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. So I want to say again that the 6 per cent profit figured on in this fraction under 64 cents is not a profit that would justify any man in investing a dollar in a powder plant.

Now, to go on. There is no allowance for extra-hazardous risk in these figures at 64 cents. There is no allowance, as said by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], for compensation to be paid to old and disabled employees. Some gentlemen say that they ought not to pay that, but all great corporations, and certainly those engaged in extra-hazardous manufacture are paying those pensions. Now, the gentleman says that it will cost 2½ cents a pound for insurance alone. That makes the price go much above 64 cents.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, to go on.

Sixth. Risk of becoming obsolete by changes in composition of powder or methods of manufacture.

The fact that private plants are not operated to their full capacity and orders for powder are uncertain and unavoidably irregular.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to submit to this House, in view of this full report, in view of the action that has been taken by the general board, in view of the price fixed, which is below that which is charged to private consumers; in view of the fact that we must have powder for the army and navy or the army and navy have got to mark time for the next fiscal year, because what we produce will not go far toward keeping them employed, this proposition ought not to be adopted. The efficiency of your army and navy results, as I have said, largely because they are the best shots in the world, and they are the best because we spend more money for target practice than any other nation in the world. We have a small army and a navy growing still larger, and for this Congress, without any more information than the statement of a Member who has no more information than we have, to arbitrarily fix this price below the cost of production is ridiculous.

The House can adopt it if it wants to, but as one Member of the House I shall not vote for it, no matter if I am the only man left in opposition. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement that 63 and a fraction cents does not include the large number of items, does the gentleman not think that the 67 cents which the Government pays is a scandalously low and unjustified price?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I should say if they make 2 or 3 cents profit on what the Government buys no harm is done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The trust will make no loss?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They can not buy of the trust.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be voted down. I was not here at the time this matter came up in the House the other day. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] remarked a while ago the Senate had concurred in the amendment made here, and very likely would concur in any amendment we make here now. Since that time I have tried to ascertain, if possible, something about the cost of the manufacture of smokeless powder, and I do not believe that that company could afford to manufacture powder and sell it to the Government for 64 cents per pound. I am convinced that they could not make any money on it, and if the gentlemen on the other side are only afraid they are going to make a dollar and a half on their investment, why, as a matter of course, their position might be justifiable.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion right there?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Judging the future by the past, we might be warranted in assuming that the Du Pont powder people will make more than a dollar and a half on their investment.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Why, as a matter of course; but we must take into consideration the fact that the item of powder they furnish to the Government is a very small fraction of their business.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, I should not have made the suggestion if it had not been for the gentleman's own suggestion. Now, on this side of the House, nobody desires to deal with them unfairly. If I did not believe 64 cents represented a fair price to them I would oppose this amendment, and I am not figuring on any meager proposition of a dollar and a half profit, either. I think it is demonstrable that they can make a reasonable profit at 64 cents.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I will say to the gentleman that according to their own calculations they make the cost of powder manufactured by the Government over 63 cents per pound. In estimating the cost to the private manufacturer they allow 6 per cent interest on a million and a half dollars.

As a matter of fact the Du Pont Powder Company has between three and four million dollars invested in the powder plants for the manufacture of such powder as the Government uses. You could say, "Why do they keep their money there?" Suppose this Government should need powder in a hurry. Suppose such an emergency should arise, as has been spoken of and was talked of in the Senate, and changed from an emergency to war. What kind of a fix would the Government be in with a law forbidding the ordnance officers to pay more than 64 cents a pound for powder? These people could refuse, and would be really doing themselves only justice if they did refuse, to manufacture powder for that price. This is an emergency that may arise.

Mr. SHERLEY. Assuming that that price is a false price. If you do not grant your premise, there is nothing to your argument. If 64 cents is a fair price in time of peace, it would be a fair price in time of war on larger contracts.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. As a matter of fact, I do not believe it is a fair price.

Mr. SHERLEY. But that is the question in issue.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I think, according to the gentleman's own statement, that the cost of manufacture by the Government is boiled down by the 6 per cent investment in the powder plant, and no one would be willing to invest money in a powder plant with a guaranty of only 6 per cent while it lasted. Then, there is another thing. No allowance is made for loss sustained by accidents entailing loss of life and property, and all such things, that the Du Pont Powder Company has always been very liberal in providing for.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact that the Du Pont powder people are now and have for the last four or five years been furnishing the Government all the powder that the Government has bought?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I think they have; and I suppose that is the only source from which the Government could get it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Whether or not it is a fact that since the Government has gone into the manufacture of powder itself the Du Pont people have continued to sell to the Government, from year to year, its powder much more cheaply?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Cheaper every year?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I think that is true, but it is also a fact that the price is agreed upon by officers of the Government and the company as a reasonable price.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman have or entertain any doubt that if this committee fixes the price at 64 cents a pound the Du Pont Powder Company will refuse to sell any of its powder to the Government at this price?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I do not know, but I am told, and I believe it is true, that they can not make any money manufacturing that kind of powder at 64 cents a pound. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] a while ago said they had been charging extortionate prices whenever the Government was in trouble and needed their services.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I have here some correspondence, and I will ask to have that read at the Clerk's desk. That will show very plainly that the company in question has always dealt fairly with the Government and has never charged more, and will show, as a matter of fact, that during the Spanish war they put the price of powder down two or three times. These papers I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read. I think this correspondence will show that there is no foundation for the assertion of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS POWDER COMPANY,
Wilmington, Del., February 16, 1909.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: In yesterday's debate in the Senate on the naval appropriation bill, when the so-called "powder trust" was under discussion, we note your statement, on page 2432 of the RECORD, that if war should break out——

"I have no doubt they (referring to this company) would do what they did before when we were in trouble—put the price away up—and we would have to stand it."

Permit us to call your attention to the fact that the du Pont Company did not take advantage of the Government in any way during the late Spanish war, or at any time when the Government was in trouble. In fact, we reduced the price of powder and assisted the Government in every way in our power at that critical time.

One of the important traditions of the du Pont Company has always been, as it is now, not to take any advantage of the necessities of the Government in time of war, either by increasing the price for powder or otherwise. In the last war this company adhered strictly to this line of patriotism and duty. This statement can be verified by reference to the records of the War and Navy departments.

We respectfully call attention to the fact that the statement quoted does us great injustice, and we therefore hope you can see your way clear to correct it.

Very truly, yours,

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS POWDER COMPANY,
By H. M. BARKSDALE, Vice-President.

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS POWDER COMPANY,
Wilmington, Del., February 18, 1909.

Hon. H. R. BURTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR DOCTOR BURTON: We feel there is great misapprehension in Congress in regard to the treatment of the Government by this company in the matter of the purchase of explosives, especially in war time.

Senator HALE on the 15th instant made the following statement in the Senate, when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration:

"Mr. HALE. I have no doubt they (referring to this company) would do what they did before when we were in trouble—put the price away up—and we would have to stand it." (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 15, p. 2432.)

The fact is that the du Pont Company did not take advantage of the Government in any way during the late Spanish war, but, on the contrary, reduced prices of powder and assisted the Government in every way in its power at that critical time.

This was brought to Senator HALE's attention, and at the conclusion of the debate on the naval appropriation bill on the 16th he made the following statement to the Senate:

"Mr. HALE. Now, I wish further to say, as a personal matter, that I think yesterday I did an injustice to the powder-manufacturing concerns in stating what I heard and believed to be true, that they had heretofore in emergencies put up the price of their products and had made the Government pay undue prices. I have reason to believe that the statement which I made was incorrect. I regret that I made it, and I make this statement now in order to show that I do not now believe the statement which I made was justified by the facts." (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 16, p. 2527.)

For your information, and for the information of the House, if you see fit to use it, in connection with debates on the fortifications appropriation bill, we inclose herewith copies of the following letters:

Brig. Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, to E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, dated February 16, 1909.

Rear-Admiral N. E. Mason, Chief of Bureau of Ordnance, United States Navy, to E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, dated February 16, 1909.

H. M. Barksdale, vice-president E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, to Hon. EUGENE HALE, chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, dated February 16, 1909.

Very respectfully, yours,

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS POWDER COMPANY,
H. M. BARKSDALE, Vice-President.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1909.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 16th instant, requesting to be furnished with information as to the price paid by the Navy Department to the Du Pont Company for powder during and prior to the Spanish war—

1. You are informed that during the years 1894 and 1895 the price paid for brown prismatic powder—that which was used for service charges—was 33 cents per pound. In the year 1896 this was reduced to 32.175 cents per pound, and this was the price at which similar powder was purchased up to July, 1898, when the price was reduced to 29 cents per pound, and the company gave a rebate on previous deliveries, totaling 282,110¾ pounds, and this price (29 cents) prevailed throughout the Spanish war and until the navy succeeded in obtaining a satisfactory smokeless powder, when the brown powder was abandoned.

2. A considerable amount of smokeless powder was ordered during the Spanish war, but only a few pounds were delivered, as the manufacture of this powder was still in an experimental stage. The price paid at that time for smokeless powder was 80 cents per pound, the Government furnishing the alcohol.

Respectfully,

N. E. MASON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS POWDER COMPANY,
Wilmington, Del.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, February 16, 1909.

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS POWDER COMPANY,
Care of Mr. E. G. BUCKNER,
Room 31½, du Pont Building, Wilmington, Del.

GENTLEMEN: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of February 16, 1909, I have to inform you that this department paid you the following prices, per pound, for powder during and prior to the Spanish war:

Brown powder.[a]

		Cents.
1888		27
1890	33	to 37
1891	33	to 37
1892		33
1893		33
1894		33
1895	32.175	to 33
1898 (except one lot at 32.175 cents)		29
1899		29
1900		29

Smokeless powder for cannon.

1896		$1.00
1897		1.00
1898	$0.80	to .85
1899 (90 per cent at 80 cents, 10 per cent at 85 cents)	.80	to .85

Since 1899 the price of smokeless powder for cannon has been gradually decreased, until it is at present 67 cents per pound, with your company furnishing the alcohol.

Black powder for small-arms ammunition.

From 1888 up to and including the Spanish war the standard price paid your company by this department for black powder for small-arms ammunition was 18 cents per pound.

Smokeless powder for small-arms ammunition.

Year.	Price per pound.
1896	$1.
1897	92 cents and $1.
1898	84½ to 92 cents.
1899	85 to 92 cents.

Since 1899 the price has remained practically unchanged. (O. O. 38877–490.)

Respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

During the reading of the above,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman's time be extended, in order to enable the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the letters.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that evidence shows conclusively that there never has been a time when the powder company imposed an unfair price on the Government when we really needed and had to have powder manufactured by it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have never charged them with having asked an extortionate price in time of war; I am not dealing with that, but I am endeavoring to show that 64 cents is a proper price. That is the issue.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. That is in reply to the gentleman from New York, who made the charge on the floor.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think the question is as to the good character of the trust.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I think that the price has always been reasonable, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two regarding this question, although I agree thoroughly with the gentleman in charge of this bill that under the provisions of this bill a very small amount of the smokeless powder of the Government will be purchased. I do not believe that there are many powder experts who are Members of this House. There may be two or three. I am not in the class. Smokeless powder is somewhat general in its description of a commodity. Smokeless powder has for years gone through an evolution as to the commodities entering into the production and as to the size and shapes of the products made. All of these changes have been brought about by experiments of a very costly nature, both in material and in lives of the persons who have been experimenting. I know as a fact that at the present time the powder companies are engaged in experimental tests of new powder which, if they prove successful, will be of great importance to this Government, but which can not be purchased at twice the price per pound named in the amendment. It is like the other new processes, which brought the price down from $1.09 to 67 cents. I do not know what the actual cost of powder is. I do know that the Government experiments very little in this matter, but depends largely upon the outside people to carry on these experimental tests. A few years ago, in my district, in one of these experimental tests, eight lives were lost in an explosion, one of them an army officer who was there witnessing this test. It seems to me that in the consideration of the cost of the production of this smokeless powder these things ought to be taken into consideration as something affecting the cost of powder. No matter if both the House and the Senate have heretofore voted on this price, and have now received more enlightenment upon the subject, it is possible for some men to change their minds at given times.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss this question further and want a vote at once, unless some one asks for recognition; if not, I wish to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SHERLEY) there were—ayes 56, noes 66.

Mr. SHERLEY. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. SMITH of Iowa and Mr. SHERLEY) reported that there were—ayes 65, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 27864. An act granting a right of way over a strip of land along the eastern boundary of the Fort McPherson Military Reservation to the commissioners of Fulton County, Ga., for road purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 26394) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Philippine Islands, $1,000,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for materials and work for construction of seacoast batteries in the Philippine Islands, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, for an additional sum not to exceed $600,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the proviso. I wish to ask if it is determined where these fortifications are to be built.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to explain that. A year ago in presenting the fortification bill I stated the plan was to fortify Manila Bay by fortifying four islands, the chief fortification being at Corregidor, near the northern part of the entrance to Manila Bay; then across at Carbabon, an island at the southern side of the entrance to the bay; and then upon two other islands lying farther in the bay and closer together, Cabello and El Fraile. This is for the fortification of El Fraile.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Where is that with reference to Corregidor?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It will be to the south and east of Corregidor. It is on the opposite side of the entrance to the bay from Corregidor, and is the first of the two islands necessary to the second line of defense. It is important that it be fortified now, for this reason, that while the plan contemplated the fortification of Cabello, on the northern side of the entrance to the bay, Corregidor is so strongly fortified that it well serves for the northern side until both islands on the south side of the entrance are fully fortified. This fortification at El Fraile is described as making it in the nature of a stationary battle ship. It is scarcely large enough for an ordinary fortification, and it was the plan of the War Department a year ago to construct another island in the place of El Fraile and establish the defenses thereon.

It is contemplated to cut away the top of the rocky island and install two great turrets like the turrets on a battle ship. This island will then be equipped with all the ordnance contemplated to be had on the artificial island, which would have cost $15,000,000, and this defense will cost, in round numbers, $2,210,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is this not a part of a plan or determination to put permanent fortifications in the region around Manila?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This has nothing to do with the controversy between Subic and Manila bays.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But you are not spending any money in Subic Bay.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We have completed the fortifications at the entrance of Subic Bay so far as called upon by the War Department.

Mr. DRISCOLL. When you leave this appropriation of $1,000,000, it looks like a permanent fortification around Manila.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. These are permanent all right. The gentleman need not be disturbed about that. This has nothing to do with determining whether Subic Bay or Manila Bay is to be our ultimate base.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not believe in putting our permanent fortifications there anywhere in Manila Bay; but I do believe in putting fortifications in Subic Bay, for a naval base, or some place else where this Government can maintain it when it gets ready to get away from the occupation of the islands. Therefore I will insist upon the point of order to this proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order, for this reason. I am not certain that the point of order is well taken; but the only purpose of this being prepared in this form is that we might appropriate this year the money that can be used for the next fiscal year and authorize its expenditure in accordance with a specific plan.

Now, if this proviso goes out, it will not save the Government a dollar of money now or hereafter, and it may compel me to offer an amendment to increase the appropriation from $1,000,000 to $1,600,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that if he does not, I shall certainly offer such an amendment, if the proviso goes out.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This work at El Fraile will cost for grading and for engineer work $1,600,000. It will cost for the guns $610,000 more, or $2,210,000. Now, we want to avoid the appropriation of that money, if possible, at this time, in the present state of the Treasury, by making in the bill an appropriation of $1,000,000 toward the $1,600,000 for engineer work and $300,000 toward construction of the guns to cost $610,000, and authorize the expenditure of the money which is not appropriated up to a total cost of $2,210,000. If the point of order is made and sustained, I say unquestionably we will have to increase this from $1,000,000 to $1,600,000, and when we come to the guns to go in these turrets I will move to amend by increasing the appropriation from $547,000 to $857,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is a good deal of a threat.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is not a threat. It is simply to show the gentleman what a mistake it would be to appropriate money now when we can go ahead with the work and appropriate the money next year.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I move to strike out the paragraph and test this thing and see if the House will stand for this expenditure.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his point of order on this explanation. It seems to me he ought to.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman concede that the point of order is well taken?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am not sure whether it is or not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not want to do anything that will cost an extra $600,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It will cost $900,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I certainly never have done anything of that kind.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to have the opportunity of asking a question.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw the point of order?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I reserve it to allow an answer to the question.

Mr. PERKINS. How much has been paid already for fortifications of the Philippine Islands? About how much? I do not care for the exact amount.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is about $8,000,000.

Mr. PERKINS. How much more is it contemplated to spend in fortifying the Philippine Islands?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The fortifications at El Fraile will cost $2,200,000. The fortifications at Cabello will cost about $1,900,000, if my memory serves me correctly. They are not in immediate contemplation.

Mr. PERKINS. How much will the whole scheme of fortifying the Philippine Islands cost this Government?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think he can pledge future Congresses?

Mr. PERKINS. No; but the scheme at present in contemplation.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Roughly speaking, $12,000,000; in that neighborhood. I am not vouching for the accuracy of those figures.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman whether the expenditure of $12,000,000 in fortifying those islands is approved by his own judgment?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It certainly is as to these items in this bill. There has never been the slightest doubt about it.

Mr. PERKINS. How much of the $12,000,000 is represented by the items at Manila?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Most of it.

Mr. PERKINS. What is the object of the fortifications at Manila?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The object is to make Corregidor an absolutely invulnerable point; a point where, if the worst ever comes to worst, and if any foreign power takes possession of the Philippine Islands, this fortress can be held for more than a year, and the American flag kept flying in those islands.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman anticipate any immediate danger of any foreign power attempting to take possession of those islands?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think it is possible at all times, just as much so as any place else, and more so.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think the fortification of the Philippines is required against that possibility?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do.

Mr. PERKINS. And would the gentleman be as much in favor of fortifying the Philippines as of fortifying our own territory?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. More so.

Mr. PERKINS. Why?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Because they are less protected, less defended, and more exposed.

Mr. PERKINS. But it is not a question of exposure, but of the value of what is protected.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There are several things to be taken into consideration: First, the value of the territory; second, the means of defending it, the degree of exposure, and how far provision has been made for its defense already.

Mr. PERKINS. In this case is it intended to preserve a military base there, or is it the plan to fortify those islands as thoroughly as we would fortify Massachusetts, on the theory that we are going to defend those islands as we would defend Massachusetts or New York?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have only this to say, that neither the War Department nor the Committee on Appropriations have any power to define the future policy of America, but just as long as those islands belong to the United States, I would defend them and fight for them just as much as I would for Massachusetts.

Mr. PERKINS. Then the theory of the committee is that it is wise to fortify the Philippines as you would fortify the seacoast of Massachusetts.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I say that I would not let any foreign power take the Philippines by force from this people, whether we want them or not. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman upon what theory he thinks any foreign power would want to attempt to take possession of the Philippines?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that it be extended five minutes to answer these questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman contend, as a statesman and a student——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not plead guilty to either of those designations. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. As a military expert, then, does the gentleman really think that it is probable that some foreign power would attack us in order to wrest from us the possession and occupation of the Philippine Islands, that they might have charge of them instead of us? Does the gentleman think there is a probable contingency of that happening?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. My judgment is, Mr. Chairman, that whatever power might be at war with us would seize those islands, not because especially of their value, but because every man knows that the American people will never submit to have taken from them any portion of American territory as long as they have the power to go and take it back. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I have consistently tried so far as my vote has gone to avoid doing anything which would tend to tie up the Philippines to this Government when the time comes when we can honorably get rid of them. I am one of those who have always sincerely regretted that we ever got into the Philippines, which I consider an unfortunate and un-American entanglement; and I hope that I, or at all events some of my colleagues on this floor, may live to see the day when we are honorably out of them. With that end in view I have voted against all contracts and leases on the part of this Government for rights or concessions in the islands and against large appropriations for permanent fortifications which can not be retained by this country in perpetuity, and against all other propositions of every kind that would tend to tie us up there permanently when the time comes when we can honorably and consistently with our obligations surrender up American occupation of the islands to the native people.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does not the gentleman think that it would be wise in any event to retain a naval station there?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes; I have always been in favor of retaining a station there permanently for a naval, coaling, and military base, and indirectly for the benefit of our trade and commerce in the Far East.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, how are you going to get rid of fortifying them?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have always believed that we should not keep Manila or Cavite or any place on Manila Bay as a permanent naval base. I have believed, and believe now, that Olongapo, on Subic Bay, is really the most favorable site by nature, location, and by reason of its large and fine harbor to be retained by this country as a permanent naval base when we get ready to let go the remainder of the archipelago.

Very soon after the battle of Manila Bay, when it was well known by all the world that Spain was defeated and we could retain the Philippine Archipelago if we so desired, President McKinley was in favor of retaining one island of the group conveniently located, with a good harbor, on which we could build our own improvements for a permanent naval and coaling station, and surrender our claim to the rest of the archipelago. That idea was wise, sound, and patriotic then, and it is now. But it appears that there is not an island conveniently located which will meet all the conditions for a permanent naval station, and therefore if we appropriate such a station we may be compelled to appropriate Olongapo and a small territory surrounding Subic Bay for that purpose. If we surrender our occupancy of the archipelago, we should do so honorably and completely and in good faith.

Therefore, we could not consistently surrender to the people the balance of the archipelago and hold the island of Luzon, because that is the largest, the richest, most prosperous, and the most highly civilized of the whole group. Neither could we surrender up the island of Luzon save only the city of Manila, and hold on to that permanently as a naval, coaling, and military station, because Manila is the largest, and, I think, the only, city in Luzon, and really the heart of that island. And no nation would give us credit for good faith and permanent surrender of our occupancy if we should hold the city of Manila and surrender the balance of the island. Nor can we let Manila go and hold on to Cavite as a permanent naval base, because Cavite is so close to the city of Manila that guns from the fortress at that point could easily be trained on Manila; and, therefore, Manila would constantly be under the power of the garrison at Cavite. Nor could we yield up Manila and Cavite and consistently retain the island of Corregidor, because a strong fortress on that island would command the whole situation, Cavite, Manila, and Manila Bay, and would be a constant menace to the archipelago and the independence of the people. Therefore, when the time comes that we are ready to evacuate the islands and surrender them up to the people thereof, in order to be consistent and honorable in so doing we must withdraw our troops from Manila, Cavite, and Corregidor and all places surrounding Manila Bay.

For that reason I have always opposed the spending of large sums of money for permanent fortifications on Manila Bay, to the end that when we get ready to let go of the islands we will not have to surrender up fortifications on which we have made very expensive improvements; but that we should spend our money on permanent improvements at Olongapo on Subic Bay, and retain that port and harbor as a permanent naval base.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I ask for two minutes more, because I am going to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will have two minutes more if that is the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I am strongly persuaded to yield to the urgent request of the gentleman in charge of this bill that I withdraw the point of order in the interest of economy. He and the subcommittee of which he is chairman deserve the thanks of this House and of the whole country for this very moderate and conservative appropriation bill.

It is nearly $1,400,000 less than the current appropriation act and less than 46 per cent of the estimates submitted to them. While other appropriation bills for our military establishment, including those for the army and navy which have been brought in and passed by the House this session, were extravagantly large and much greater than those of last year, this bill for fortifications is modest and reasonable, when you consider the demands made on these gentlemen. I am proud of this subcommittee. They are to be congratulated on their courage and patriotism. It is manifest that they were not carried off their feet by the war talk which is indulged in annually in the advent of appropriations for our military establishment and which, in a very exaggerated degree, we heard yesterday afternoon from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]. Such bellicose thunderings can serve no good purpose and may possibly have the effect of causing our friendly neighbors in the family of nations to suspect that we are preparing for war on them. Such violent war talk is not needed nor in good taste and should not be permitted to go to the country from the floor of this House. There is no danger of war if we behave ourselves and mind our own business, which every nation, as well as every individual, should do. We have not had a foreign war since 1812 except by our own making. The civil war proved to the world that Americans can and will fight when a vital principle is at stake. The dominant European powers are busy watching each other, and it would be suicidal for any of them to make war on the United States.

The Japanese are a patriotic, brave, and martial people, and will fight to the death rather than be imposed upon. But the Island Empire of the Rising Sun is small in area, not much larger than Great Britain, and but a very small percentage of that is arable land. They must cultivate their fields with the greatest care and skill and live in the most frugal manner in order to keep the wolf from the door. We waste more per capita than they subsist on. Their natural resources were well-nigh exhausted in their war with Russia, and should they engage in war with this country they would have no credit in the money centers of the world. The resources of this country are so large and diversified that we could maintain a foreign war indefinitely without feeling it very much. We would perhaps be compelled to practice a little economy and deny ourselves a few luxuries, which would be a good thing for our bodies and souls. The Japanese are as well acquainted with our country and people as we are with their country and people. They are sensible and practical, and not foolish enough to commence war on the United States; and we have no disposition to make war on them. Hostilities between these two nations is out of the question, and the committee showed its good sense in trimming down this appropriation bill for fortifications in order that the money may be turned to some useful purpose.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] says that if I insist on this point of order, and if this paragraph is stricken from the bill, he will introduce an amendment which will carry $1,600,000, whereas this paragraph carries only $1,000,000. I am an economist. [Laughter.] I do not believe in that sort of extravagance, especially when the money is to be invested in fortifications in Manila Bay. I believe the gentleman will do what he says, and I do not know but the House will go with him in this measure; and rather than take the risk, and in consideration for the good work he has done in preparing this bill, I withdraw the point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not want to take the time of the committee in discussing this matter. The gentleman from Iowa stated several good reasons why we should fortify at the mouth of Manila Bay. After indorsing all that he says, I want to call attention to another reason. We heard yesterday a most eloquent speech on the importance of having a fleet upon our Pacific coast equal to that of the greatest naval power in the world, in order that we might save that coast from being taken possession of at some early date possibly. I believe that if we fortify, as is proposed to be done by this bill, Manila Bay so that we can have a naval station and fortifications there of a suitable character, where we can have a few ships and troops sufficient to hold the bay and Manila completely against all the world, and also have another naval station and fortifications, as is provided for also at Pearl Harbor, near Honolulu, Hawaii; when we have entirely fortified these places as great Gibraltars against any foreign power that might seek to attack our Pacific coast States, we will have done enough in that direction, and we will not be called upon to maintain on the Pacific coast more vessels than we now regularly have there. But if we do not safely fortify these outlying harbors, all the battle ships we now have would not be, according to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], a protection against Japan alone. I do not agree with him in all respects on this question, but there is much force in his prophecy as to the possibility of war at no distant day. We can not foretell what these now elated people might do if we remain in an unprepared state. All the talk about danger on the Pacific coast means that we are afraid of little Japan.

We have gotten the idea that because Japan defeated in her state of preparation the great Russian Empire, it could come over and take the United States some time before we had time to get ready to meet the assault by water. She might undertake to take our far-off island possessions, if we leave them exposed. The gentleman on my left, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], seems to think that Massachusetts ought to be protected. I agree to that; but I am not afraid of an army being landed up in Massachusetts. We would gather an army up from the States of the Union and be there close to the shore defending the endangered homes of the people there, but we could not so easily do this upon the Pacific coast. My belief is that with perfect fortifications at Manila and at Honolulu we would have in the rear of any fleet that would attempt to sail from Japan or any other oriental country to our Pacific coast a power sufficient to warn them away. No naval power will sail by those places and come to our Pacific coast. If we have vessels in their rear, they could not communicate with their own country, they could not get supplies from home, they could not get fuel, and our coast would be entirely safe.

We are not now strong enough on the sea to divide our navy into two fleets and keep one on the Pacific and one on the Atlantic coast.

I submit a statement showing the comparative strength of our navy with other naval powers. The following table, taken from the Navy Year Book of 1908, shows the strength and relative strength of the principal naval powers of the world in battle ships of 10,000 tons and over and armored cruisers—built, building, and provided for:

	Number.	Tonnage.
Great Britain:
Battle ships	61	910,330
Armored cruisers	39	485,600
Total tonnage		1,395,930
United States:
Battle ships	31	449,796
Armored cruisers	12	157,445
Total tonnage		607,241
Germany:
Battle ships	31	414,486
Armored cruisers	11	133,768
Total tonnage		548,254
France:
Battle ships	26	357,132
Armored cruisers	22	216,232
Total tonnage		573,364
Japan:
Battle ships	15	233,444
Armored cruisers	15	175,001
Total tonnage		408,445
Russia:
Battle ships	15	200,969
Armored cruisers	6	63,166
Total tonnage		264,135
Italy:
Battle ships	15	212,846
Armored cruisers	10	78,513
Total tonnage		291,359
Austria:
Battle ships	6	74,300
Armored cruisers	3	19,020
Total tonnage		93,320

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out an additional word, with the idea that it will improve the section. Its abolition might be even better.

Utterly detesting, as I do and have always done, the entire colonial venture in Asia, it has been my fate as a Member of this House and of the Committee on Military Affairs to help in a humble way make bills for ten years that have added enormously and with a progression that is startling to the expenses of the people. I sincerely believe that if we did not have the Philippine Islands there would never be any threat of hostile complications between Japan and China or any other oriental country and ours. I honestly believe that if the American Congress did not have that incubus on its hands it would reduce the annual military and naval expenses of the Government by as much as 50 per cent. But as long as we have them, I conceive it to be our duty to make all reasonable preparation for the security of the lives of our people who are sent there and for the protection of American property. I hope that the time will speedily come when the American people will see and will compel the American Congress to see a fact which seems to me to be so plain that every man in the world who runs may read, and that is that the honorable way of exit from the Philippines is just to get out.

The people of the Philippine Islands do not want us there. We are imposing a government upon them which they do not desire. Even the municipal governments of the Philippine Islands, according to editorial utterances I have recently seen, are not satisfactory to the localities on which they are imposed. As to the naval station suggested by my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY], I would like to know whether it has yet been agreed by our officers who are presumed to have tactical and topographical knowledge what point is best suited for that purpose. As I recall it, there has been a debate here year after year since we had the unfortunate alliance with those islands as to which was the better point, Cavite or Subic Bay; and so far as I am concerned I have never been able to arrive at a determination on that question. I do believe that it would perhaps be wise for us to have a naval station there. That we can get honorably; that we can get by treaty; and then there is no occasion for us to remain in the Philippine Islands, imperiling the peace of this country and spending scores and hundreds of millions of dollars of the public funds of the people of the United States in order to assert a governmental control over people who do not want it.

My friend from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], if I understood him correctly, made a statement a moment ago that I did not entirely sympathize with. I believe he said that he would defend the Philippine Islands as long as they were in our possession with all the ardor and with as much strength as he would Massachusetts. Whether he takes too high a view of the Philippine people or too low an estimate of the people of Massachusetts I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The estimate in both cases was on my pride and not on either people.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I suggest that I would expend more treasure, and I might be willing to sacrifice more blood—perhaps by substitute—in the defense of Massachusetts than I would of the Philippine Islands. I want to get away from the islands, and I do not want to impose these burdens that are increasing with such startling proportions on the people of this country.

When the Secretary of War, now the President-elect, was in the Philippines in 1903, he made a speech at Manila in which he spoke of the discouraging fact of race hostility. He seemed really surprised that it existed. No one else—certainly no one with a mental equipment aproaching the fine endowment of Judge Taft—is surprised at it. It is as old as the division of men into different races and as ineradicable as the dye in the skin of the African. I quote from Judge Taft in a speech made more than six years ago:

> Were I assured that the present attitude of the majority of American merchants and the American press would be permanent, and if I did not confidently hope that there must be a great change in the future, I should be very much discouraged in respect to the result of the experiment which the United States is making in these islands.
> A purely racial hatred is one of the most difficult things possible to overcome, and if it is founded on permanent conditions, it is almost hopeless to look for its ceasing. But I am not discouraged, because I am sure that the next decade will change the conditions in the respects which I have described—changing them most radically.

The Associated Press has brought us a brief—an altogether too brief—report of the speech delivered by Governor-General James F. Smith to the Philippine assembly February 1 of this year. He is reported as deploring "the growing gulf between the Americans and the Filipinos in the Philippines." Both these distinguished gentlemen may as well reconcile themselves to the fact that there is race hostility—"race hatred," as Mr. Taft calls it. It will last as long as grass grows and water runs.

And unless the Filipinos contradict every fact of history, unless they belie everything we know of men, white, black, red, or yellow, there will be a "growing gulf" between them just as long as one race tries to govern another. It is not in nature for one race to govern another with the consent of the governed, and therein our Philippine policy runs counter to what was once Americanism, but is now out of vogue.

There are still a few people left who try to persuade us that we are in this colonial venture from purely altruistic motives. When they hear themselves talk that sort of stuff they must feel like those more ancient humbugs, the Roman augurs, who, knowing the insincerity of their own pretensions, winked at each other as they passed in the streets.

There are, I suppose, a few dreamers who really deceive themselves about these matters. A few believe—as many pretend to believe—that we are squandering our money and sacrificing the lives of our soldiers to uplift the Filipinos.

The supporters of Asiatic colonial enterprises are controlled by diverse reasons.

The evangelical Protestant clergy were glad of an opportunity to preach the gospel according to their views. A few people do so because it makes official places and offers opportunity for promotion in the civil or military service. But of those who do indorse it, far more than 90 per cent are controlled by the same motive that makes the dishonest grocer put sand in his sugar—profit.

The most of our people do not care anything about the salvation of the soul of the Filipino nor for his political welfare. They view him as the average Englishman has always viewed the East Indian—that is, as an economic asset. He is regarded for what we can make out of him by the sale of beer, clothing, or machinery—and nothing more. I wish we could strike out of this bill every paragraph that refers to the Philippine Islands. I wish we could strike it out of every bill that we pass, for that matter. The money we have squandered in a thankless job would give every harbor in North America a good 40 feet of depth and would make all our great streams navigable all the year round. It would augment our trade by giving us better facilities for business. It would make our home people more comfortable and happier and would be more agreeable to the Filipinos themselves. Then, after all, viewed from the purely business standpoint, the Philippines are a gold brick. They have no important commerce with us, and never will have, compared with that of Canada or Mexico on our own continent.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] spoke yesterday of the Chinese trade and of its vast importance. He is mistaken about that. In the aggregate it is small, and when we divide it by the whole number of Chinamen it shows that as customers they are individually of no value. They earn very little and they consume less. They are not as important from the business point of view as the half-naked, barefooted Indians of Central and South America. But they are more important in another way. As artisans in certain lines, they have very great skill. They will never be of much value as customers, but they do promise to become important as competitors; and I believe that in less than fifty years they will undersell us in the cotton-textile markets of the world. Chinese labor requires less—so much less that they will thrive on what an American laborer will waste. They work for a wage that our people would starve on. And yet gentlemen think such markets are worth an abandonment of American principles—like just government being based on the consent of the governed—and the frightful expense of our administration of the affairs of a remote and alien people.

I send to the Clerk's desk two editorials from a Philippine newspaper—El Renacimiento—that I desire to have printed with my remarks.

Voice of the Filipinos.

[El Renacimiento, Manila, November 30, 1908.]

TAFT'S TERM OF PROBATION.

Are the Filipinos able to govern themselves? This great question has been discussed ever since the American occupation of the Philippine Archipelago.

By a remarkable and unexpected series of events the destiny of this people was placed in the hands of the United States. The accomplished fact supersedes right and reason and renders fruitless any discussion of the transcendental problem why the Filipinos should not have been left masters of their own destiny and of their own fate.

A military occupation; the treaty of Paris, by virtue of which Spain ceded to the United States the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands, in return the United States paying to Spain $20,000,000 for the renouncement of her former rule; the establishment of sovereignty and the use of power to maintain it, have become absolute and positive facts constituting as many incontestable arguments. But the bitter wrong is supposed to be changed to a benefit because the United States, when taking possession of the land and asserting their rights thereto before the nations as conquerors, declared themselves to us as a race of deliverers, an extraordinary and unique race in its traditions and its history, especially unique among the nations of the earth on account of its principles and ideals which would impel them to assist us in the realization of our desire and longing for that liberty and independence for which we had been fighting; just as a century before that same Nation had been fighting for its own independence and liberty and had only recently undertaken a bloody war for the purpose of delivering Cuba.

Why should the Filipinos not be masters of their own destiny and arbiters of their own fate? Thus spake America, through the mouths of its leading statesmen, after having favorably decided the same question concerning the Cubans in the Gulf of Mexico. But this Nation, free by tradition and by nature, this generous deliverer, found an answer in the discovery that we were incapable of self-government, and since, according to oft-repeated and solemn statements, its object was to assist us in the realization of our national aspirations, it could only suggest that we might be granted our independence when we became capable of governing ourselves, the sovereign nation undertaking to prepare us suitably for such a condition.

Ten long years have passed in this preparation, ten years of guardianship, ten years of painful experience, ten years of bitter deception, and as yet the problem remains unsolved. Very small indeed has been the progress made in that respect. Our advance is very slow; at least such is the opinion of Mr. Taft.

This old assertion of our incapacity is the stock argument of the smart imperialist politicians who clamor for American expansion. Among the most prominent of these is the President-elect of the United States. With what ingenuity does he evade the responsibilities of the situation.

In his report, after enumerating the failures of the Filipinos in municipal government, which he calls the essence of self-government, Mr. Taft says:

"This statement of the failure in municipal government should not discourage those who are interested in the outcome of the experiment. They should remember that in the United States municipal government has not been an absolute success either, and, after all, the defects pointed out do not exist in all Philippine cities; reference has only been made to such defects to demonstrate my assertion, and I do not hesitate to repeat that municipal governments are making good progress and are gradually fulfilling the ends for which they were created, although not as efficiently as in a nation accustomed to govern itself, better prepared for the exercise of its rights, and imbued to the highest degree with the sense of public duty.

"When those who are responsible for this autonomic policy for provincial and municipal governments assure us that their success is complete, they confirm the opinion of the enthusiastic theorists who are a priori convinced of the capacity of the Filipinos for self-government. When, on the other hand, others condemn the defects of such local governments, their verdict is welcomed by the pessimists and the advocates of the English colonial system, who regard it as a confession of failure, as a proof that the administration has been too quick and premature in conceding powers of local government.

"Truth, as I understand it, lies between the two extremes, and while the policy adopted does not insure the best municipal government that can be obtained under American officials, it established, nevertheless, a good government in which experience and practice and educational influence are slowly but steadily removing and curing the defects which come from the lack of political education and from the lack of adequate political ideals.

"The result does not show that the Filipinos are capable of complete self-government, but it does not show, either, that they can not reach a condition of capacity therefor and finally arrive at absolute self-government by means of the gradual extension of a partial self-government, extended as they gradually grow more and more capable of enjoying it."

Such is the manner in which Mr. Taft defines our political aptitude.

Incapable at present, yet endowed with qualities to attain final capacity by means of a slow preparation, so slow as to be simply disheartening.

Is this all the result realized by the Philippine nation in ten years of submission to a foreign guardianship? Sad destiny indeed for the Filipinos!

Furthermore, the sincerity of Taft may be doubted. In the imperialistic designs which betray themselves in the stronghold of genuine democracy, the Philippine Archipelago looms up as a most valuable prize—the open gate to China, the key of the Pacific, a strategical basis, a naval station, an inexhaustible source of coal and wood. Of course, therefore, ours must needs be a nation incapable of self-government for generations yet to come.

Let no one say that those who feel such sad presentiments and distrust are only the radicals, the theorists, the demagogues among us. No; far from it. The most conservative Filipinos, the friends of the Government, those who have been ardent partisans of the American sovereignty do not hide their fear now lest the dominating element to-day will before long be the owner of the entire country, and they do not hesitate to denounce the educational period of two generations which Taft has indicated.

The Philippine nation aspires more ardently with every passing day to be independent. To realize this sublime ideal alone, it has submitted to the conditions of American sovereignty. Only the hope of independence animates it to labor with a fervor that has never grown cold. It hopes, because it has confidence in Providence, in its own virtues, in the traditions of a democratic and free America. It is this hope which preserves peace in the Philippines.

[El Renacimiento, Manila, November 13, 1908.]

TO CÆSAR ALL OR NOTHING.

It is not through the dread of any fair competition that the entire Philippine press expresses its fears of the policy of "equal chances for all," so emphatically urged by the present Secretary of War, Luke E. Wright. That principle would be just and would without doubt promote competition of a desirable sort in the case of any definite and well-regulated national existence. In a country conquered by armed force, while its people aspire to a national existence, securing its own economic and social life, this principle is unfair and pernicious.

We ask whether the doctrine of a like chance for all can really call forth the stimulus of competition, whether this principle can apply under a government entrenched in a policy of the most radical protectionism. A mere superficial analysis shows that this principle is belied by its practical application. In America individuality, the efficiency and skill of the workman, political freedom, and an education intended to develop all possible energy for the struggle of life, have not sufficed to maintain in practice the principle of "equal chances for all," and by a possibly atavistic phenomenon the very same freedom, individualism, and unrestricted materialism have called forth powerful monopolies, known as "trusts," which kill all free initiative and competition.

As a result of this abnormal condition America is to-day known as country of the great "combinations," powerful agencies which impoverish and absorb the blood of the people.

In our country, subjugated by a conqueror without moral or ethnological affinity with us, what value can that phrase of "equal chances for all" possibly have? Even supposing that Americans and Filipinos had the same training and skill, and supposing that they had the same resources so as to enter the strife under equal conditions, is it to be believed that the natives would find the same protection that American enterprise, coming here to do business on a large scale, could reckon upon? Let facts speak for themselves. A government of commercial expansion, a government greedy of gold and riches, a government that at home fails to hinder absorption and to kill monopoly, a government fanatic in protectionalism, that builds tariff walls in order to protect special interests and trust-controlled products is even less likely to concern itself with our interests than with those of its own people.

This principle, entirely aside from the fact that it is in direct contradiction to the spirit of American political economy, is an absurdity in its application here. How are we, the Filipinos, going to start competition when we have no large capital such as the trusts possess, when we are unskilled in the control of the forces that have evolved the large combinations which decide the final outcome of competition? You Americans are abreast of all these things. You know and possess the means for this purpose. You have at your disposal all your many departments of investigation. If you want to know the value of woodland, with mathematical exactness for a safe investment and exploitation, you have at your disposal experts who will make a technical report and give all information necessary in the case; if you want to know the wealth of a mine, its availability, its exact situation, the steps that must be taken to secure the concession therefor, you have at your disposal the same experts who will report on the inwardness of the matter, all that is hidden from the eye of the layman and inaccessible to us; if you wish to know the resources of a tract of land that some company or other wishes to exploit, desiring to find out the chances it offers and the best place for the railroad to cross it, you have at your disposal bureaus of technical information with all their resources and plans to give whatever knowledge is desired.

If you are interested in some park scheme supposed to be a public convenience, to develop which tramways are indispensable, you have the means to get estimates, to have the necessary sums voted, and cause the purchase of what may be a worthless swamp without the public becoming "wise," all requirements of the law to the contrary notwithstanding.

You say we are afraid of competition. No; competition does not exist, nor can it ever exist under a foreign government. What we are afraid of is absorption, monopolies, special privileges given "for good," the death of our nationality, our annihilation as a nation, economic slavery, the most barbarous of all slaveries. When you, with your energy, your skill and labor efficiency, your wealth, and your national power, close your doors to the Oriental who comes to your country, not in search of equal chances, but of any chance at all, for making a living, lest your own welfare should be jeopardized ever so little, why should we Filipinos not be afraid when we are challenged to what you choose to call a battle of "equal chances?"

Aut Cæsar aut nihil. This is the true meaning of the principle of equal chances applied in subjugated countries. Everything else is illusory and wrong. To Cæsar everything or nothing.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking one more question of my friend, the military expert from Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask if an estimate was not prepared a year or two ago by the military authorities of the Government looking to the matter of the fortifications of the Philippines at an estimated cost of $15,000,000. Is that right?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Well, the name with which the gentleman started his question deluded me, and I did not realize that the gentleman was addressing me. It is true that a plan existed at one time to build an artificial island, and the amount was estimated at $15,000,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Was that the recommendation of the military authorities?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It was.

Mr. PERKINS. What is now being done?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They have decided they could cut out the top of this rocky mountain, El Fraile, and mount two turrets, and on those turrets they would mount the armament.

Mr. PERKINS. In other words, they will reach the same result at an expense of something like $2,000,000 or more that was contemplated at an expenditure of $15,000,000?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The same strength of resistance.

Mr. PERKINS. The same strength of resistance?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. What is the opinion of my military expert friend in regard to the military authorities who thought it was judicious to expend $15,000,000 on that plan?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am not a military expert and I have no opinion to offer as a military expert.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For procurement or reclamation of land, or right pertaining thereto, needed for the site, location, construction, or prosecution of works for fortifications and coast defenses in the Philippine Islands, $12,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that, and I want to ask a question.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not think a point of order would be well taken on that.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I think there is, but I will move to strike out the last word. I wish to know where in the Philippines is that location to be bought. They are going to pay $12,000, so they must have some idea where the site is to be.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The fact is that soon after the American occupation some lands were set apart as a Government reservation. Most of them were crown lands, and this is simply to take up titles to some small fragments. The sum of $5,000 was formerly appropriated, but it is not sufficient. They have been going through condemnation proceedings for the perfection of the titles to these small pieces.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This is for site, location, and construction of work for fortifications.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have just told the gentleman that those are near Manila where certain pieces of land have been reserved in the Philippine Islands by executive order, for sites for fortifications, the reservations being made subject to property rights of individuals already existing. Certain claims of this character upon a reservation in Manila Harbor have been made which have been found to be valid.

The sum of $5,000 for the acquisition of this land was provided by the last fortification appropriation act. The owners demand more, and it has been determined to resort to condemnation proceedings before finally acquiring title, in order that the valuation of the several tracts may be judicially determined. The estimate submitted is intended to render possible the acquisition of all the land owned by private parties at the locality in question, and is believed to be sufficient to cover the probable award in condemnation proceedings.

These are simply fragments of land within these reservations, and I have explained to the gentleman that they were not owned by the Government, while the great body of the lands were crown lands.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up time on this subject, but I want to ask permission to add to my remarks recently made a table showing the relative strength of the principal naval powers of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to print his remarks in the RECORD, as indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $547,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, strike out lines 18 to 22, inclusive, and insert:
"For the purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon, for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, to cost ultimately not more than $857,000, $547,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the alteration and maintenance of the seacoast artillery and the mechanical supervision of its installation, including the purchase and manufacture of machinery, tools, and materials necessary for the work, and expenses of the civilian mechanics and extra-duty pay of enlisted men engaged thereon, $25,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as an additional paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, after line 14, add:
"Not to exceed $35,000 of the funds appropriated for fortifications in the insular possessions may be used prior to July 1, 1910, in the War Department for services of draftsmen, such sum to be in addition to other amounts authorized for similar work: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall report in his annual estimates to Congress the number of persons employed, their duties, and the amounts paid to each."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all material purchased under the foregoing provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty, as shall other similar material furnished without charge.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the last proviso of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that that has been carried substantially in this form for thirty years. It is a limitation on the appropriation:

That all material purchased under the foregoing provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad.

Now, so far as the proviso:

Which material shall be admitted free of duty, as shall other similar material furnished without charge.

That langauge is subject to the point of order, if the gentleman insists upon it, as it changes the revenue laws.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I think the whole paragraph is subject to the point of order. The same paragraph was carried in the army appropriation bill a few days ago; the point of order was made to it, and it was stricken out. The fact that this provision has been carried in an appropriation bill, as I understand the rules of the House, does not necessarily make it law. On the contrary, it has been held by Chairman after Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that such a provision did not make it law.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is subject to the point of order, and I offer the following additional paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman concede the point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I concede the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in lieu of the paragraph stricken out:
"That all material purchased under the foregoing provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad."

Mr. MACON. I reserve the point of order against that, or make it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I insist that it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MACON. I think it is legislation upon an appropriation bill not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas make the point of order?

Mr. MACON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not think it is subject to the point of order. Now, it was subject to the point of order when it contained the provision that certain material shall be admitted free of duty. That changes the law; but this is a proviso that relates to this act, that "this money" shall be used for the purchase of goods of American manufacture. There could not be a clearer limitation on the use of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Iowa if this does not restrict the Secretary of War?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It restricts him in the use of "this money." It says he shall not expend "this money" except for the purchase of goods of American manufacture, and that has always been held to be in order. It does not limit him, except when he expends this money it says that he shall spend it for goods of American manufacture.

Mr. KEIFER. That very fact makes it in order.

Mr. MACON. I insist that under the rules legislation of this kind can not be had upon an appropriation bill. The gentleman stated a few moments ago that this provision had been carried in the appropriation bill for about thirty years, and that that was why it was reported in this bill; but he knows very well that there is no existing law authorizing this kind of a provision to be carried on an appropriation bill.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a limitation such as has been held heretofore to be in order as a limitation upon an appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered simply proposes to restrict the authority of the Secretary of War as to the appropriations in this bill. Of course we have the authority in making an appropriation to limit the discretion of the Secretary of War to extend that authority. I am not sure, but it seems to me that this identical question was passed upon recently when the naval bill was under consideration, and the gentleman who then occupied the chair does not remember distinctly either the amendment that was offered or the ruling.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman state who occupied the chair? [Laughter.]

Mr. MACON. I remember the Chairman [Mr. MANN] ruled that the point of order was well taken.

Mr. MANN. Without having the precedent before me, I do not remember how I would rule if I were in the position of the present occupant of the chair. We have the authority to limit the discretion of the Secretary of War as to any money which we appropriate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But this amendment is not in the proper form.

Mr. MANN. It does not say it is a limitation, but the form of the limitation does not cut any figure. The question is whether it is in fact a limitation. It says:

All material purchased under the foregoing provisions of this act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is legislation. It is not a limitation.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman make a distinction between the words "under the foregoing provisions of this act" and "out of any money appropriated in this act?" What is the distinction?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman himself has ruled on that question so many times when presiding in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that without investigating the real distinction I have accepted it as correct.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is quite safe, if he can find a ruling to that effect, in assuming that it has been well digested and prepared, as would be the case if the gentleman himself were occupying the chair; although in my case not as well digested as in the case of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not want my digestive powers to be put in competition with those of the gentleman from Illinois, particularly on legislative matters. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from New York would not need to have any fear on that question. I am always willing to take a seat behind the gentleman, and very often I follow him, except when he is led away by purely partisan considerations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is so rare, of course, that it is difficult for the gentleman to point to any such occasion.

Mr. MANN. Except that yesterday, after the gentleman himself had got us into a parliamentary tangle, he objected to our extricating ourselves from the tangle.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object to the gentleman unloading the sins of the managers of this Republican House upon a poor, insignificant Democrat.

Mr. MANN. Neither poor nor insignificant, and I have some doubt about the Democracy. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is only following the Democratic national convention in that.

Mr. MANN. That is the only case in which I do follow the Democratic national convention, and I would not follow the gentleman in that. I think the gentleman ought to have been seated in the Democratic national convention.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the intent of the amendment is clearly to be a limitation, but that it is not in the usual form for such purpose. Therefore it occurs to the Chair that the gentleman should put his amendment in such a form as to state that no part of the appropriation should be so used, and so forth.

Mr. MACON. Does the Chair sustain the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill:
"Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be expended except for goods of American manufacture, save in cases where, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad."

Mr. MACON. I think that is subject to the point of order as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that this is clearly a limitation on the power of the President to expend money which the House might withhold entirely. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNSEND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 27054, the fortification appropriation bill, and had made several amendments, and directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the amendments will be agreed to in gross.

There was no demand for a vote on a separate amendment.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 98.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4024) for the relief of John H. Hamaker.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 26203) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 26466. An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Burlington, Iowa;

H. R. 22340. An act relating to injured employees on the Isthmian Canal;

H. R. 18600. An act for the relief of John M. Hill;

H. R. 13777. An act for the relief of the estate of Samuel Beatty, deceased;

H. R. 26829. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved March 7, 1908;

H. R. 26482. An act to authorize the construction of two bridges across Rock River, State of Illinois;

H. R. 24833. An act to declare and enforce the forfeiture provided by section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States;"

H. R. 23707. An act to incorporate the Imperial Palace Dramatic Order Knights of Khorassan;

H. R. 17960. An act for the relief of Marcellus Butler;

H. R. 17276. An act for the relief of S. R. Hurley;

H. R. 3760. An act for the relief of the creditors of the Deposit Savings Association, of Mobile, Ala.;

H. R. 2635. An act for the relief of Herman Lehman;

H. R. 15442. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, and June 27, 1898; and

H. J. Res. 241. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish one condemned bronze cannon and cannon balls to the city of Robinson, Ill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 25064. An act for the relief of Angeline C. Burgert;

H. R. 12760. An act to correct the military record of Isaac N. Fordyce; and

H. R. 10752. An act to complete the military record of Adolphus Erwin Wells.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 8048. An act to withdraw from settlement and entry certain lands in the State of California.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution and bills:

H. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver a condemned cannon to the Grand Army of the Republic;

H. R. 6903. An act for the relief of Willis A. Joy;

H. R. 9617. An act for the relief of Joseph Swisher;

H. R. 12760. An act to correct the military record of Isaac N. Fordyce;

H. R. 13851. An act providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a new immigration station thereon at the city of Boston, Mass.;

H. R. 16551. An act to pay to C. F. Sugg, of Hales Point, Lauderdale County, Tenn., $79.95, for damages inflicted upon gasoline steamer Clyde by light-house tender Oleander;

H. R. 25064. An act for the relief of Angeline C. Burgert;

H. R. 27342. An act to amend the military record of David H. Dickinson; and

H. R. 28164. An act for the investigation, treatment, and prevention of trachoma among the Indians.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 28245) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, which, with accompanying documents (including H. Rept. No. 2205), was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD reserved all points of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill I shall call up the sundry civil bill.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the post-office appropriation bill (H. R. 26305), disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks to take the post-office appropriation bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether we will have an opportunity to vote on two or three amendments concerning the appropriation for clerks and carriers?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think there will be no difficulty about that. The Senate has put on 29 amendments, and, in my judgment, there will be no difficulty about adjusting the differences. They have made some inconsistent amendments that ought to be reconciled, but I think we can make a satisfactory and full agreement.

Mr. MANN. If the occasion should arise, I suppose the House would have the opportunity?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think so.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask whether the gentleman from Indiana will permit a separate vote on these amendments specifically of the Senate which cut off the increased pay of clerks in post-offices, and also on the Senate amendment to the House bill which gave an increased pay to carriers in second-class post-offices?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have stated that the Senate struck out one amendment of the House to which the gentleman refers, and put in a new amendment, for the purpose of making the action in reference to clerks and carriers the same, and I have no doubt that that is the proper way to adjust the differences. They ought to be treated the same, and I have no doubt there will be a satisfactory arrangement.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's opinion and the opinion of the House might not agree.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What I mean to say is I do not think it is proper to agree to a separate vote, if there can be a full agreement that is satisfactory.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Of course it is a matter of courtesy for this House to allow the conferees the first time a full and free conference, but here is an amendment which was passed after quite a fight in the House that has been stricken out by the Senate, and, in addition to that, they have struck out a similar provision for clerks in the first-class offices. It seems to me that we ought to have some assurance before we accord a full and free conference that the House will have an opportunity to show whether it recedes from the position it has already taken.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I understood the gentleman to ask whether the House would have an opportunity, notwithstanding there might be a satisfactory adjustment. After we agree to a separate vote, we should have to come in and have a vote, notwithstanding a full agreement, which would be needless.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman knows as well as other Members of the House that he can bring that back with a partial agreement and allow the House to vote on these specific questions of increase for clerks and carriers, and if he agrees——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield. As I understand it, the House made an increase in the provision sufficient to increase by 50 per cent the salaries of clerks in first and second class offices, limited to $1,200. The Senate has reduced the amount—cut that out. Now, is the House to be permitted to sustain its action or are the conferees going with the Senate—I am not seeking to bind the conferees—and make an agreement there consenting to this considerable reduction in the amount appropriated by the House and then force us to accept or reject the conference report?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I can say to the gentleman, if he has not followed the causes which prompted those amendments, that I can explain them in just a moment.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that I supposed it was a matter of trading.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, I do not think it is a matter of trading. The fact of the case is that there has been some reduction by the Senate, prompted by insistence of the department that the expenses ought to be reduced in view of the heavy increase in the deficit. For the first time in my experience in charge of this legislation the Senate has really reduced the amount of the appropriation bill for the post-office service. I should hate to offend the Senate at this late day by not meeting them at their effort in economy.

Mr. MANN. Better put the money into the clerks' salaries instead of into new offices in the office of the Secretary of State.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, unless we can have an assurance that we shall have a chance to vote on this later, I shall be obliged to object and ask the House to vote on it now.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the post-office appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, dispense with the reading of the Senate amendments, disagree to the same, and request a conference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I think we ought not to dispense with the reading of anything.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I will modify that motion by eliminating that portion which dispenses with the reading of the amendments. I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the post-office appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, disagree to the same, and request a conference, and, without intervening motion, appoint the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to suspend the rules, take the post-office appropriation bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, ask for a conference, and without intervening motion appoint the conferees. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FINLEY. I demand a second.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman is opposed to the motion, I have no objection to his having the demand for a second.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina is opposed to the motion, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman to demand a second.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from South Carolina to twenty minutes. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the large appropriation bills passed by Congress—perhaps the largest. The amendments made by the Senate are 29 in number. The net result of those amendments is a deduction of $27,000 from the total of the bill as it passed the House. This motion is merely to send the bill to conference for a free conference, with a view of adjusting the differences between the two bodies upon those 29 amendments. There is no legislation that is inserted in the bill by amendment, except a very slight amendment to the law, which will meet with unanimous consent of the House, I am confident. One is to clothe naval mail clerks with authority to issue and pay money orders. They now have all other authority, the same as any other post-office clerks. The principal objection of gentlemen, I take it, of permitting this bill to go to conference, is the fear that the increases of salaries of some of the postal employees may be in jeopardy. Mr. Speaker, when the estimates were first made it appeared that the deficit in the postal service for the next fiscal year would be approximately $16,000,000.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. This bill passed the Senate yesterday, and I have not had time as yet to read it. Is it a fact that the naval mail clerks are placed under bond and the Government is secure in that respect?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes. This is merely to extend their authority to the money-order service. However, Mr. Speaker, after the estimate of the Postmaster-General, indicating a deficit of $16,000,000, it was plainly shown that the revenues of the postal service would not nearly approach the estimates of the department, and that instead of a deficit of $16,000,000 there will be a deficit, in all probability, of $30,000,000. I appreciate the insistence of many Members for an increase of salaries for post-office clerks and carriers, but I trust the gentlemen will also appreciate that we must have some regard and respect for the revenues of the Government and the deficits which are staring us in the face and which unquestionably will be realized in the next fiscal year.

I think that it is not out of the way, therefore, to appeal to the membership of this House on the score of square, reasonable treatment of these employees without each year meeting the demand of some Members for an increase of salaries. Now, that is the whole milk in the cocoanut in this opposition. I do not know what the result will be in conference. I have not conferred either with my associates on the House side nor with any of the prospective members of the conference committee on the Senate side, but I want to say in my six years' experience as chairman of this committee I have never failed yet to make a satisfactory conference agreement, and I should hate to see the House at this late day show a lack of confidence in the conferees on this great measure. Members may differ, it is true, but in the last analysis there is general satisfaction with the result of these conferences upon the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not there is anything in the amendments placed on the bill by the Senate providing for a rural route parcels post?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Nothing of the kind in the Senate. The only legislation is that to which I have referred. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House it came to us clothed with a proposition to increase the pay of 50 per cent of the $1,100 clerks in first-class offices to $1,200; half of them were to be increased. Then this House, after much discussion, decided that not only half of the $1,100 clerks in first-class offices were to be increased, but, in order to have things fair, one-half of the second-class office clerks, the $1,000 men, should in their turn be put at $1,100. This was fully and thoroughly discussed, and the House decided that it should be done. Next the bill went over to the Senate, and the Senate not only struck out that which the House had ordained after that full discussion, namely, the promotion of these clerks in second-class offices, but it went further and struck out the increase for the clerks in first-class offices. Not only the Senate struck out all that we did for the clerks in the second-class offices, but it went further and struck out the increase for clerks in the first-class offices.

Now, there exists to-day a difference of $200 between the pay of the highest grade carriers in the first-class offices and carriers in the second-class offices. We did not correct this in the House, but left it to the Senate to correct. The Senate did so. Accordingly the bill, as it comes from the Senate, cuts out all promotions for clerks—I am not speaking of automatic promotions, but nonautomatic promotions—while, on the other hand, for the carriers, both in the first and second class offices, an increase is allowed, and, so far as the carriers are concerned, the principle is maintained that there shall be not more than $100 difference between the pay of carriers in the two classes of offices. If we accede to the motion to suspend the rules and turn everything over to the conferees, we tie our own hands. If that conference committee gets together and the House yields to the Senate proposition to cut off these increases for the clerks, and if, on the other hand, the Senate yields on the question of the carriers, then there will be no promotion for either the clerks or the carriers, unless the whole conference report is voted down.

Irrespective of how late it is in the session, irrespective of how necessary it may be to get the bill through, irrespective of how many other important things are in the bill, we must vote down the conference report as a whole, in order to get a vote on the promotions. I need hardly point out the impracticability of attempting to turn down the report of the conferees if you vote to suspend the rules and send this bill directly to conference.

I submit it to the good sense of this House whether it is possible to vote down a conference report which comes in on the 3d day or the 4th day of March. If this motion to suspend the rules is passed, then this House will be absolutely at the mercy of the conferees. Whether we like it or not, according to their own desires they may include or exclude these provisions for promotion.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield such time to the gentleman from Missouri as he may desire.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the point of objection of my friend from Massachusetts, it is as to the clerks of the fifth and sixth grades, $1,100 and $1,200. The Post-Office Committee, I think, has been entirely consistent. Our position is that if you increase the pay of the letter carriers from the $1,100 to the $1,200 grade that you ought to increase the pay of the clerks in the post-offices from the $1,100 to the $1,200 grade. If you increase neither, they are treated alike; but if either one is increased, both should be increased. As I understand, in the Senate they have carried out the views of the committee of the House in this, that they have placed both the city letter carriers and the city clerks on the same basis.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman is under a misapprehension. If he will read the bill as it passed the Senate, he will see that the Senate struck out this increase that we put in for the clerks, both in the first and the second class offices, and put in an increase for carriers in the second-class offices, leaving the increase for $1,100 carriers in first-class offices in the same shape as it was when the bill passed the House.

Mr. LLOYD. I am speaking with reference to the $1,100 and $1,200 grades. What it does is seeking to put the $1,100 and $1,200 grade on the same basis.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; the clerks are stricken out.

Mr. LLOYD. So are the carriers.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LLOYD. Unfortunately for myself, Mr. Speaker, I have not the Senate bill before me, and I can not answer definitely.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri is perfectly accurate; both the $1,100 and the $1,200 are on the same basis.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman——

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusets. May I ask the gentleman—not the gentleman from Indiana, but the gentleman from Missouri—to yield to me? The gentleman from Missouri is kind enough to yield, and I would like through him to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that the Senate has stricken out the new $1,200, as well as the new $1,100 clerks?

Mr. LLOYD. I have examined the record pretty carefully, and, as I understand it, they are on the same basis, and if they are on the same basis, they ought to remain on the same plane. Now, Mr. Speaker, I was undertaking to explain that the Senate had left the clerks and carriers on the same basis. If they leave the clerks and carriers with the same amount of pay, they certainly have dealt fairly with both. They have not favored one to the detriment of the other. That, in my judgment, is exactly what should be done. They should be placed on the same basis.

Now, if the contention of the gentleman from Massachusetts is correct, if they have not been fairly treated in that particular, the conferees will ascertain that fact, and I will say, in my judgment of the conferees that will be appointed by the House, I know that they are anxious that both classes of clerks shall be treated exactly alike.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will allow me to read from the Senate bill as it is in the RECORD, showing the changes——

Mr. LLOYD. Not in my time.

Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I see no objection to allowing this matter to go to the conferees to be settled in conference. There is but very little difference between the House and the Senate. It is a remarkable thing that so few changes should have been made; and, as suggested by the chairman of this committee, the most remarkable thing that ever happened is that the Senate has actually reduced the amount carried in the bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has fifteen minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina to use some time.

Mr. FINLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this motion for two reasons. In the first place, the rules provide the manner in which Senate amendments should be treated. Under the rules the bill with the Senate amendments properly go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. When reported, the Senate amendments will be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Since there is some desire on the part of the Members of the House to consider these amendments, I am unable to understand why Members on this side of the House should vote to suspend the rules, in order to avoid conducting the business in accordance with the rules. I am opposed to this motion to suspend the rules and to put this bill into conference, because I wish to express my opinion and to vote on the Senate amendments.

The Senate has done two things: It has provided money for the increases for more carriers in cities of the second class, and it has taken out money that the House allowed for clerks in the first and second classes. I wish to get these amendments before the House in some such shape so that I may vote to concur in the amendment allowing additional money for the carriers—to vote to instruct the conferees to insist upon the disagreement of the House to the amendment cutting down the compensation of the clerks.

The chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads made the announcement that the Senate, in a streak of economy, something unknown to him, had recommended the cutting down of the amount to be allowed for the clerks of the $1,100 and $1,200 classes. Mr. Speaker, it seems to be what might be expected from a certain quarter. When a start is made to economize it should be by taking money from the poor clerks, who need it most, and at the same time increase the salaries of the men getting the highest compensation in the Government.

The Senate put on the legislative bill an item doubling the salary of the President, and increasing other officers, and increasing the compensation of all the federal judges. No attempt whatever was made to reduce the appropriation for the navy. I do not suppose there will be any reduction in the appropriations for the army. In fact, a substantial increase of more than $5,000,000 has been proposed to the army bill. In order to save money about $300,000 that the House voted in order to give the promotions to the $1,000 and $1,200 clerks, to which promotions they are entitled under the law, is eliminated. These are clerks of the first and second classes. I hope that those in this House who have any interest in them will see that when economy is to be practiced it will not be practiced entirely at the expense of the clerks in post-offices. I shall not do anything to encourage economy along such lines when there are so many other places where it would be easy to save money. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I should like to inquire if the gentleman from South Carolina is going to consume any more time?

Mr. FINLEY. My impression is there will be at least one more speech on this side.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I suggest to the gentleman that he use his time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has fifteen minutes, and the gentleman from South Carolina has the same.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he consume some of his time. I shall close in one more speech.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FINLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Speaker, I know something about the duties of the clerks and carriers in the post-office. I was associated with them for about thirty years. A truer and better set of men as a whole never walked the pavement. Some of these men have been asking for a slight increase, so that those of them who were away from home and were paying an extra amount for their living expenses might in that way be remunerated.

Now, the Post-Office Department can not afford to lose good clerks. It is a very serious matter to lose these clerks and carriers, who understand just where every letter should go. The pay of some of the carriers and clerks is now too small and should be increased, in order to retain such tried and efficient services as our business interests demand.

Gentlemen, it is not dealing fairly, it is not dealing justly, in my opinion, and I sincerely hope that this House is ready to vote the small pittance which these men ask for and ought to have. I do not care to speak at any length now. The other day, knowing that the matter was coming up, I prepared some remarks, which I delivered at the time, setting forth my views, and I do not care to go into the same subject again this afternoon.

But I want to say one thing, and that is that the Post-Office Department was not created for the purpose of hoarding money. It was created for the purpose of giving the business people of this country their mail as they ought to have it. It was created as an assistance to business; and now, while we have done many good things, this action of the last few days is all wrong. Justice requires that it should not be done, and the business people of this country require that these men should have proper pay for the services they perform. That proper pay has been in part taken away from them by the action of another body, and it is all wrong, and I trust that the House will not agree to it. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I will close in one speech, but I think the gentleman from South Carolina intends to have another speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina has but one minute remaining.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have only one word to say in reference to this question. It is the usual course for this bill to go to conference. There are but a few matters in dispute between the two Houses, and it is very evident that this House will have a better understanding of the matters of difference beween the two Houses of Congress on the questions that are raised if the conferees meet and discuss these questions and report to the House the action they deem advisable. The House can then act on all the facts, if it has presented to it clearly the views of the Senate and the views of the House conferees on this question.

At this time it seems that the Senate amendments produce a contention between Members who are looking to the increase of salaries of different classes of officials and representatives of the department. That is a matter of too much interest and concern to dispose of hastily. The House can not lose anything by having the benefit of the careful deliberation of the conferees before it takes action.

It certainly can not be deprived of any right, nor can any Member of the House be deprived of any power that he has after the report has been made. I suggest that a conference on the disagreeing votes is the usual, the proper, the orderly, and lawful course of procedure. Any other course is inconsistent, in my judgment, with fair and honest legislation in the interest of the public.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman know that the orderly and proper way of procedure by the rules is for the amendments to go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and then come to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and be considered there?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That may be done under the rule, but when there is no necessity for that the conference ought to be had, as it is the ultimate result anyway. There is no occasion for taking the course the gentleman suggests.

The question is not what the Post-Office Committee of the House is going to do; it has already acted on the questions involved, and the Senate has acted on these questions, and now the desire is to reach legislation; and that can be done, in my judgment, only in a proper way by a conference between the two Houses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If these amendments went to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the conferees might be saved a lot of trouble; the House might agree to all the amendments.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. But the House will most likely avoid a great deal of trouble if the bill is sent at once to conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated a moment ago that the gentleman from South Carolina had one minute remaining. At that time the Chair understood that the gentleman from Missouri had yielded time to the gentleman from South Carolina. The Chair finds that he was mistaken, so that the gentleman from South Carolina has six minutes remaining and the gentleman from Indiana five minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, the principal amendments made by the Senate are on page 11, line 10, of the printed bill, where the item for clerks is reduced by $200,000 from the amount passed by the House. That is one amendment. On page 14 of the printed bill, line 20, the Senate inserts—

And for the pay of letter carriers in second-class post-offices eligible for promotion to the fifth grade, $155,000.

And the total is increased from $29,468,000 to $29,623,500.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think the House can very well pass upon these items. The House has passed on the question as to whether or not provision sufficient to promote the clerks in the first and second class offices should be made. We did that, and after extended debate the matter was fully considered and decided here. There can be no question about the attitude of the House on that proposition. Now, as to the carriers the House did not make ample provision to promote all the carriers from the fourth class to the fifth class.

The Senate has remedied that, and I think properly so. Certainly, it would be unfair to promote everybody except this one class. No provision was made for them in the House. The Senate has provided for it, and I for one am in favor of accepting that proposition. I am of the opinion that if we had assurance that this proposition would be agreed to by the conferees, that would obviate the necessity for this vote, but I have seen the time, Mr. Speaker, when the conferees did not give the House an opportunity to vote. I think, now that the House has the bill in its possession, it is eminently right for the membership here to assert their views, and to vote their judgment on this proposition. That is the question that is up to you. It is not a question of reflecting upon the conferees at all. Members of the House understand this question as well as the conferees, and why not vote on it here? If you are in favor of the Senate amendment as to carriers, vote so; if you are opposed, then the conferees will be so instructed. I think this is an orderly procedure. It is following the course laid down in the rules of the House, and it is not outside of precedent or the orderly procedure of the House. I think that when the House expresses itself upon this proposition the conferees will have no trouble. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that this motion will prevail, as it is in the interest of the expedition of the legislation of the House and of the Congress. Some gentlemen leave the inference that there is an attack, or at least a discrimination, against some postal employees. I assure the House that there is no attack or no discrimination as against one class of employees in favor of another. We simply seek to get this bill into conference to adjust the differences between the two Houses. The amendments are not numerous, nor are they very serious, and I think the House is willing and ready to trust to the conferees to settle these disputes, just as they have been settled in the past. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MANN). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to suspend the rules, disagree to the Senate amendments, ask for a conference, and, without intervening motion, appoint the conferees.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FINLEY) there were—ayes 105, noes 40.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand tellers.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-nine gentlemen present; a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman demands tellers. As many as are in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-one gentlemen rising, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. Two-thirds having voted in favor of the motion, the motion is agreed to; and without objection, the Chair will announce the following conferees. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OVERSTREET, Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

MAJ. C. DE W. WILLCOX.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate concurrent resolution No. 100, correcting the bill (S. 5989) in reference to Maj. C. De W. Willcox, which passed the Senate and the House and in which the name Willcox was misspelled, and to consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 100.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (S. 5989) authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Maj. C. De W. Wilcox decoration and diploma presented by Government of France, be, and is hereby, rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill the word "Wilcox," in line 3 of the bill, is stricken out and the word "Willcox" substituted therefor; also amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Maj. C. De W. Willcox decoration and diploma presented by Government of France," so as to correctly spell the name of the prospective recipient, inaccurately stated in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe that more care should be exercised in this respect. This is not the first instance this session when it has been necessary to correct errors that have been made in enrolled bills. We are getting to the close of the session and more care should be taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is able to state from personal knowledge that the mistake was not in the enrolling of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is immaterial where it was made. There should be more care taken to prevent mistakes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cancels his signature by order of the House.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BINGHAM. A Philadelphia (Pa.) daily newspaper, the North American, under date Thursday, February 18, has been called to my attention with large type headlines:

BINGHAM'S BLUNDER WOULD KEEP KNOX OUT OF THE CABINET—MAKES MISTAKE IN FRAMING BILL FIXING SALARY OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

Mr. BINGHAM committed no blunder, nor did the managers on the part of the House having charge of the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910. The bill was constructed correctly under the existing law and was agreed upon by the conferees of the Senate and the House, and duly reported to the House and Senate February 10, 1909. In the House the report and statement went to the Speaker's table under the rule and was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. On the 15th of February, after Mr. BINGHAM and his associates had completed their work, the eligibility of Senator KNOX to appointment as Secretary of State under President-elect Taft came up in the House for consideration and the following bill (S. 9295) in relation to the salary of the Secretary of State was passed:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1907, so far as the same relates to the annual compensation of the Secretary of State, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The passage of said enactment was intended to make Senator KNOX eligible, although he had voted upon increased annual compensation of the Secretary of State, approved February 26, 1907. On February 17 the conference report of the legislative bill upon the Speaker's table was called up for action in the House. The conferees of both Houses had agreed to many paragraphs in the bill covering existing law, and that relating to the compensation of the Secretary of State being one, as well as disagreements covering other paragraphs in the bill. The later action of the House on S. 9295, on February 15, changed existing conditions, but not the statute, and thereby made Senator KNOX eligible, should he be selected by President-elect Taft as Secretary of State, as far as Senate and House action could consummate. In no way, under existing rules of the House, could the managers on the part of the House change the agreed-upon paragraphs of the legislative bill. On the 17th of February the report was called up by the managers of the House. The Senate in the meantime (February 10) having adopted the report of the conference, had duly notified the House of that fact. In submitting the usual motion to adopt the conference report which covered the agreed-upon paragraphs in the bill, the fact was disclosed that the text of the bill to which both Houses had agreed long before February 10 contained words carrying the annual compensation of the Secretary of State at $12,000, while the bill of February 15, 1909, fixed it at $8,000. Mr. BINGHAM and his associates have no power to change the text of the bill to which both Houses had agreed. So far as they were concerned it was the law—it was the bill passed by the House and Senate.

The report was before the House for any line of action it should determine, and upon Mr. BINGHAM'S motion that the report go over until next legislative day was passed by the House. Mr. TAWNEY, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Rules, reported day before yesterday (February 17), and passed by the House, giving the conferees the power they needed. The conference report now goes to the committee of the two Houses. The question was legislatively an impossible condition, under the existing rules of the House, for the managers on the part of the House to adjust, save only by the resolution adopted yesterday.

The whole issue is summed up in the question, How can a conference report made to the House, carrying the provisions of existing law and under the rules of the House, on February 10, deal with or consider a question that has arisen since that date? The President yesterday, February 18, signed Senate bill 9295, and thereby made law.

I assume the conference committee can now proceed under a law, and the headline in large type, "Bingham's blunder would keep KNOX out of the Cabinet—Makes mistake in framing bill fixing salary of Secretary of State," can be relegated to the wastebasket of the Philadelphia Journal. [Applause.]

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Francis M. Sheppard against The United States (H. Doc. No. 1463)—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the chairman of the Printing Investigation Commisssion, transmitting report recommending legislation relating to the printing, binding, and distribution of public documents (H. Doc. No. 1464)—to the Commttee on Printing and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. OLCOTT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5434) to provide for finishing the crypt of the chapel, United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., as a permanent resting place for the body of John Paul Jones, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2199), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KNOWLAND, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5727) to establish an assay office at Los Angeles, State of California, reported the same with amendments accompanied by a report (No. 2200), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. OLCOTT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4924) for the relief of officers of the navy retired for disability incident to the service employed on active duty, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2201), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 9006) to amend an act authorizing the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia, approved February 18, 1907, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2204), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 27363) to provide for improving the navigable capacity of the Sabine and Neches rivers, and the canal connecting the Sabine and Neches rivers with the mouth of Taylors Bayou, reported the same with amendmnts, accompanied by a report (No. 2198), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 28175) to amend section 4434 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2203), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN, from the Select Committee on Pulp and Paper Investigation, appointed by the House to make investigations concerning pulp wood, pulp, and paper (H. Res. 344), submitted a report (No. 2206), which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. DAWSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 25814) authorizing the President to appoint a professor of mathematics in the navy, etc., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2202), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 27463) granting a pension to W. C. Whitthorne—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 27467) granting an increase of pension to George Williams—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 20, 1909.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States with an amendment, asks a conference with the Senate on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, Mr. PARSONS, and Mr. SHERLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26305) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OVERSTREET, Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, and Mr. MOON of Tennessee managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to concurrent resolution 100 of the Senate, authorizing the cancellation of the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice-President of the United States, and President of the Senate to the enrolled bill (S. 5989) authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Maj. C. De Witt Willcox decoration and diploma presented by Government of France, and providing for the correct enrollment of the bill.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 23468. An act to amend sections 11 and 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railway Company in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," approved February 12, 1901;

H. R. 27054. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 27139. An act to provide for the sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the northern district of Ohio at the city of Youngstown, in said district.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 8048. An act to withdraw from settlement and entry certain lands in the State of California; and

H. R. 10752. An act to complete the military record of Adolphus Erwin Wells.

MAJ. C. DE W. WILLCOX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under Senate concurrent resolution No. 100 the Chair announces the cancellation of his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 5989) authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Maj. C. De W. Willcox decoration and diploma presented by the Government of France.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution of the legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

House joint resolution 7.

Joint resolution and memorial requesting Congress, under the provision of Article V of the Constitution of the United States, to call a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited and Congress given power to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives and senate concurring:

Whereas it appears from investigation recently made by the Senate of the United States, and otherwise, that polygamy still exists in certain places in the United States notwithstanding prohibitory statutes enacted by the several States thereof; and

Whereas the practice of polygamy is generally condemned by the people of the United States, and there is a demand for the more effectual prohibition thereof, by placing the subject under federal jurisdiction and control, at the same time reserving to each State the right to make and enforce its own laws relating to marriage and divorce: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That application be, and hereby is, made to Congress, under the provision of Article V of the Constitution of the United States, for the calling of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited, and Congress shall be given power to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

Resolved, That the legislatures of all other States of the United States now in session, or when next convened, be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to join in this application by the adoption of this or any equivalent resolution.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this application to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to the several Members of said bodies representing this State therein; also to transmit copies hereof to the legislatures of all other States of the United States.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of South Dakota:

I, Samuel C. Polley, secretary of state of South Dakota, and keeper of the great seal thereof, do hereby certify that the attached instrument of writing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 7, as passed by the legislature of 1909, together with the indorsements thereon and of the whole thereof, and has been compared with the original now on file in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota. Done at the city of Pierre, this 6th day of February, 1909.

[SEAL.]

SAMUEL C. POLLEY,
Secretary of State.

I hereby certify that the within act originated in the house and was known in the house files as "Joint resolution No. 7."

JAMES W. CONE,
Chief Clerk.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, Office of Secretary of State, ss:

Filed February 5, 1909, at 3.45 p. m.

SAMUEL C. POLLEY,
Secretary of State.

A joint resolution requesting Congress, under the provision of Article V of the Constitution of the United States, to call a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited, and Congress given power to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

M. J. CHANEY,
Speaker of the House.

JAMES W. CONE,
Chief Clerk.

HOWARD C. SHOBER,
President of the Senate.

Attest:
L. M. SIMONS,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 964, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Augusta, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a national reserve in the State of Wyoming for the care and maintenance of the American elk, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. CULLOM. I present resolutions adopted at the Consular Conference of Industrial and Commercial Organizations, held January 18, 1909, at the New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., favoring the adoption of a complete system of examination, appointment, and promotion of consular officials. It is an important paper; and as it is very brief, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the Consular Conference of Industrial and Commercial Organizations, held January 18, 1909, at the New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas as America must reach out for a vastly increased foreign trade, and just as every business house requires a high efficiency and the best possible training of its own employees, so must the Nation have in its consular service men of especial business ability and training, of high commercial honor and capacity. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That this conference of the business interests of the United States, held in the city of Washington this 18th day of January, 1909, urges upon Congress the enactment, at the earliest possible date, of a law embodying the principles in Senate bill 7804 and House bill 22883, the essential provisions of which are the adoption of a complete system of examination, appointment, and promotion of consular officials and thorough Americanization of the service; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the National Business League of America of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a nonpartisan tariff commission, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the National Business League of America of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to create a national consular school, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLATT presented a joint memorial of the legislature of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Council joint memorial 4. By Mr. Hanley.

Memorial asking the immediate admission of New Mexico into the Union as a State in compliance with the recent pledges of the two great political parties of the United States.

Your memorialists, the thirty-eighth legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, representing the united sentiment of the people of this Territory, as well as the sentiment of the people of the various States of the Union, as repeatedly expressed in party platforms of the two great political parties of the country, and especially in the two last national platforms of the Republican and Democratic parties of the United States, renew their demand for the admission of this Territory into the Union as a State.

We have now arrived at a point in our history when to furthey delay this much-desired boon to us would be to discriminate against us as American citizens without cause or excuse. Our population, our wealth, our great area, and our admirable system of public schools are so well and favorably known that it is hardly necessary to refer to them again, but lest all of our Senators and Representatives may not have kept our steady progress in mind, we, at the risk of repetition, submit a few facts for their consideration:

On the 1st day of January, 1909, our population was	400, 000
Our gold production for the year was	$300, 000
Our silver production was ounces	500, 000
Our copper production was pounds	8, 000, 000
Our lead production was tons	2, 000
Our coal production was do	2, 500, 000
Our iron production was do	125, 000

There are in this Territory 120 newspapers, 70 banks, 3,000 miles of railroad, 2,500,000 acres of land under cultivation, 400,000 acres under irrigation, 2,000,000 acres capable of irrigation, 13,000,000 acres capable of dry farming, 40,000,000 acres open for private entry. Our taxable property has a valuation of more than $250,000,000. For the last sixty years we have been contributing our money to the support of the General Government without any voice as to how the money thus contributed should be expended. The system of government under which we exist is not only unrepublican, but in its character is autocratic, and opens the door for many abuses. A territorial form of government is wholly incompatible with the interest of the people. It is intolerable to the average American citizen, and is only intended to endure for the brief time required to prepare for statehood. A procrastination of this right is not justified beyond the point of the inability of the people to support and maintain a state government.

To keep a Territory like New Mexico in territorial bondage when the necessity for so doing has long since ceased to exist, is an unpardonable wrong to over 400,000 people, whose record is that of unswerving loyalty and devotion to the General Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the secretary of the Territory be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit a certified copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of National Representatives, to the members of the Committees on Territories in both Houses of Congress, and to individual Members and to the Delegate in Congress from this Territory.

CHAS. A. SPIESS,
President of the Council.
WM. F. BROGAN,
Chief Clerk of the Council.
E. A. MIERA,
Speaker House of Representatives.
E. H. SALAZAR,
Chief Clerk House of Representatives.

Approved this 10th day of February, A. D. 1909.

NATHAN JAFFA,
Acting Governor of the Territory of New Mexico.

Filed in office of secretary of New Mexico February 11, 1909, 10.15 a. m.

NATHAN JAFFA, Secretary.

I, Nathan Jaffa, secretary of the Territory of New Mexico, do hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing copy of council joint memorial No. 4, passed by the thirty-eighth session of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico and approved on February

10, A. D. 1909, with the enrolled and engrossed original now on file in this office, and declare it to be a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the Territory of New Mexico, at Santa Fe, the capital, this the 11th day of February, A. D. 1909.

[SEAL.] NATHAN JAFFA,
Secretary of New Mexico.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented petitions of Local Lodge No. 19, of Hartford, of Local Lodge No. 372, of Torrington, and of Local Lodge No. 771, of Middletown, all of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation to create a national reserve in the State of Wyoming for the care and maintenance of the American elk, which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of Local Grange No. 91, Patrons of Husbandry, of Seymour, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FRAZIER presented petitions of Local Lodge No. 601, of Clarksville, of Local Lodge No. 160, of Knoxville, of Local Lodge No. 1029, of Murfreesboro, of Local Lodge No. 192, of Jackson, and of Local Lodge No. 91, of Chattanooga, all of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in the State of Tennessee, praying for the enactment of legislation to create a national reserve in the State of Wyoming for the care and maintenance of the American elk, which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition of the Dempster Manufacturing Company, of Beatrice, Nebr., praying for the appointment of a nonpartisan tariff commission, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the North Platte Valley Water Users' Association of the State of Nebraska, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the present law appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HEYBURN presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 7087) to modify the boundary lines of the Priest River National Forest in Idaho, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CURTIS presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Kansas, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 19.

Whereas under the laws of the United States concerning internal revenue, the United States Government issues licenses to wholesale and retail dealers in intoxicating liquors in Kansas, thus authorizing such dealers, so far as the United States is concerned, to sell intoxicating liquor without regard to the right of such dealers so to do under the constitution and the laws of the State of Kansas; and

Whereas such practice on the part of the United States seriously interferes with the execution of the laws of Kansas and encourages the violation thereof: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of Kansas (the house of representatives concurring therein), That we instruct our Senators and request our Representatives in Congress to use all honorable means to secure the enactment in Congress of such laws as will prohibit the issuance of liquor licenses, as aforesaid, to anyone except in cases where the persons applying for such licenses are shown to be entitled under the laws of Kansas to engage in the business of handling and selling such intoxicating liquors: Be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of this legislature that the law governing interstate commerce should be so amended that no common carrier can transport into the State of Kansas any article or articles prohibited to be kept or sold in this State by the constitution thereof: And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house and certified by the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house, be immediately transmitted to each Senator and Representative of the State of Kansas in Congress.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate and passed that body February 5, 1909.

W. J. FITZGERALD,
President of the Senate.
Z. E. WYANT,
Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the house February 6, 1909.

J. N. DOLLEY,
Speaker of the House.
W. T. BECK,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Approved February 11, 1909.

W. R. STUBBS,
Governor.

STATE OF KANSAS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, C. E. Denton, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a correct copy of the original enrolled bill now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal this 13th day of February, 1909.

[SEAL.] C. E. DENTON,
Secretary of State,
By J. T. BOTKIN,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. WARREN. I present a petition relating to the preservation of the elk. I may state that the legislature of Wyoming has just made an appropriation of several thousand dollars for their protection. The petition is a very short one. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD, and that it be referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RAWLINS (WYO.) LODGE 609 OF THE BENEVOLENT AND PROTECTIVE ORDER OF ELKS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

RAWLINS, WYO., February 9, 1909.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was unanimously adopted at the last regular meeting of this lodge, and in pursuance of same we submit it to you for your attention and trust that you will do everything in your power to secure the passage of the desired legislation:

Whereas the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the United States of America is now endeavoring to secure from the Congress of the United States legislation which will create a reserve in the State of Wyoming for the care and maintenance of the American elk, from which our order derives its name; and

Whereas such legislation will involve an appropriation of about $30,000; and

Whereas our order is profoundly interested in securing legislation: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That this lodge of Elks does hereby earnestly request and urge upon the United States Senators from this State and the Congressman from this district to aid in every legitimate manner the passage of such legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be at once forwarded to the said United States Senators and Congressman by the exalted ruler and secretary of this lodge.

Respectfully submitted.

[SEAL.] C. R. WATSON, Exalted Ruler.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of Local Lodge, No. 964, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Augusta, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a national reserve in the State of Wyoming for the care and maintenance of the American elk, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ravenswood, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURNHAM presented petitions of Local Lodge No. 879, of Claremont; of Local Lodge No. 146, of Manchester; and of Local Lodge No. 618, of Berlin, all of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to create a national reserve in the State of Wyoming for the care and maintenance of the American elk, which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented the petition of M. W. Hale and sundry other citizens of Surry, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the board of directors of the Nashua Trust Company, of Nashua, N. H., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "postal savings banks" bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of James Tucker and sundry other citizens of the State of Washington, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LONG presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Kansas, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 19.

Whereas under the laws of the United States concerning internal revenue the United States Government issues licenses to wholesale and retail dealers in intoxicating liquors in Kansas, thus authorizing such dealers, so far as the United States is concerned, to sell intoxicating liquor without regard to the right of such dealers so to do under the constitution and the laws of the State of Kansas and;

Whereas such practice on the part of the United States seriously interferes with the execution of the laws of Kansas, and encourages the violation thereof: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of Kansas (the house of representatives concurring therein), That we instruct our Senators and request our Representatives in Congress to use all honorable means to secure the enactment in Congress of such laws as will prohibit the issuance of liquor licenses as aforesaid to anyone except in cases where the persons applying for such licenses are shown to be entitled under the laws of Kansas to engage in the business of handling and selling such intoxicating liquors: Be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of this legislature that the law governing interstate commerce should be so amended that no common carrier can transport into the State of Kansas any article or articles prohibited to be kept or sold in this State by the constitution thereof: And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house and certified by the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house, be immediately transmitted to each Senator and Representative of the State of Kansas in Congress.

W. J. FITZGERALD,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate, and passed that body February 5, 1909.

Z. E. WYANT,
Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the house February 6, 1909.

J. N. DOLLEY,
Speaker of the House.
W. T. BECK,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Approved February 11, 1909.

W. R. STUBBS,
Governor.

STATE OF KANSAS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, C. E. Denton, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a correct copy of the original enrolled bill now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal this 13th day of February, 1909.

[SEAL.]

C. E. DENTON,
Secretary of State.
By J. T. BOTKIN,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. LONG presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 412, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Pittsburg, Kans., and a petition of Local Lodge No. 595, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Lawrence, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a national reserve in the State of Wyoming for the care and maintenance of the American elk, which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mound, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Mercantile Club of Kansas City, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of public roads in the Territory of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. DEPEW presented petitions of Local Lodge No. 748, of Cortland; of Local Lodge No. 161, of Saratoga; and of Local Lodge No. 645, of Port Jervis, all of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to create a national reserve in the State of Wyoming for the care and maintenance of the American elk, which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of Local Grange No. 418, Patrons of Husbandry, of Stafford, N. Y., and a petition of Manchester Grange, No. 501, Patrons of Husbandry, of Shortsville, N. Y., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings bank" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented memorials of the New York Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends and of sundry church organizations of Brooklyn, in the State of New York, remonstrating against any further appropriation being made for the increase of the navy, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolution, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to, and the bills and joint resolution were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 9299) to regulate the price of gas in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes (Report No. 1048);

A bill (H. R. 18513) to repeal section 5 of an act entitled "An act relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia," approved June 6, 1896 (Report No. 1049);

A bill (S. 8655) to require the Washington Gaslight Company and the Georgetown Gaslight Company to maintain and record a certain pressure of gas (Report No. 1050); and

A joint resolution (S. R. 11) suspending section 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act regulating the sale of gas in the District of Columbia," and the jurisdiction of the supreme court of the District of Columbia thereunder (Report No. 1051).

Mr. GALLINGER. Yesterday I reported a bill in the nature of a substitute for the several bills which have just been indefinitely postponed. I then said that I would at an early day file a written report. I now present that report (No. 1054) and ask that 100 additional copies of the bill and report be printed for the use of the Committee on the district of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PAYNTER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8183) for the relief of the several States under the act of July 8, 1898, and acts amendatory thereto, reported it with amendment and submitted a report (No. 1052) thereon.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3237) for the relief of C. E. Moore, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1053) thereon.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 18th instant, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to cover into the general fund of the Treasury any unexpended balance that may still remain of the appropriation of $3,000,000 made by the deficiency act of March 3, 1899, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

NATIONAL CONSERVATION COMMISSION.

Mr. PLATT. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution 97, submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] on the 17th instant, to report as a substitute a joint resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 138) to provide for the printing of 25,000 copies of a portion of the report of the National Conservation Commission was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed and bound in cloth 25,000 copies of a portion of the report of the National Conservation Commission, consisting of the message of the President transmitting the report of the commission, the report proper of the commission, summaries of the four sections of the full report, a statement by the secretary of the commission, and the proceedings of the Joint Conservation Conference, of which 6,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 13,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,500 copies for distribution by the National Conservation Commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred Senate resolution No. 293, submitted yesterday by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration, as follows:

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and hereby is, authorized and directed by subcommittee or otherwise, to examine into all matters relating to the government of the District of Columbia, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recesses or sessions of the Senate, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such assistance as may be necessary, the expense to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The amendment was, in line 4, after the word "the," to strike out the words "government of the," so as to read "to examine into all matters relating to the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. ELKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report a joint resolution. It has been agreed on by the House Committee on Printing as well as by the Senate committee. I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 139) amending section 1 of an act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, approved January 12, 1895, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 1 of an act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, approved January 12, 1895, be amended by striking out the whole of said section and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Committee on Printing of the Senate and the Committee on Printing of the House of Representatives, each to consist of three Members of their respective Houses, shall constitute a Joint Committee on Printing, who shall have the powers hereinafter stated, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, before the termination of the last session of each Congress, including the Sixtieth Congress, shall appoint from the Representatives elected to the succeeding Congress a temporary Committee on Printing consisting of three members, who shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as are now imposed by law and the rules of the House of Representatives upon the regularly appointed Committee on Printing for the House of Representatives until the organization of the succeeding Congress and the appointment of a regular Committee on Printing.

"SEC. 2. In addition to the duties now imposed and the powers conferred upon the Joint Committee on Printing, the said joint committee is hereby authorized to inquire at any time into the subject of the public printing and binding for Congress and for the various executive departments and government establishments not connected with an executive department, and to report to Congress from time to time any abuses in the public printing and binding, and to recommend to Congress such remedies as in their judgment may seem proper; and the said Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to send for or subpœna persons, books, papers, or documents, and, through the chairman or acting chairman, or the chairman of any subcommittee thereof, to administer oaths, examine witnesses, books, papers, or documents respecting all matters pertaining to the public printing and binding, and to have such printing done as may be necessary to the business of the said Joint Committee on Printing; and the said joint committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may convene at any time for the transaction of public business.

"SEC. 3. The Joint Committee on Printing shall elect a secretary, who shall be the executive officer of the said joint committee and who shall be authorized to carry into effect the orders and regulations of the said joint committee. The salary of the secretary of the said Joint Committee on Printing shall be at the rate of $4,000 per annum, and shall be appropriated for and paid by the Secretary of the Senate."

Mr HALE. Let the joint resolution go over. I discover from the reading that it ought to be thoroughly examined.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

ROYAL L. SWEANY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24373) to reimburse Royal L. Sweany, late deputy collector of internal revenue at Tacoma, Wash., to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. PILES. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Royal L. Sweany, late a deputy collector of internal revenue at Tacoma, State of Washington, $107, as a reimbursement for that amount of money paid by him to the Government to cover the value of certain documentary revenue stamps forwarded in the mails by him as deputy collector on or about June 30, 1902, from Tacoma, Wash., to the office of the collector for the district of Oregon, at Portland, Oreg., and lost in transit.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALASKA-YUKON EXPOSITION.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 9154) to amend an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, approved May 27, 1908, and I submit a report (No. 1047) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] to the bill.

Mr. PILES. I ask for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Utah.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1908, by adding at the end thereof the following:

Provided further, That the board of managers herein above described may, in its discretion, cause any exhibit or part thereof to be exhibited in any building or buildings, or other place on said exposition grounds, provided or furnished by any State or other organization.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF ARKANSAS RIVER.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred concurrent resolution 101, submitted on the 18th instant by Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of that part of the Arkansas River between Little Rock and Dardanelle with a view of ascertaining if said part of said river is susceptible of being made available for purposes of navigation during the entire year, and if found capable of being made so available, then to report an estimate of the cost of improving such part of said river by the construction of locks and dams or otherwise, as well as to report an estimate of the probable tonnage that will seek transportation thereon in the event the same were so improved.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BANKHEAD introduced a bill (S. 9426) for the relief of John C. Stoutenborough, of Richmond, Ala., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 9435) granting an increase of pension to Maryetta Thurber, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 9436) granting an increase of pension to Charles Hatfield, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMOOT introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 9437) granting an increase of pension to Hans Wickstrum; and

A bill (S. 9438) granting a pension to Luella A. Taylor.

He also introduced a bill (S. 9439) for the relief of Lemuel H. Redd, which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SIMMONS submitted an amendment providing for a survey of Cape Lookout, North Carolina, and also of Cape Hatteras, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment providing for an examination and survey for the location of a canal connecting Lake Superior and the Mississippi River, by way of the St. Croix River, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $150,000 for dredging the inner basin of Duluth Harbor, Minnesota, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DEPEW submitted an amendment providing for the examination and survey of Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels, New York Harbor, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $550,000 for the purchase by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of certain land in the District for park purposes, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REVISION OF PENAL LAWS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment proposed by the House, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed Mr. HEYBURN, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. MCLAURIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26305) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed Mr. PENROSE, Mr. DOLLIVER, and Mr. CLAY conferees on the part of the Senate.

ALASKA CENTRAL RAILWAY.

The bill (H. R. 27068) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Central Railway, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. NELSON. The Senate has reported a bill (S. 8821) similar to that, and I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill on the calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to the matter.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that the House bill may be taken up and disposed of at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the bill (S. 8821) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Central Railway, and for other purposes, for which the House bill has just been substituted, will be indefinitely postponed. The Senator from Illinois asks for the present consideration of the House bill. It will be read.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for filing the map of definite location of the Alaska Central Railway, as required by the provisions of chapter 299 of the Laws of the United States, entitled "An act extending homestead laws and providing for the right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1898, be, and the same is hereby, extended for three years from the date of the passage of this act, and that the time for completion of said Alaska Central Railway be, and the same is hereby, extended for three years from the expiration of the period provided for in the act entitled "An act to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Central Railway, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to affect any lawfully accrued rights.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. It is a bill to extend the time for the completion of a railroad in Alaska?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. KEAN. I object. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 23468. An act to amend sections 11 and 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railway Company in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," approved February 12, 1901, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

H. R. 27054. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. R. 27139. An act to provide for the sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the northern district of Ohio at the city of Youngstown, in said district, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 26916, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 26916) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall be first considered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "President," on page 2, after line 13, to insert:

That whenever so directed by the President the Secretary of the Interior shall cause allotments in severalty to be made to the Indians of any reservation in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians of various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of February 28, 1891 (27 Stat. L., 794), and as amended by the act of May 8, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 182), in such areas as he may consider equitable and just, not, however, exceeding 160 acres of agricultural land to any one Indian, and all Indians of the reservation to be allotted, living at the date of the President's order, shall be entitled to receive an allotment, and if any Indian thereafter die prior to being allotted the lands he would have received if living, such lands shall be allotted in his name and descend to his heirs in accordance with the laws of descent and distribution of the State in which the land is situate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the language in line 9, on page 3. Beginning with line 7, it reads:

And if any Indian thereafter die prior to being allotted the lands he would have received if living, such lands shall be allotted in his name and descend to his heirs in accordance with the laws of descent and distribution of the State in which the land is situate.

It seems to me that the words "in his name," in line 9, should be stricken out. We can not allot land to a man who is dead. It would then read "such lands shall be allotted and descend to his heirs."

Mr. McCUMBER. Perhaps the Senator should insert the word "to," so as to read "shall be allotted to and descend to his heirs."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 9, strike out the words "in his name" and insert "to," so as to read "shall be allotted to and descend to his heirs," and so forth.

Mr. CLAPP. The amendment to the amendment is accepted by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 11, to insert:

SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

That when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, it is necessary for any railway company owning or operating a line of railway in any Indian reservation to acquire lands in such Indian reservation for reservoirs, material, or ballast pits for the construction, repair, and maintenance of its railway, or for the purpose of planting and growing thereon trees to protect its line of railway, the said Secretary be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant such lands to any such railway company which shall comply with the provisions of this act and such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the said Secretary thereunder.

That when any railway company desiring to secure the benefits of this act shall file with the Secretary of the Interior an application describing the lands which it desires to purchase, the said Secretary shall ascertain and fix the value of said land, and upon the payment of the price so fixed the said Secretary shall cause such lands to be conveyed to the railway company applying therefor upon such terms and conditions as he may deem proper: Provided, That no lands shall be acquired under the provisions of this act in greater quantities than 40 acres for any one reservoir, and 160 acres for any material or ballast pit, to the extent of not more than one reservoir and one material or gravel pit in any one section of 10 miles of any such railway in any Indian reservation: And provided further, That the lands acquired for tree planting shall be taken only at such places along the line of the railway company applying therefor as in the judgment of the said Secretary may be necessary, and shall be taken in strips adjoining and parallel with the right of way of the railway company taking the same, and shall not exceed 150 feet in width.

That all moneys paid for such lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the tribe or tribes, and the moneys received by said Secretary as damages sustained by individual members of the Indian tribe, which damages shall be ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior and paid by the railway company taking such lands, shall be paid by said Secretary to the Indian or Indians sustaining such damages.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to suggest a point of order against this amendment, and I also desire the privilege of suggesting it against the preceding amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. HEYBURN. That it is general legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. Before the Senator presses that point, I should like to submit this consideration to the Senate: We have in the bill a measure passed by the House covering this identical subject with reference to the Great Northern Railway in Montana. They are obliged to come to Congress whenever they need anything of this kind and secure a special act giving the Secretary of the Interior the authority to grant gravel pits and reservoir sites.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask what portion of the amendment the Senator is referring to now.

Mr. CLAPP. I am talking now of the amendment relating to ballast pits and reservoirs.

Mr. HEYBURN. In what line?

Mr. CLAPP. It goes from line 13, on page 3, to and including line 2, on page 5.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will withhold the point of order, with the understanding that these amendments will not be hurriedly passed. The first amendment was passed so hurriedly that I did not have an opportunity even to interpose a point of order against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho withholds his point of order, and if there be no objection the amendment to which it was directed will be passed over for the present.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am only withholding it upon the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota that he would explain the purpose of the amendment. I understood him to say that he desires to explain the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. The purpose of the amendment is simply this: These railroads run through Indian reservations. There is a general law which allows the Secretary of the Interior, upon the filing of a plat and complying with the conditions prescribed by him, to grant a right of way through different reservations. There is no law at present under which they can acquire gravel pits or sites for reservoirs. At every session more or less special bills have to be passed for that purpose. I had one passed through the Senate this winter, and it comes back here as a provision of this bill, put in by the House. Instead of requiring, in such cases, that they shall come here and get special legislation, it occurred to the department and the committee that it would be a wiser way to make a general provision.

I recognize the fact, as I said yesterday, that we have reported some administrative legislation in this bill. Senators realize the difficulty of getting legislation, especially at this period in the session. I would be perfectly willing to have the merits of these matters considered, and if they are not properly framed I would cheerfully join in perfecting the framing of them.

I do hope the Senator will withhold his point of order against this amendment and against some others which we have put in the bill and which I will explain as we reach them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am loath to raise the point of order against a portion of this proposed legislation, but it is a complete departure from anything we have heretofore known in connection with our dealing with the Indian lands, which under the Constitution of the United States are made the subject of treaty arrangement. It is rather shocking to turn over to the Secretary of the Interior a power which originally had to be exercised under the treaty-making power of the Constitution, and, as a matter of fact, which is now turned over to a clerk in the department.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator, I think, recalls the fact that there is similar legislation on the statute books relating to the right of way.

Mr. HEYBURN. Unfortunately, yes.

Mr. CLAPP. I would hardly concede that it is unfortunate. Railroads have to be built in the western country. They have of necessity to go through reservations. It benefits and enhances the value of the land of the allottees and the owners of those reservations. I would hardly agree that it is unfortunate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have had some experience on this question, commencing some twenty-odd years ago, and with a supplement last year. Under the old law it was necessary to make a treaty with the Indians and determine the damages and the conditions under which the land might be taken. It was not inconvenient. It was a law that had worked satisfactorily for nearly a century.

Take the right of way for the Minneapolis and St. Paul road through the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation. Those Indians did not know until months afterwards that their rights had even been in question or under consideration. They came here to me in Washington at the last session and were utterly astonished when they found that the right of the railroad to go through that reservation from one end to the other had absolutely been determined, that the amount of compensation to the Indians had been fixed, and that it had been paid, as they understood, without their ever knowing that the matter was even being considered.

In 1878 or 1879 I conducted the making of the treaty with those Indians for the right of way for the O. R. and N. Railroad. The O. R. and N. went through that same reservation. We were in council for days. Those Indians understood at that time, as they do now, their rights under the law, and that the Government will deal with them in the nature of a treaty. It is not the same character of treaty making that we have with foreign nations, but it is one adapted to the conditions and circumstances. The Indians at that time received—I would not undertake to say without having the figures before me how much—several times as much for a shorter right of way to the O. R. and N. road than they have received from the independent action of the Indian agent representing the Interior Department for a right of way through the long way of their reservation. The sum that they have been awarded is a mere bagatelle, it does not amount to anything to them; and that was done under the law to which the Senator refers.

I am not at all in sympathy with making a short cut in dealing with the Indians for their lands, because while it seems like a very innocent proposition upon its face that you are going to have a right of way for a railroad, yet you find that in this and in the other measures they may take 120 acres for a reservoir site.

Mr. CLAPP. No; 40 acres for reservoirs and 160 acres for ballast pits.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will look at it:

Provided, That no lands shall be acquired under the provisions of this act in greater quantities than 40 acres for any one reservoir, and 160 acres for any material or ballast pit, to the extent of not more than one reservoir and one material or gravel pit in any one section of 10 miles of any such railway in any Indian reservation.

Under the old act we took 10 acres for a depot site and the right of way of a given width for the railroad. Now we are bringing in reservoir sites upon the Indian reservations. For whom are the reservoir sites?

Mr. CLAPP. The reservoir sites are for the railroad companies, for the purpose of accumulating, storing, and using water.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. No; go ahead.

Mr. DIXON. I wanted to express a hope that the Senator from Idaho will not insist on the point of order. At every session we are loaded down with dozens of individual bills to give railroad companies the right to purchase gravel pits and settling tanks. I think this amendment came up here, and several other bills of the kind. To save Congress every year from taking up its time with dozens of these little individual bills it is merely proposed to give the Secretary the right to negotiate, without going through the formula of passing special bills through Congress.

In this case the bill which I think was the cause of the introduction of this general provision was a bill concerning the railroad through the Fort Peck Reservation of northern Montana. The Great Northern Railroad runs for 200 miles through that reservation. They have got to have gravel to ballast the road. In certain places it goes through an alkali country. They must have settling tanks in order to get water for their engines.

I do not think this provision is subject to the objection that it gives the Secretary of the Interior the right to grant rights of way indiscriminately. It is merely for these gravel pits and settling tanks that the railroads must have. I assure the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] that the experience in the past has been that the Indians get ten times as much for these special 40-acre tracts from the railroad companies as they do under the general act opening land for settlement. I know the Great Northern Railway Company paid these same Indians, I think, as high as $30 an acre for gravel pits.

There is no question, so far as the Indian is concerned, that he will get more under this arrangement, and there is no question but what it will be a great convenience to these great transportation companies and save much time here in the passage of a dozen bills at every session of Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am decidedly in favor of granting rights of way through the Indian reservations for railroads and of the opening up and developing of these areas, and I am not to be understood as opposing that principle or any legislation which involves it. It is only the character of this particular legislation that I am directing my remarks to.

Mr. DIXON. But the Senator——

Mr. HEYBURN. I am proceeding to make plain my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. DIXON. I want to suggest to the Senator from Idaho that when we pass a special bill concerning matters of this kind, the price of the land must be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. Under every special bill we pass the Secretary of the Interior must take into consideration the price to be paid; and this is only proposing to confer generally what we do here every session of Congress half a dozen times at least.

Mr. HEYBURN. I see no sufficient reason for not pursuing the old method of obtaining rights of way; that is to say, take the owners of the land into your council and agree with them, and not have it done without their even knowing that it is being considered. That is what I object to.

Mr. DIXON. But would the Senator from Idaho urge in a case where a railroad company wanted a gravel pit to ballast the track, or a settling tank to settle their water for use in the engines, that we should convene a tribe of Indians of twenty-five hundred people to negotiate for a 40-acre tract?

Mr. HEYBURN. A hundred-and-sixty-acre tract is named in this bill.

Mr. DIXON. It would be impossible.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I can not concede that the Senator is correct in that. It is not impossible. The railroad company know just as well when they are laying out their road what they will need as they will know twenty years afterwards. They know that they will need 10 acres for depot purposes and that they will need certain ground for gravel pits just as well when they are making up the plans of their road as they will know it at any time afterwards. Let the law stand, so that whenever a railroad company wants to pass through an Indian reservation either the Indians will be in consultation with the Government or participate in the plan or treaty, if you may call it such, so that they will be present and know what is being done, and not have them coming to us after their rights have been fixed at some trifling and insignificant figure and saying, "Well, upon what terms is this railroad company building through our lands?"

You must remember that the Indians of to-day are not the Indians of fifty years ago. Our Indians are educated, intelligent, and property-owning Indians. They plow with sulky plows; they have pianos in their homes; they ride in carriages; they speak the English language; and there is no reason on earth why those Indians should not be taken into the council that is to determine their property rights. The old idea that an Indian is an animal roaming up and down the land with a blanket on him must be given up.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAPP. My only desire is to put this in general form, so that we shall not have to deal with special acts, and I suggest that this amendment might be amended so that the Secretary shall be authorized to negotiate. Congress, acting on the Lone Wolf decision, has proceeded for some years to dispose of Indian lands without treaty. I have no objection at all to the Senator's position. If this provision is not correct, then it should be amended.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing that amendment should cure these things of which I complain. I have had call on me during the last two weeks a large number of Indians from different sections of the United States. Only a few days since I received the card of an Indian, and went into the Marble Room and met him. He is an Indian who keeps as good an automobile as anybody in this Senate Chamber, who speaks as good English as anybody here, and who is, in taxable property and wealth, almost the equal of the average Senator in this body. The idea of taking his property through the agency of department clerks is ridiculous. We must stop and consider this change.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I believe, Mr. President, this amendment is a very important one and will avoid very much detailed legislation. I suggest, however, in view of the observations of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], that the amendment be passed over for the time being, and that other amendments may be proceeded with.

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well. We will see if we can make the amendment satisfactory.

Mr. CLAPP. That is entirely agreeable to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 5, after line 2, to insert:

That, to facilitate cooperative work between the Office of Indian Affairs and other bureaus and offices of the Government, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon requisition by the Secretary of the Interior, to advance to disbursing officers of such other bureaus and offices, from any funds in the Treasury which are at the time available and applicable, such sums as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior may be necessary to meet the current and contingent expenses of the work: Provided, That the disbursing officers to whom the funds are advanced shall be responsible therefor under their bonds, and account therefor in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other moneys usually received by them for disbursement. Said accounts shall be examined by the administrative bureau or office under which the disbursing officer is employed, and settled by the auditor for the department of which said bureau or office is a part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 19, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, under the direction of the President, to allot any Indian on the public domain who has not heretofore received an allotment, in such areas as he may deem proper, not to exceed, however, 80 acres of agricultural or 160 acres of grazing land to any one Indian, such allotment to be made and patent therefor issued in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., 388). When any such lands are irrigable the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to set apart from the public domain for each allotment so made not to exceed 5 acres, and each allotment shall be reduced 5 acres in area, which said 5 acres may be leased or sold on such terms as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior will be subserve the purpose, and the proceeds thereof may be used in procuring water, constructing ditches and dikes, or otherwise preparing allotments of the Indians for irrigation; and when any lands subject to irrigation have been or may be hereafter allotted on any Indian reservation the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, with the consent of the Indian allottee, to set aside from each allotment not to exceed 10 acres, which lands so set aside may be leased or sold in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, and the proceeds used in procuring water, constructing ditches and dikes, or otherwise preparing the allotment of the Indian for irrigation.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move to amend the amendment on page 5, line 23, by striking out the word "such," and then striking out all after the word "areas" down to and including the word "or," in line 24.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 23, before the word "areas," it is proposed to strike out the word "such," and after the word "areas" to strike out "as he may deem proper, not to exceed, however, 80 acres of agricultural or."

Mr. CLAPP. I have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. In the amendment of the committee I move to strike out the word "grazing," in line 1, page 6.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 1, before the word "land," it is proposed to strike out the word "grazing."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move to further amend the amendment of the committee by striking out on page 6 all after the word "eighty-eight" down to the end of the clause.

Mr. CLAPP. In what line?

Mr. HEYBURN. Commencing in line 5, I move to strike out all of the clause after that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, after the word "eighty-eight," in the parentheses in line 5, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the committee amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will pardon me, this is an amendment asked for by the department, and as to which they have made a statement, found on page 10 of the committee's report on this bill. So far as I am concerned, while I should prefer to have the amendment stand, I am not going to contest it here. I know the point can be properly made against it.

Mr. HEYBURN. We struck out the same thing last year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment moved by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Commissioner," on page 7, line 3, before the word "lands," to strike out "irrigated" and insert "irrigable;" in line 6, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" in line 7, after the word "dollars," to strike out "of which $25,000 shall" and insert "to;" and in line 8, after the word "available," to insert "and to remain available until expended," so as to read:

For construction of ditches and reservoirs, purchase and use of irrigating tools and appliances, and water rights, including lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, and reservoirs, for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and subject to his control, $500,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 14, to insert:

That all patents issued for allotments to the Indians on the Stockbridge and Munsee Reservation, Wis., shall expressly declare that no sale of the lands described therein shall be made under any decree of any court or otherwise for or on account of any claim, judgment, execution, order, or for taxes, or voluntarily by the patentee or his or her heirs, unless such sale is approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and any such sale or conveyance made without such approval shall be absolutely void.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that that amendment be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 8, line 5, after the word "Interior," to strike out "to take action;" and in line 6, after the word "traffic," to strike out "of" and insert "in," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to suppress the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 9, after the word "purposes," to insert "not herein provided for," so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for educational purposes not herein provided for, $1,425,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 15, before the word "thousand," to insert "and twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $1,725,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 14, after the word "available," to insert:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin.

So as to make the clause read:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to make investigations on Indian reservations and take measures for the purpose of preserving living and growing timber, and removing dead timber, standing or fallen; to advise the Indians as to the proper care of forests, and to conduct such timber operations and sales of timber as may be deemed advisable and provided for by law, $100,000, of which $10,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 15, to insert:

That hereafter the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may designate an employee of the Indian Office to sign letters and other papers of that office requiring the signature of the commissioner or assistant commissioner, and all signatures of such employee while acting under such designation shall have the same force and effect as if made by said commissioner or assistant commissioner.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have that amendment passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks that the amendment just read be passed over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will withdraw that request if the Senator in charge of the bill is ready to consider the amendment. I object to it. It is a most extraordinary proposition. There is no such legislation made applicable to any other department of the Government, so far as I know.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, for years there has been a clerk authorized to sign the President's name to land patents.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is a different proposition.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEYBURN. In a moment. The language here is very broad, and I know of no similar case. The amendment provides—

That hereafter the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may designate an employee of the Indian Office to sign letters and other papers.

Could he sign a treaty? The provision is too broad, and I object to it.

Mr. CLAPP. Strike out the words "and other papers," if the Senator desires.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no objection to the amendment, if you cut out the words "and other papers."

Mr. CLAPP. I move that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee, on page 10, line 18, after the word "letters," by striking out "and other papers," so as to make the clause read:

That hereafter the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may designate an employee of the Indian Office to sign letters of that office requiring the signature of the commissioner or assistant commissioner, and all signatures of such employee while acting under such designation shall have the same force and effect as if made by said commissioner or assistant commissioner.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 12, line 4, after the word "successor," to insert "and he shall report annually to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs all material on hand and not required for his use," so as to read:

That section 10 of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L., 451), be amended so as to read as follows: "Each Indian agent shall keep a book of itemized expenditures of every kind, with a record of all contracts, together with the receipts of moneys from all sources, and the books thus kept shall always be open to inspection; and the said books shall remain in the office at the respective reservations, not to be removed from said reservation by said agent, but shall be safely kept and handed over to his successor, and he shall report annually to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs all material on hand and not required for his use."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Police," on page 14, line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "not exceeding fifty;" and on page 15, line 4, before the word "thousand," to insert "and ten," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of officers at not exceeding $50 per month each, and privates at $20 per month each, of Indian police, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations and within the Territory of Alaska, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of equipments, and for the purchase of rations for policemen at nonration agencies, $210,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingencies," on page 16, line 19, before the word "from," to strike out "going," so as to read:

For contingencies of the Indian Service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; also traveling and incidental expenses of special agents, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses now authorized by law, and expenses of going to and from the seat of government, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 17, to insert:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay from the appropriation for contingencies of the Indian Service, 1909, for expenses incurred under the orders of the Secretary of the Interior, to Joseph W. Howell $135 and to Joseph R. Webster $210.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Arizona," on page 17, line 13, after the word "dollars," to strike out ": Provided, That," and insert "and the commissioner is authorized to use;" and in line 15, before the word "is," to insert "which," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Apache and other Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in Arizona and New Mexico, $300,000; and the commissioner is authorized to use the unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1909, which is hereby appropriated and made available for 1910.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Truxton Canyon School," at the top of page 19, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase lands and water rights for the use of Navajo Indians who have lost title to their homes on the public domain in Arizona the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty," and insert "fifty-nine," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $104,359.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Colorado," on page 20, after line 13, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of and convey the real estate, including buildings and fixtures, of the Grand Junction and Fort Lewis schools, Colorado, to the State of Colorado upon condition that the properties shall continue to be maintained and operated as educational institutions and that children of Indian parents shall have the same privileges of education as white children, but with tuition free: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is authorized and directed to dispose of by sale or transfer to other schools such property as is not covered by the transfer of the realty, buildings, and fixtures.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 21, to insert:

FORT LEWIS SCHOOL.

There is hereby granted to the State of Colorado, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter named, the following described property, known as the "Fort Lewis School," including the lands, buildings, and fixtures pertaining to said school: Provided, That said lands and buildings shall be held and maintained by the State of Colorado as an institution of learning, and that Indian pupils shall at all times be admitted to such school free of charge for tuition and on terms of equality with white pupils: Provided further, That this grant shall be effective at any time before July 1, 1910, if before that date the governor of the State of Colorado files an acceptance thereof with the Secretary of the Interior accepting for said State said property, upon the terms and conditions herein prescribed.

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Fort Lewis, Colo., $35,000, and for pay of superintendent, $1,600.
Repairs to and extension of sidewalks, $1,000.
Renewal of driveways, $800.
Coping along driveways, $1,000.
General repairs to buildings and water system, $5,000.
In all, $44,400.

Provided, That if said school is disposed of as above authorized at any time during the fiscal year of 1910 the pro rata share only of the appropriation for the maintenance of said school for the portion of the year which the school is maintained by the United States shall be available.

Mr. CLAPP. Perhaps the language of that amendment may be improved by striking out the words "the following described," in lines 3 and 4, page 21. The amendment is suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the committee, on page 21, line 3, after the word "named," it is proposed to strike out "following described," so as to read:

FORT LEWIS SCHOOL.

There is hereby granted to the State of Colorado, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter named, the property known as the Fort Lewis School, including the lands, buildings, and fixtures pertaining to said school, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 22, after line 6, to insert:

GRAND JUNCTION SCHOOL.

There is hereby granted to the State of Colorado, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter named, the following-described property, known as the Grand Junction School, including the lands, buildings, and fixtures pertaining to said school: Provided, That said lands and buildings shall be held and maintained by the State of Colorado as an institution of learning, and that Indian pupils shall at all times be admitted to such school free of charge for tuition and on terms of equality with white pupils: Provided further, That this grant shall be effective at any time before July 1, 1910, if before that date the governor of the State of Colorado files an acceptance thereof with the Secretary of the Interior accepting for said State said property, upon the terms and conditions herein prescribed.

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., $33,400, and pay of superintendent, $1,600.
Repairs to and extension of sidewalks, $800.
Renewal of driveways, $600.
Coping along driveways, $1,000.
General repairs to buildings and water system, $5,000.
In all, $42,400.

Provided, That if said school is disposed of as above authorized at any time during the fiscal year of 1910 the pro rata share only of the appropriation for the maintenance of said school for the portion of the year which the school is maintained by the United States shall be available.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The same amendment should be made in this provision that was made in the prior provision. The words "following described," in lines 9 and 10, on page 22, should be stricken out.

Mr. CLAPP. That is right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest that the clerk may do that in all cases.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that permission be granted to correct it in all instances.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 13, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend from the funds of the Southern Ute Indians in the Treasury of the United States sufficient moneys to purchase a perpetual water right for the purpose of irrigating not less than 10,000 acres of land in the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 19, to insert:

That to carry into effect the agreement between the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado and the United States, ratified by the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, being "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same (21 Stats., p. 199), jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, on the claims and rights of said Indians under said agreement, including the value of all lands ceded by the said Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement, and the money due therefor; and the court shall set off against any sum found due said Indians the amount paid to them under the fifth section of said act of June 15, 1880, being $50,000 per annum up to the date of rendition of final judgment in this cause, also any other sum or sums that shall be found to be properly chargeable under the terms of said agreement; and the credit of $1,250,000 set apart in the Treasury by the terms of said agreement, upon which said annuity has been estimated, shall, upon the rendition of final judgment in this cause, cease to exist as a trust fund, and from and after the date of said judgment no annuity shall be estimated or paid therefrom; and the action herein authorized shall be consolidated with cause congressional No. 11248, now pending in said court, for the purpose of using at the trial thereof all evidence which has been adduced in said pending cause, and shall be commenced by petition under the title of said pending cause and shall be conducted by the attorney of record now appearing therein, or by any attorney by him specifically authorized to appear; and the Attorney-General shall continue to appear and represent the United States; and in rendering judgment herein the court shall fix upon a quantum meruit and set apart just and reasonable compensation to the attorneys on behalf of plaintiffs who have rendered actual services in prosecuting said claim before the committees of Congress and in conducting the said cause before the courts in the name of the attorney of record in said pending cause, or any attorney by him specifically authorized, and said compensation shall be paid to such attorney by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury arising from the sale of said ceded lands or from the proceeds of said judgment, or out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum is hereby appropriated, to be reimbursed to the United States from the funds of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, and the balance of said judgment shall be held in the Treasury for the benefit of said Indians as a trust fund, and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in accordance with the terms of said act of June 15, 1880; and the said cause shall be advanced in hearing by the Court of Claims, and by the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed: Provided, That after final judgment rendered in this cause, as herein authorized, the court may from time to time further consider and render judgments for the value of any lands whereof disposition shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1909.

Mr. CURTIS. In order to save time, I ask that the amendment be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Kansas.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 26, after line 11, to insert:

FLORIDA.

For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the needs and conditions of the Seminole Indians in Florida, especially with reference to the establishment of a school and reservation for said Indians, the sum of $5,000, and said Secretary is directed to report the result of such investigation at the next session of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 8, after the word "and," to strike out "four" and insert "twenty-four," and in line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert "reimbursable," so as to make the clause read:

For carrying out the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. L., 1024), authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire lands and other property necessary in constructing a reservoir for storing water for the purpose of irrigating lands on the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho and those ceded by the Indians of said reservation, and for construction of the system determined on, $100,000, reimbursable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 14, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to investigate and settle the equitable claims of Neils Anderson, William Winchell, and others whose lands or improvements, held under possessory claims, have been or will be damaged by reason of the construction of said reservoir, for which purpose the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 18, to insert:

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the treaty with the Pottawatomie Indians, proclaimed April 19, 1862, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon application therefor, to sell the lands in Kansas allotted to those Indians styling themselves the Wah-quabas-kuk band, and purchase satisfactory lands for them in Wisconsin or elsewhere and locate them thereon. All expenses to be paid out of the receipts from the Kansas lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Morris School," on page 32, after line 21, to strike out:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to dispose of and convey the real estate, including buildings and fixtures, of the Morris School of Minnesota, in the State of Minnesota, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, including the necessary land therefor: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is authorized and directed to dispose of by sale or transfer to other schools such property as is not covered by the transfer of the realty, buildings, and fixtures.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That there is hereby granted to the State of Minnesota, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter named, the following-described property, known as "the Indian school" at Morris, Minn., and more particularly described as follows, to wit:

All those several tracts and parcels of land situate, lying, and being in the county of Stevens and State of Minnesota, and described as follows: The northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 36, township 125 north, range 42 west, containing 80 acres.

And the south half of the south half of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 36, township 125, range 42, containing 2½ acres.

And lot No. 3 of county subdivision of unplatted part of east half of section 35, township 125, range 42, containing 8.75 acres, described as follows: Commencing at a point on the north side of the county road leading from Morris to Cyrus, Minn., 688 feet from the southeast corner of section 35, township 125 north, range 42 west; thence north 887 feet, west 440 feet, south 646 feet; thence southeast 391 feet to said county road; thence northeast along said county road 232 feet to the place of beginning.

Aggregating 290 acres, with buildings, improvements, and other appurtenances thereon.

Provided, That said lands and buildings shall be held and maintained by the State of Minnesota as an agricultural school, and that Indian pupils shall at all times be admitted to such school free of charge for tuition and on terms of equality with white pupils.

Provided further, That this grant shall be effective on July 1, 1910, if before that date the State of Minnesota, by its legislature, shall, by a bill or joint resolution, accept the terms of this grant, and in said event the said State of Minnesota shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a certified copy of said act or joint resolution, whereupon this grant shall take effect without further act; and the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior upon a certified copy of said act or joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Minnesota, showing the date of the filing thereof with the said Secretary of the Interior, and showing said date to be prior to July 1, 1910, shall be competent proof in all courts of record of the filing of such certified copy of such act or joint resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pipestone School," on page 38, after line 7, to insert:

For removing obstructions at the falls and improving the highway to the cemetery, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-one" and insert "forty-five," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $45,675.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 11, to insert:

For the erection of a schoolhouse and improvements for the Bois Fort Indians on the Nett Lake Indian Reservation, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 17, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to advance to the executive committee of the White Earth band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the annual celebration of said band to be held June 14, 1909, out of the funds belonging to said band.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 9, to insert:

That any moneys repaid by Indians to the United States under the provisions of the section of the Indian appropriation act approved April 30, 1908, appropriating the sum of $25,000 for the purchase of implements and other equipment for the Indians of the Fort Belknap Reservation in the State of Montana (35 Stat. L., p. 83), shall be available for reexpenditure for the same purposes and under the same conditions until June 1, 1915.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert "reimbursable," so as to make the clause read:

For completion and extension of the Milk River Irrigation System on the Fort Belknap Reservation in Montana, $25,000, reimbursable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert "$100,000 thereof to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation in Montana and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under the act of April 23, 1904, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $250,000, $100,000 thereof to be immediately available, the cost of said entire work to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale of the lands within said reservation.

Mr. DIXON. I suggest to the chairman of the committee, that, after the word "lands," in line 24, on page 41, the words "and timber" be inserted.

Mr. CLAPP. That is agreeable.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 42, to insert:

That the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 302), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," as amended by the act of June 21, 1906, and the act of May 29, 1908, be amended by adding thereto the following sections:

"SEC. 21. That the lands alloted, those retained or reserved, and the surplus lands sold or otherwise disposed of shall be subject for a period of twenty-five years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country, and that the Indian allottees, whether under the care of an Indian agent or not, shall for a like period be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the sale or other disposition of intoxicants to Indians.

"SEC. 22. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to reserve from location, entry, sale, or other appropriation all lands within said Flathead Indian Reservation chiefly valuable for power sites or reservoir sites, and he shall report to Congress such reservations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 24, to insert:

That section 11 of the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 302), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. That all merchantable timber on said lands returned and classified by said commission as timber lands shall be sold and disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior, for cash, under sealed bids or at public auction, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That after the sale and removal of the timber such of said lands as are valuable for agricultural purposes shall be sold and disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 21, to strike out:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be appraised the south half of southwest quarter of northeast quarter and south half of south half of northwest quarter; the north half of southwest quarter of section 28; the south half of south half of northeast quarter and the north half of north half of southeast quarter of section 29, in township 27 north, range 44 east, Montana meridian, in the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, for the purpose of granting the same to the Great Northern Railway Company for a ballast pit for ballasting its railway, and upon appraising said land the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to convey the same to said railway upon such terms as he may deem advisable. If the sale of said land shall interfere with any improvements of an individual Indian, provision shall be made for the payment of damages, and the amount of damages awarded shall be paid to such Indian, subject to the control of the Secretary of the Interior as to the funds of incompetent Indians, and if the sale of said land interferes with any allotment, such allottee shall be entitled to reallotment.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all the surplus lands after allotment," be, and it is hereby, amended by adding thereto section 17, as follows:

"SEC. 17. That the lands allotted, those retained or reserved, and the surplus lands sold or otherwise disposed of shall be subject for a period of twenty-five years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country, and that the Indian allottees, whether under the care of an Indian agent or not, shall for a like period be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the sale or other disposition of intoxicants to Indians."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes (treaty)," on page 46, after line 5, to insert:

That any of the lands withdrawn under the reclamation act in pursuance of the provisions of section 5 of the act of Congress approved April 27, 1904, entitled "An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation, in Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect," which are not disposed of within five years from the date of the passage of said act shall remain subject to disposal under the provisions of the reclamation act until otherwise directed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 15, to insert:

For the employment of "line riders" along the southern and eastern boundary of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, $1,500 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 22, to strike out:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to dispose of and convey the real estate, including buildings and fixtures, of the Genoa School, of Nebraska, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, including the necessary land therefor: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is authorized and directed to dispose of, by sale or transfer to other school, such property as is not covered by the transfer of the realty, buildings, and fixtures.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 12, to insert:

To replace brick barn destroyed by fire, $7,000.
For residence of superintendent, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-three" and insert "sixty-six," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $66,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 16, to strike out:

Provided, That if said school is disposed of as above authorized at any time during the fiscal year of 1910 that the pro rata share only of the appropriation for the maintenance of said school for the portion of the year which the school is maintained by the United States shall be available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 22, after the word "cents," to insert "and such sum shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum until withdrawn from the Treasury for payment to the Indians as hereinafter provided," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Winnebago tribe of Indians the sum of $883,249.58, and such sum shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum until withdrawn from the Treasury for payment to the Indians as hereinafter provided, being the balance of the unappropriated amounts due said tribe under the fourth article of the treaty of November 1, 1837.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 49, after the word "fifty-five," in line 9, I desire, on behalf of the committee, to strike out down to and including line 14, and to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, line 9, after the word "fifty-five," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause a new enrollment to be made of all Winnebago Indians entitled to share in said fund other than those enrolled at the Winnebago Agency in Nebraska, and until the completion of such enrollment no part of said sum shall be distributed. Upon the completion of such roll the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay per capita to the members of the tribe, except those resident in Wisconsin, their proportionate share of said sum, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in the same manner as provided by the act of April 21, 1904. (33 Stat. L., 201.) The proportionate share to the credit of the Winnebago Indians resident in Wisconsin shall be held in the Treasury of the United States pending further legislation.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 14 on page 49.

Mr. BURKETT. I am called away to attend a committee meeting, and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has consented that I may offer an amendment now. Right after the provision with reference to Nebraska I move to insert what I send to the desk. I will say it has already passed the Senate twice. If no one objects, it can be put on without being read.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to know what it is.

Mr. BURKETT. It is in reference to the Omahas.

The SECRETARY. After line 14, on page 49, it is proposed to insert:

That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Omaha tribe of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said Omaha tribe from the United States under the treaty between the United States and the said Omaha tribe of Indians ratified and affirmed March 16, 1854, or any other treaties or laws, or for the misappropriation of any funds of said Omaha tribe for purposes not for its material benefit, or for failure of the United States to pay said Omaha tribe any money due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal or equitable claims, if any, of said Omaha tribe against the United States, and also any legal or equitable defense, set-off, or counterclaim which the United States may have against said Omaha tribe of Indians, and to enter judgment thereon. The Court of Claims shall advance said cause upon the docket. If any question is submitted to said court, it shall settle the right, both legal and equitable, of both the Omaha tribe of Indians and the United States, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and final judgment and satisfaction thereof in said cause shall be deemed a final settlement of all claims of said Omaha Indians against the United States. Such action in the Court of Claims shall be presented by a single petition, subject, however, to amendment, to be filed within one year after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the Omaha tribe of Indians party plaintiff and the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the Omaha tribe of Indians bases its claim for recovery; and the said petition may be verified by the attorney employed by the said Omaha Indians under the contract filed in the Indian Office on the 4th day of March, 1898, and reported upon to the Secretary of the Interior on the 1st day of May, 1901, upon information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statements or verification shall be necessary.

The attorneys of record shall be furnished with official letters, papers, reports, documents, and public records or certified copies thereof, which may be used in evidence if competent under the rules of said Court of Claims: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to decree such reasonable fees as the court shall find shall be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the Omaha tribe of Indians, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said Omaha tribe of Indians: Provided further, That the Otoe and Missouri Indians, of Oklahoma, are hereby authorized to intervene in the said action and set up and have determined any right or interest they or either of them may have or claim to have in said claim; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Otoe and Missouri Indians, of whatsoever nature, which either or both of said tribes of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States, the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for the determination of the amount, if any, due either of said tribes from the United States under any treaties or laws of Congress, of the unexecuted stipulations of any treaties, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of either of said tribes for purposes not for their material benefit, or for the failure of the United States to pay either of said tribes any money due.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to reserve the point of order on the amendment and have it go over. I have no objection to the amendment; and I think those Indians should have the right to go to the Court of Claims, but I object to putting legislation of that kind on this bill. I asked to have an item passed over a few minutes ago because it referred a case to the Court of Claims. I should like to have them all treated alike.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be passed over for the present.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Carson School,'" on page 50, line 18, after the word "thereto," to strike out "as said Secretary deems for the best interest of the Indians" and insert "with said allottees as may be necessary," and in line 22, before the word "lands," to strike out "reserved," so as to make the clause read:

That in carrying out any irrigation project which may be undertaken under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stats., 388), known as the reclamation act, and which may make possible, and provide for in connection with the reclamation of other lands, the irrigation of all or any part of the irrigable lands heretofore included in allotments made to Indians under the fourth section of the general allotment act, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to make such arrangement and agreement in reference thereto with said allottees as may be necessary: Provided, That no lien or charge for construction, operation, or maintenance shall thereby be created against any such lands: Provided further, That to meet the necessary cost of carrying out this legislation the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to expend, out of the sum appropriated in this act for irrigation, an amount not exceeding $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Santa Fe School," on page 52, after line 11, to insert:

For completion of the irrigation system on the Zuni Reservation in New Mexico, $25,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Six Nations of New York. (Treaty)," on page 53, line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert "and such sum shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum until withdrawn from the Treasury for payment to the Indians as hereinafter provided," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Seneca Indians of New York the sum of $118,050, and such sum shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum until withdrawn from the Treasury for payment to the Indians as hereinafter provided, being the value of stocks held in trust for the Indians and taken by the United States, and canceled under authority of the act of June 27, 1846.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 6, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury the sum of $70,000 to the credit of the Six Nations of New York Indians, excluding the Oneidas of Wisconsin, said sum being a capitalization, on a basis of 5 per cent, of the permanent annuity of $3,500 paid in merchandise through the New York Indian Agency, as provided by the treaty of November 11, 1794, Seventh Statutes at Large, page 44, to the members of the Six Nations residing in the State of New York; and the said sum of $70,000 shall be held as a tribal trust fund for the tribes entitled thereto, and draw interest at 5 per cent, and be subject to distribution under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill under the heading "North Carolina."

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] brought me a suggestion a moment ago showing that a mistake had been made in the number of pupils at the Cherokee school. In his absence, I ask that the item be passed over for the present.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "North Dakota," on page 56, line 9, after the word "entitled," to strike out:

"An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States to the Territories from the Indians, and for other purposes."

And insert:

"An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians of the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," and amendments thereto.

So as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, on the approval of any allotment or homestead made to an Indian of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians under the act of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L., 189, 194), to cause patent to issue therefor in the name of the allottee in accordance with section 5 of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians of the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," and amendments thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Wahpeton School," on page 57, after line 7, to insert:

For improving the heating and lighting plant, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $25,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the Wahpeton School, on page 57, after line 11, to insert:

In addition to the above, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is authorized to expend in behalf of said school any unexpended balance of the appropriations heretofore made for said school for improvements thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oklahoma," on page 58, after line 9, to strike out:

For a monument to Cynthia Ann Parker, mother of Quanna Parker, chief of the Comanches, $1,000, to be expended under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Five Civilized Tribes," on page 62, after line 18, to strike out:

For clerical work and labor connected with the sale of inherited and other lands, Five Civilized Tribes, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 22, to insert:

For appraising, clerical work, and labor connected with the sale of restricted lands, Five Civilized Tribes, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the act approved April 21, 1904, and section 1 of the act of May 27, 1908, for the removal of restrictions upon the alienation of lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "District agents," on page 63, line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ninety" and insert "one hundred," so as to read:

Supplemental to the funds appropriated and available for expenses connected with the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, there is hereby appropriated for the salaries and expenses of district agents and other employees connected with the work of such agents, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, to be immediately available as the Secretary of the Interior may direct; and all powers heretofore conferred by law on said district agents, who are designated by the act of May 27, 1908.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Schools," on page 64, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For the maintenance, strengthening, and enlarging of the tribal schools of the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole nations, and making provision for the attendance of children of parents of other than Indian blood therein, and the establishment of new schools under the control of the Department of the Interior, the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, and disbursed by him under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Completion of the work," on page 64, after line 23, to insert:

Whatever of said work remains uncompleted on said date shall be turned over to the United States Indian agent at the Union Agency, Okla., to be by him completed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Seminoles (treaty)," on page 67, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "said sum, or any part thereof, so long as it remains in the Treasury, to draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum," and, in line 17, after the word "fifty-six," to strike out:

And the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay per capita to the members of the tribe entitled thereto the said sum, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in the same manner as provided by the act of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 201).

So as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Seminole tribe of Indians, the sum of $570,000, said sum, or any part thereof, so long as it remains in the Treasury, to draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, being the balance of the unappropriated amounts due said tribe under article 8 of the treaty of August 7, 1856 (11 Stat. L., p. 702), and article 3 of the treaty of March 21, 1866 (14 Stat. L., p. 756).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 68, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, in his discretion, the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, and use the same for the benefit of said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 7, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in case after investigation he deems it for the best interest of the tribe, to set aside 640 acres of Choctaw land for the benefit of old Goodland Indian Orphan Industrial School, and to convey the same to said school in conjunction with the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 14, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee to the Benedictine Fathers of Sacred Heart Abbey, Oklahoma, for the following-described lands, now and for many years reserved for and occupied by the Sacred Heart Mission, to wit, the south half of section 7 and the north half of section 18, in township 6 north, range 5 east, on the Pottawatomie Reservation, Okla., containing 640 acres more or less.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 23, to insert:

The sum of $600,000 is hereby appropriated in full payment of the award of the United States Senate of February 16, 1903, in favor of the loyal Creek Indians, to be immediately available. Such funds shall be paid in proportion to the award as set out in the list of awards made by W. B. Hazen and F. A. Field, commissioners, on behalf of the United States: Provided, That amounts due decedents on such list shall be paid to their heirs or legal representatives: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to first withhold from the amount herein appropriated and pay to S. W. Peel, of Bentonville, Ark., the attorney of said loyal Creek and freedmen, a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amount herein appropriated, as provided by written contracts between said S. W. Peel and the claimants herein, the same to be payment in full for all legal and other services rendered by him or those employed by him and for all disbursements and other expenditures had by him or his associates in behalf of said claimants in pursuance to said contract.

The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and directed to pay to David M. Hodge, a Creek Indian, of Tulsa, Okla., in the Creek Nation, a sum equal to 5 per cent of the amount herein appropriated, which payment shall be in full for all claims of every kind made by said David M. Hodge, or those claiming under him, by reason of any engagement, agreement, or understanding had between him and said loyal Creek Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. In line 2, page 69, after the word "Indians," I move to insert the words "pursuant to the stipulations of the treaty of March 1, 1901."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to make a point of order against this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEMENWAY in the chair). Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment, but it ought to read "agreement" instead of "treaty," because there was no treaty of that date.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is the same thing.

Mr. CURTIS. The courts hold not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the chairman of the committee accept the modification?

Mr. CURTIS. It should be "agreement" instead of "treaty," because there was no treaty.

Mr. CLAPP. I think that is correct, probably.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment as modified.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I make a point of order against the amendment, commencing on line 24, page 68, and running over to line 2, page 70, on the ground that it is general legislation, and that it is a claim.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Chair passes upon it, I should like to be heard.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Kansas withdraw his point of order, that the Senator from North Dakota may be heard?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly; I will reserve it, or withdraw it, if that is necessary.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish the Senator would state his point of order, and then I wish to discuss it and present some views upon the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas may make the point of order, without objection, and the Senator from North Dakota will be heard. Under the strict rule, after a point of order has been made, debate is not in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By the permission of the Senate, the Senator from Kansas will state the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. By the act of 1903 Congress appropriated the sum of $600,000 to settle this claim. The act provided that, if paid, the Indians should receipt in full settlement of the claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas will kindly suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived. The unfinished business will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested by Senators to let this item be passed over, and I am perfectly willing that that course should be pursued.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over for the present, at the request of the Senator from Kansas. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read to line 20, on page 71.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 71, line 20, after the word "school," I move to strike out the word "at" and to insert the word "of," so as to read, "at Indian school of Carlisle, Pa.," and so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in the items for the Carlisle school, Pennsylvania, on page 71, after line 23, to insert:

For improvement of heating system, $10,000, to be immediately available.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 15, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of and convey the real estate, including buildings and fixtures, of the Chamberlain School, South Dakota, for a price not less than $26,000 (unless it should be disposed of to the State of South Dakota, in which case the limitation as to price shall not apply), upon condition that the property shall continue to be maintained and operated as an educational institution and that children of Indian parents shall have the same privileges of education as white children, but with tuition free: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is authorized and directed to dispose by sale or transfer to other schools such property as is not covered by the transfer of the realty, buildings, and fixtures.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

There is hereby granted to the State of South Dakota upon the terms and conditions hereinafter named the following-described property, known as the Chamberlain School, including the lands, buildings, and fixtures pertaining to said school: Provided, That said lands and buildings shall be held and maintained by the State of South Dakota as an institution of learning, and that Indian pupils shall at all times be admitted to such school free of charge for tuition and on terms of equality with white pupils: Provided further, That this grant shall be effective at any time before July 1, 1910, if before that date the governor of the State of South Dakota files an acceptance thereof with the Secretary of the Interior accepting for said State said property, upon the terms and conditions herein prescribed.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I present to the Senate, with a view of its acceptance by the committee, an amendment to be inserted at the end of the paragraph, in line 19, page 73, and if it is agreeable to the committee, I will be entirely satisfied to have the amendment adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment the following:

If such property is not accepted by the State of South Dakota as hereinbefore provided, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of and convey the real estate, including buildings and fixtures of the Chamberlain School, South Dakota, for a price not less than $26,000, upon condition that the property shall continue to be maintained and operated as an educational institution, and that children of Indian parents shall have the same privilege of education as white children, but with tuition free: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is authorized and directed to dispose of, by sale or transfer, to other schools such property as is not covered by the transfer of the realty, buildings, and fixtures.

Mr. CLAPP. I see no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GAMBLE. I should like to hear the first part of the amendment to the amendment read again, as to the time when it will become operative.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

If such property is not accepted by the State of South Dakota as hereinbefore provided, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of and convey the real estate, including buildings and fixtures, of the Chamberlain School, South Dakota, for a price not less than $26,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 22, after the word "acre," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee simple to the duly authorized missionary board, or other proper authority of any religious organization heretofore engaged in mission or school work on said reservations, for such lands thereon as have been heretofore set apart to such organization for mission or school purposes.

So as to make the clause read:

On the Lower Brule Reservation: On agency reserve in section 15, township 107 north, range 73 west of the fifth principal meridian, described as beginning at the corner to sections 10, 11, 14, 15; thence west 330 feet on the section line between sections 10 and 15; thence south 264 feet; thence east 330 feet; thence north 264 feet to the place of beginning, containing 2 acres: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska (treaty)," on page 79, line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "three," so as to read:

For subsistence of the Sioux, and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $300,000.

Mr. GAMBLE. I suggest that the amendment be disagreed to. This is a treaty stipulation, and no recommendation has come from the department for a reduction of the appropriation. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to for the reason that it is a treaty stipulation and no suggestion has come from the department in regard to it. It is a matter of importance to the Indians there. I suggest that if such a reduction is to be made, the matter had better be referred to the department. It comes with a recommendation from the department for the original amount.

Mr. DIXON. I wish to say that probably I was partially responsible for that amendment in committee. The old treaty of 1877 does provide for rations for these Sioux Indians until such time as they shall become self-supporting. It was then my judgment and belief that as long as you issue rations to an Indian he never will become self-supporting. I think it was at my suggestion that the amendment was made to cut the amount from $500,000 to $300,000.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Sioux, Yankton tribe (treaty)," on page 81, after line 6, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Flandreau tribe of Indians, in the State of South Dakota, per capita the balance remaining in the Treasury to their credit, approximating $8,000, accruing to said Indians under the act of March 2, 1889.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 12, to insert:

That the following-described tract of land situated in Boreman County, in the State of South Dakota, and described as follows, to wit: A strip of land 10 chains wide on the west side of lot 3, in sec. 26, of T. 20 N., of R. 25 E., of the Black Hills principal meridian, be, and the same hereby is, reserved for cemetery purposes for the perpetual use of the Indians of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, and the same shall not be subject to taxation so long as the same may be used for cemetery purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Utah," on page 82, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert "reimbursable," so as to make the clause read:

For constructing irrigation system, to irrigate the allotted lands of the Uncompahgre, Uintah, and White River Utes in Utah, as provided by the act of June 21, 1906, $125,000, reimbursable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 8, to insert:

There is hereby granted to the State of Utah, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter named, the following-described property, known as the Panguitch School, including the lands, buildings, and fixtures pertaining to said school: Provided, That said lands and buildings shall be held and maintained by the State of Utah as an institution of learning, and that Indian pupils shall at all times be admitted to such school free of charge for tuition and on terms of equality with white pupils: Provided further, That this grant shall be effective at any time before July 1, 1910, if before that date the governor of the State of Utah files an acceptance thereof with the Secretary of the Interior accepting for said State said property, upon the terms and conditions herein prescribed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 22, to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to perfect and protect the rights of the Uncompahgre, Uintah, and White River Utes in Utah in and to the waters appropriated under the laws of the State of Utah for the irrigation systems authorized by the act of June 21, 1906, $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the amount expended hereunder to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale of lands within the former Uintah Reservation: Provided, That said sum, or any part thereof, shall be used only in the event of failure to procure from the State of Utah or its officers an extension of time in which to make final proof for waters appropriated for the benefit of the Indians, and any sum expended hereunder shall be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale of the lands within the former Uintah Reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 88, to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to pay the Oneida band of Indians of the Oneida Reservation, Wis., their proportionate share of the perpetual annuity accruing to the Six Nations of New York Indians, under the sixth article of the treaty of November 11, 1794 (7 Stat. L., p. 46), on the basis of a capitalization of the said annuity at 5 per cent, as provided in the agreement made with the said Oneida band January 4, 1909, said agreement having been made in pursuance with the act of Congress approved April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 70), $20,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, after line 7, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee simple to the duly authorized missionary board or other proper authority of any religious organization heretofore engaged in mission or school work on said reservations, for such lands thereon as have been heretofore set apart to such organization for mission or school purposes.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 10, after line 23, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

That all lands allotted to Indians in severalty, except allotments made to members of the Five Civilized Tribes, may by said allottee be leased for mining purposes for any term of years as may be deemed advisable by the Secretary of the Interior; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this paragraph into full force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. After the amendment just agreed to, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert:

That if any Indian tribe whose surplus lands have been or shall be ceded or open to disposal has received or shall receive an allotment embracing lands unsuitable for allotment purposes, such allotment may be canceled and other unappropriated, unoccupied, and unsurveyed land of equal area, within the ceded portions of the reservation upon which such Indian belongs, allotted to him upon the same terms and with the same restrictions as the original allotment, and lands described in such canceled allotment shall be disposed of as other ceded lands in such reservation. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations to carry this law into effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 32, after line 7, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, after line 7, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John K. Heyl, from the funds of the Kaw Indians in his possession, which have been set aside for the payment of certain claims, now in his possession, the sum of $750, the same being in payment of a scrip of the said Kaw Indians issued to Robert S. Stevens or bearer, the said payment to be made on the basis of the liquidation of other like scrip of the Kaw Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. If the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will consent to strike out the last clause of the amendment and insert the words "without interest," personally I shall not object to this amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. That should be done. The Senator from Kansas previously called my attention to that, but I overlooked it.

Mr. CURTIS. After the word "dollars" in the amendment, I move to insert "without interest," and then to strike out the last words of the amendment, "the said payment to be made on the basis of the liquidation of other like scrip of the Kaw Indians."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, to which I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. All amendments relating to sending matters to the Court of Claims have been passed over. Last year we adopted an amendment authorizing certain matters in Wisconsin to go to the Court of Claims. In doing that we named the parties who might bring the suits. It appears that one of those parties had died prior to the passage of that act. The object now is to allow his heirs to bring suit, and also to make provision for what was then omitted in the matter of taking depositions; so it will hardly be in line with the matters the Senator has in view.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. The object of this amendment is simply to perfect what was before in the bill?

Mr. CLAPP. Simply to perfect what was in the bill before.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 89, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

That the provisions of section 2 of the act approved May 29, 1908, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims in certain cases against the Menominee Indians be, and the same hereby are, extended to the heirs and legal representatives of William H. Stacey, formerly a trader upon the Menominee Reservation in Wisconsin, and to all other persons having claims against the Menominee tribe of Indians and against certain members of said tribe of the character described in said act, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Henry S. Comstock, attorney of record for said Indians in the Court of Claims, the sum of $2,000 out of any funds in the Treasury to the credit of said tribe for the purpose of taking depositions, payment of witness fees, and other expenses necessarily incident to the preparation of the defense of said Indians against all actions brought or to be brought under the provisions of section 2 of the act above mentioned, the said amount to be accounted for in final settlement of fees and expenses with said court and to be deducted from the allowance made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the first item passed over was on page 4, relating to gravel pits and reservoirs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment passed over, as the Chair understands, begins in the middle of page 3 and embraces page 4 and two lines of page 5.

Mr. HEYBURN. It commences on page 2; and against that amendment I raise the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment has been agreed to. The Chair understands that the first amendment passed over begins in line 13, page 3, and ends at line 2, on page 5.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggested at the time that the action on the amendments was so rapid that I was unable to interpose my objection to the first committee amendment. I requested that it should be open to the suggestion of the rule.

Mr. CLAPP. It may just as well be regarded as still open.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment which was agreed to, on page 2, will be regarded as still open.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to the amendment commencing in line 14, page 2, and extending down to line 11, on page 3, as being general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, I make the same objection to the second amendment, commencing in line 13, on page 3, and continuing down to and including line 2, on page 5.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I call the Senator's attention to the suggestion I am about to make, that on page 4, line 2, after the word "shall," the words "ascertain and fix the value of" be stricken out, and the words "negotiate with the Indians for" be inserted; and in line 3, after the word "so," the word "fixed" be stricken out, and the words "agreed upon" be inserted, so as to read:

The said Secretary shall negotiate with the Indians for said land, and upon the payment of the price so agreed upon, the said Secretary, etc.

Mr. HEYBURN. That will be entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well. I move that amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. With that modification I should not object to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho withdraw his point of order?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do, in view of the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the committee, on page 4, line 2, after the word "shall," it is proposed to strike out "ascertain and fix" and insert "negotiate with the Indians for;" and in line 3, after the word "so," to strike out "fixed" and insert "agreed upon," so as to read:

That when any railway company desiring to secure the benefits of this act shall file with the Secretary of the Interior an application describing the lands which it desires to purchase, the said Secretary shall negotiate with the Indians for said land, and upon the payment of the price so agreed upon the said Secretary shall cause such lands to be conveyed to the railway company applying therefor upon such terms and conditions as he may deem proper.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 7, after line 14, to insert:

That all patents issued for allotments to the Indians on the Stockbridge and Munsee Reservation, Wis., shall expressly declare that no sale of the lands described therein shall be made under any decree of any court or otherwise for or on account of any claim, judgment, execution, order, or for taxes, or voluntarily by the patentee or his or her heirs, unless such sale is approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and any such sale or conveyance made without such approval shall be absolutely void.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I asked to have that amendment passed over. There is no reason why the restriction should be imposed upon the property belonging to these Indians. They are certainly as intelligent, as highly civilized, and as well advanced as any Indians in the United States, whether in New York or elsewhere. In the report for 1905 it is said:

The Stockbridge and Munsee Indians are fully equipped for citizenship and the management of their lands and moneys, and an early settlement of these affairs is earnestly desired.

And yet this amendment proposes to so encumber their property or to place such restrictions with respect to the improvement of their property that it will be impossible for them to build homes or borrow money or contract debts for opening up and making their farms.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator suggested that the amendment ought to be passed over and that later we might take it up. If the Senator feels that the position he has taken should be sustained, the amendment could be reached by a point of order and disposed of at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I purposed to follow this brief statement with a point of order that the amendment is general legislation on an appropriation bill and ought to go out. I wanted to assign some reason for making the point of order; that was all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and he sustains the point of order.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 23, after line 19, to insert:

That to carry into effect the agreement between the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado and the United States, ratified by the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, being "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said States, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same" (21 Stats., p. 199), jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, on the claims and rights of said Indians under said agreement, including the value of all lands ceded by the said Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement, and the money due therefor; and the court shall set off against any sum found due said Indians the amount paid to them under the fifth section of said act of June 15, 1880, being $50,000 per annum up to the date of rendition of final judgment in this cause, also any other sum or sums that shall be found to be properly chargeable under the terms of said agreement; and the credit of $1,250,000 set apart in the Treasury by the terms of said agreement, upon which said annuity has been estimated, shall, upon the rendition of final judgment in this cause, cease to exist as a trust fund, and from and after the date of said judgment no annuity shall be estimated or paid therefrom; and the action herein authorized shall be consolidated with cause Congressional No. 11248, now pending in said court, for the purpose of using at the trial thereof all evidence which has been adduced in said pending cause, and shall be commenced by petition under the title of said pending cause and shall be conducted by the attorney of record now appearing therein, or by any attorney by him specifically authorized to appear; and the Attorney-General shall continue to appear and represent the United States; and in rendering judgment herein the court shall fix upon a quantum meruit and set apart just and reasonable compensation to the attorneys on behalf of plaintiffs who have rendered actual services in prosecuting said claim before the committees of Congress and in conducting the said cause before the courts in the name of the attorney of record in said pending cause, or any attorney by him specifically authorized, and said compensation shall be paid to such attorney by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury arising from the sale of said ceded lands or from the proceeds of said judgment, or out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum is hereby appropriated, to be reimbursed to the United States from the funds of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, and the balance of said judgment shall be held in the Treasury for the benefit of said Indians as a trust fund, and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in accordance with the terms of said act of June 15, 1880; and the said cause shall be advanced in hearing by the Court of Claims, and by the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed: Provided, That after final judgment rendered in this cause, as herein authorized, the court may from time to time further consider and render judgments for the value of any lands whereof disposition shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1909.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say a few words about that amendment. It is in exactly the language of a bill which has heretofore passed the Senate, but has not passed the House. In 1879 we had some trouble with the Ute Indians in Colorado. They murdered their agent and did some other very bad things. On the 15th day of June, 1880, we made a treaty with them, and this provision is to carry out that treaty. We speak of it here now as an agreement, but originally such agreements were called "treaties." I have the treaty before me and if any Senator desires to have me go into the details of it, I can do so. I merely wish, however, to make a very brief statement, as we have not much time to spend on these matters.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to know whether the amendment is a new and original proposition or simply one to correct an error that was made in a former appropriation bill?

Mr. TELLER. It is not to correct anything. It is really to send this case to the Court of Claims and let the court settle the controversy between the Government and the Indians. That is all.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, this claim was heretofore sent to the Court of Claims.

Mr. TELLER. It was sent under the Tucker Act, but the Court of Claims have very strongly indicated that they did not think they had jurisdiction. That is how it stands, and that is what we are afraid of—that the court will hold that they have not jurisdiction. A good deal of time has already been wasted.

I want to say that the controversy between the Indians and the Government is simply this: The Government say that prior to the treaty of 1880 they had advanced to these Indians a good deal of money, which is true. I participated in the discussion of that treaty twenty-nine years ago, and I know that it was accepted by the Indians and understood by the department itself to be a final settlement. There was no suggestion that any former advances should be considered in connection with the treaty. Now the Government say that they had made some advances before that time that ought to be charged up.

The Indians ceded to the Government of the United States a very large tract of land at a dollar and a quarter an acre. It included some of the most valuable land in the State of Colorado, property that to-day is worth four or five hundred dollars an acre. It included also a large tract of coal land, which is worth, according to the present estimate of the department, anywhere from $50 to $500 an acre. These Indians have been paid a stipulated sum yearly, I believe, although there is some dispute about that. The Indians claim otherwise, but I think they have.

The question is now, Shall the Government pay them for the land they have sold at a dollar and a quarter an acre and land that has been withdrawn from entry at a dollar and a quarter an acre? A large portion of this area has been withdrawn from settlement and is now in three great forest reserves, upon which no man can acquire any title whatever to property. The stipulation in the agreement of the Indians was that the Government should sell these lands and deposit the money in the Treasury. We want to get an opportunity to show to the court what the facts are and have it determined whether the Indians are to be charged for matters that occurred long before the treaty was made.

Then, we should like to have the court pass upon the question whether the Government ought to be paid for the land which has been segregated from the public lands and put into forest reserves. The stipulation was that whatever was sold should sell at a dollar and a quarter an acre and that that should be paid to the Indians.

Mr. President, I do not see why anyone should object to the amendment. It provides that the Attorney-General shall look after the case and see that the Government is not wronged. It is the only way that the Indians can settle this controversy. They can not sue the Government unless we authorize them to do so.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas withdraws his point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in this connection I desire to say that I withdraw the point of order I made against the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] on page 49.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas withdraws the point of order made against the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Omaha tribe of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said Omaha tribe from the United States under the treaty between the United States and the said Omaha tribe of Indians, ratified and affirmed March 16, 1854, or any other treaties or laws, or for the misappropriation of any funds of said Omaha tribe for purposes not for its material benefit, or for failure of the United States to pay said Omaha tribe any money due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal or equitable claims, if any, of said Omaha tribe against the United States, and also any legal or equitable defense, set-off, or counterclaim which the United States may have against said Omaha tribe of Indians, and to enter judgment thereon. The Court of Claims shall advance said cause upon the docket. If any question is submitted to said court, it shall settle the right, both legal and equitable, of both the Omaha tribe of Indians and the United States, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and final judgment and satisfaction thereof in said cause shall be deemed a final settlement of all claims of said Omaha Indians against the United States. Such action in the Court of Claims shall be presented by a single petition, subject, however, to amendment, to be filed within one year after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the Omaha tribe of Indians party plaintiff and the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the Omaha tribe of Indians bases its claim for recovery; and the said petition may be verified by the attorney employed by the said Omaha Indians under the contract filed in the Indian Office on the 4th day of March, 1898, and reported upon to the Secretary of the Interior on the 1st day of May, 1901, upon information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statements or verification shall be necessary.

The attorneys of record shall be furnished with official letters, papers, reports, documents, and public records or certified copies thereof, which may be used in evidence if competent under the rules of said Court of Claims: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to decree such reasonable fees as the court shall find shall be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the Omaha tribe of Indians, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said Omaha tribe of Indians: Provided further, That the Otoe and Missouri Indians, of Oklahoma, are hereby authorized to intervene in the said action and set up and have determined any right or interest they or either of them may have or claim to have in said claim; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Otoe and Missouri Indians, of whatsoever nature, which either or both of said tribes of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States, the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for the determination of the amount, if any, due either of said tribes from the United States under any treaties or laws of Congress of the unexecuted stipulations of any treaties, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of either of said tribes for purposes not for their material benefit, or for the failure of the United States to pay either of said tribes any money due.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. The next item passed over is on page 54. I am advised that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] desires to offer an amendment in the provision for the Cherokee school in North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have a copy of an amendment prepared by the gentleman who represents in the other House the district where that school is located.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator desire to offer it now?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, line 25, after the words "education of," it is proposed to strike out "one hundred and sixty" and insert "two hundred;" and on page 55, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "thirty-four," so as to read:

For support and education of 200 pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., and for pay of superintendent, $34,220.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that the reason I offer the amendment is that the supreme court of North Carolina in a recent case, found in a late volume of the North Carolina Reports, decided that the Cherokee children are amenable to the laws of North Carolina, which require every man to send his children to school. There are 227 in the school now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I will ask permission at this time to correct the totals. There have been some changes made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 10, after the amendment which has been adopted there, I desire to submit another amendment. I want to say that the Senate has been very indulgent with these amendments. This is something the department is very anxious to have done. A bill for this purpose passed the Senate some time ago. I offer the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, after line 3, and after the amendments already agreed to at that point, it is proposed to insert:

That any adult Indian of any reservation to whom an allotment has been or hereafter shall be made and a trust or other patent containing restrictions on alienation issued, or hereafter shall be issued therefor, is, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior and under such regulations as he may prescribe, hereby authorized to sell the timber on his allotment.

Timber on the allotments of minors may, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, likewise be sold by the father, mother, or Indian agent, or other officer in charge, in the order named, and the Secretary of the Interior shall make such regulations for the disposition of the proceeds of said sales as may be necessary to protect the interest of said Indians, including such minors.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the word "guardian" included there somewhere—the guardian, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment reads:

By the father, mother, or Indian agent, or other officer in charge, in the order named.

Mr. TELLER. Perhaps that will cover it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have the amendment read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment, at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am constrained to make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and therefore sustains it.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment, and I desire to say a word or two about it. I send up the amendment to be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

To provide for the protection of Indian property and the prosecution of crimes and offenses committed against Indians and Indian property, the sum of $25,000, to be expended at the discretion of the President, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I find there is a small appropriation—I think twenty-five hundred dollars—provided in the pending bill for this purpose, and perhaps for some other purposes.

I have some personal knowledge of the conditions of Indian property. I have gone on two committees into the Indian country—down into Oklahoma. I have some knowledge of the condition of the Indians in the western country, as well as in the Southwest. I know that there have been committed against the Indians a great many frauds of recent date. There are a large number of prosecutions now on hand by the General Government, I understand, and I want to have a reasonable amount of money provided for their prosecution. I do not know—it might have been put into the hands of the Secretary; but on consultation with some people who know about those matters, I thought it better to put it in the name of the President. Of course, the work will be done under the Secretary of the Interior, whoever he may be.

I think this ought to be done. I think common justice to the Indians requires that we should furnish some means to protect their property, and to protect their persons in some cases. The Senator from Kansas, I think, accompanied me on one of those expeditions, and he will sustain me in the statement that we ought to have some help from the General Government in these cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLINT. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

For payment to James H. Owen, of Los Angeles, Cal., of the amount found to be due him by the Secretary of the Interior under contract of May 31, 1906, for the erection of buildings and irrigation works at the Truxton Canyon Indian School, Arizona, $930.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill, to be inserted after line 9, on page 58.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to turn over to the proper officers, respectively, of the counties now forming a part of the area covered by the counties of Caddo, Kiowa, and Comanche, State of Oklahoma, upon such equitable basis as may be satisfactory to and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the respective unexpended balances of the funds derived from the sale of town lots in the towns of Anadarko, Hobart, and Lawton, Okla., under the act of March 3, 1901, and by that act and the acts of June 30, 1902, and March 14, 1906, set apart for the construction of public improvements in the said counties, as a trust fund to be by them, or under their supervision, expended solely for the construction and completion of public improvements in the counties aforesaid, as provided by the enactments of Congress creating and regulating the disposition of said funds, and for expenses necessary in connection with the construction and completion of such improvements.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the letter accompanying the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order against the amendment, unless some explanation is made showing the necessity for it.

Mr. GORE. I will make an explanation, which I hope will be satisfactory.

A measure for this purpose has already passed the Senate, but the condition of affairs in the other House makes it impossible to pass it there at this session. It is urgently desired by the department, and I sent to the desk with the amendment a letter from the Secretary of the Interior urging its passage. It is a matter the department is very anxious to be rid of.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to ask the Senator if he can explain what change it makes in existing law?

Mr. GORE. There is a remaining balance from the sales of those town lots, which arose seven years ago, still in the hands of the department, and they desire to turn this money over to the local authorities in those counties in order to get rid of the further distribution of the fund.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, the law required these improvements to be made by the Secretary of the Interior or under his direction.

Mr. GORE. That was the law, and a good many have been made, but a portion of the fund still remains, and the Secretary desires that it be turned over to the counties. I will ask that the letter I sent to the desk be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FEBRUARY 3, 1909.

Hon. J. S. SHERMAN,
Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives.

SIR: By your reference of January 30, 1909, for report, I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of copy of H. R. 11342, entitled "A bill providing for the disposition of the balance of the funds derived from the sale of town lots in the county seats of Caddo, Kiowa, and Comanche counties, Okla."

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to turn over to the proper officers, respectively, of the counties of Caddo, Kiowa, and Comanche, and the towns of Anadarko, Hobart, and Lawton, in the State of Oklahoma, the unexpended balances derived from the sale of the town lots under the act of March 3, 1901.

By section 30 of the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat., 458), the Secretary of the Interior was authorized and directed to turn over the unexpended balances due the towns of Lawton, Hobart, and Anadarko, so that there is only remaining in the custody of the United States the balances due the counties of Caddo, Kiowa, and Comanche. The areas covered by the original counties have since been subdivided, and there are several additional counties covering the same territory.

It is therefore respectfully recommended that clause "and the towns of Anadarko, Hobart, and Lawton," lines 5 and 6, page 1, and the words "and the towns," in line 13, page 1, and line 3, page 2, of the bill be stricken out. Also, that there be inserted after the word "counties," in line 5, page 1, the following: "Now forming a part of the area covered by the counties," and after the word "Comanche," in the same line, the words "on March, 1891."

The balances due the respective counties now lie in the Treasury. It appears that the various commissioners of the various counties of the original Comanche County have agreed among themselves as to how the balance remaining for that county may be satisfactorily divided between them. There has apparently been no subdivision of Kiowa County. Grady County covers a portion of the original Caddo County, but this department has not been advised of any agreement for partition between these counties. As Oklahoma has now become a State, there is no reason why the expenditures should be now supervised by this department, nor why the fund should not be divided among the counties upon such equitable basis as may be satisfactory and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

This department would, therefore, recommend the passage of the bill amended, so as to provide for the distribution suggested.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) FRANK PIERCE,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I offer another amendment, to follow the one just agreed to.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted, on page 58, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to allot to the children born to members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma since June 5, 1906, such allotments to be made out of the remaining unallotted lands belonging to said tribes, and to be as nearly equal in value as practicable.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. CURTIS. That it proposes general legislation and changes existing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. GORE. I ask the Senator from Kansas to withhold the point of order for just a moment.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not see how I can. I feel that the bill is being loaded down with a lot of matters that ought to go through as independent measures, and I insist on the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas insists upon the point of order.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 70, it is proposed to insert:

That the Attorney-General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to move the advancement upon the docket of the Supreme Court of the United States of the case of J. E. Fleming et al. v. Green, McCurtain et al., Docket No. 535, to the earliest practicable hearing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I desire to submit an amendment to be inserted after line 17, on page 67.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. —. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to cause to be paved that portion of the streets adjacent to the Creek national capitol at Okmulgee, Okla., which said portion would be chargeable to the property if it were private property, and the expense of such paving shall be defrayed out of the fund belonging to the Creek tribe of Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. CURTIS. That it is general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OWEN. I have several small amendments which are offered in accordance with the wish of the Interior Department, who have reported on the matter, and I have the report of the Secretary of the Interior which I should like to have appear in the RECORD without being read, unless some one would like to hear it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be inserted in the RECORD without being read.

The report is as follows:

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1909.

MY DEAR SENATOR CLAPP: I am sending you herewith the formal report on Senate bill 8776, relative to the winding up of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes.

I have found it quite impossible to formulate any statement which would fairly show the conditions which have been complained of regarding persons who claim to have been omitted from the tribal rolls. It seems to me almost impossible to classify the various complainants in such fashion as to give a clear idea of either the reason for the classification or the number of persons who might come within any special class.

It seems to me that if we attempt to open the rolls for any class of claimants, more harm than good will be the result.

I am, however, still considering this question, and will advise you further; but send this report on, as I understand your committee desires to consider the Senate bill 8776 to-morrow morning.

Very truly yours,

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

Hon. MOSES E. CLAPP,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 4, 1909.

Hon. MOSES E. CLAPP,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: I have, by your reference of January 28, Senate bill 8776, "To enable the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes."

The underlying purpose of this bill is very proper and necessary. For years Congress has been providing in the Indian appropriation acts that the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes shall wind up the affairs of those tribes on or before the end of the following fiscal year. The intricacy of the work of that commission, the multitudinous questions which have arisen, the extreme importance of doing full justice to the Indians, have all combined to make it impossible to close the affairs as the various acts direct. In addition to the ordinary difficulties of administration, the department has been confronted with a large number of suits, some of them involving the enrollment and property rights of thousands of persons.

The Goldsby and Allison suits, recently decided by the Supreme Court, have established the status of about 300 citizens of the tribes who, previous to that decision, had been treated as legally stricken from the rolls. While these cases were pending, most of their selected allotments have been applied for by other enrolled members. It will now be necessary to allow the three hundred to perfect their rights and to see that others who had tentatively applied for their allotments get allotments elsewhere.

Other suits are now being filed in what may prove to be more than 1,000 cases, in which—although the essential point on which the Goldsby case was decided is lacking—there are other features of considerable similarity.

"The Muskrat" case, recently decided by the Court of Claims, established (unless the Supreme Court should overrule the decision) the right of hundreds of Cherokees to be upon the rolls and share in the tribal land and money. This suit has been appealed, and action under the decision must be delayed until the Supreme Court has rendered final judgment.

The so-called "Fleming suit" is supposed to affect the rights of more than 13,000 claimants. It is now in the Supreme Court for consideration.

There are other suits pending and likely to be brought. Under the circumstances, and without some definite provision of law providing for the manner in which the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes shall be closed, it may be years before the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes can actually complete his work.

I am convinced that the method of procedure set forth in the various sections is necessary and equitable, and that they would accomplish a final and proper adjustment of the matter in question. I am not certain, however—and I draw particular attention to my hesitancy—that the length of time allowed before final action is sufficient to insure opportunity for a full and reasonable return to the tribes from their property, or that those determined by the courts to be entitled to enrollment will be identified by final judgment of the courts before December 1, 1911, the date fixed in S. 8776 for completion of the distribution of the funds belonging to the tribes.

I ask, therefore, that the committee consider whether the date, "May 1, 1910," found in lines 24 and 25 of the third page of the bill, should not be made at least as late as December 1, 1910; and whether the date "July 1, 1911," found in lines 10 and 11 of the fourth page of the bill, should not be extended to as late as December 1, 1911; and whether the date "December 1, 1911," found in line 5, and again in line 9, on page 7 of the bill, should not be as late as July 1, 1912.

This extension of the time seems necessary for two reasons: First, in order that there may be better opportunity for final court judgments, since the Supreme Court could advance and consider the cases during the winter of 1911–12 which might not reach that body in time for judgment prior to December 1, 1911; and, second, because there should be the fullest reasonable opportunity to secure for the tribes an adequate return from the sale of their residue land. The property involved consists of millions of acres, of which about 300,000 acres contain valuable deposits of coal, and nearly a million acres are covered with timber of considerable value.

The purpose of the bill is to divide the landed property of the Indians into three classes: (1) The surface of the Choctaw and Chickasaw coal and asphalt lands, (2) the coal and asphalt contained in that land, and (3) all the other land left after final allotments have been made.

The plan involves as speedy a classification and appraisement of these lands as possible, in order that there may be one or more offers for all of it to the public under sealed bids, at not less than the appraised value, prior to May 1, 1910, as the bill now provides, or December 1, 1910, as I suggest; and that after such date, but before July 1, 1911, as the bill provides, or December 1, 1911, as I suggest, this land shall be offered one or more times in such way that before the final date it shall have been offered with no restriction as to area or upset price, in order that if the land then remaining has any value whatever it may be disposed of to the person or persons offering to purchase it.

I also understand that, by section 4, the bill proposes to protect the tribes and the members thereof from any contracts they may have entered into which might consume part of the proceeds from the proposed sales; also, that the bill provides that those who are lawfully on the rolls and do not obtain an allotment of land shall receive, in full satisfaction for allotment right, an amount twice the average value of the land subject to allotment; also, that the funds of the tribes shall be distributed before December 1, 1911, as the bill provides, or before July 1, 1912, as I suggest, such distribution being unrestricted, except that allottees of more than three-quarters Indian blood whose restrictions have not been entirely removed shall receive half of their distributive shares without restrictions, the other half being held by the Secretary of the Interior and expended later for the benefit of such restricted Indians; also, that the councils of the tribes shall not meet except with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, in order that they may not consume the funds of the tribes in useless and prolonged meetings.

By the arrangements suggested above, the duties of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes would be surely at an end July 1, 1912, and as soon before that time as the court and contest proceedings and sales of land could be brought into such shape that the Indian agent would be able to handle the matter, with the help of the district agents, in the way that the affairs of tribes other than the Five Civilized Tribes are now handled.

Section 7 is necessary, because the tribal funds of the Creek Nation are not sufficient to equalize their allotments, as now provided by law.

The reason for this is that a large number of minors were added to the rolls with the consent of the nation, and for that reason there will be practically no residue of land to be sold. Since there is not sufficient money to equalize these allotments, the only reasonable and logical method would seem to be to pro rate the money available among them, saving out only enough to be sure to meet the current expenses of the tribe until such time as their tribal rolls may be finally closed.

Section 8 provides a remedy for a situation which in many respects would bring about complications and inequities. There are many payments on town lots in default. The defaulting purchasers own the improvements on the lots, and would strenuously oppose the taking of these improvements by a subsequent purchaser. The defaults of payment are largely due to the recent financial stringency and to uncertainty about the outcome of the town-lot fraud cases. There would seem to be no objection from the standpoint of the tribes that an opportunity for making defaulted payments should be given to and including a specific date.

Section 9 is necessary if the affairs of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations are to be closed out. The law now permits freedmen who received less than 40 acres of land in their allotments to purchase at the appraised value enough land to bring their holding up to said 40 acres. Many or most of these freedmen will never exercise this right, and for that reason it is necessary to fix a limitation whereby their right will become automatically and equitably extinguished. If the bill passes at this session of Congress, the time allowed—to December 1, 1909—would seem to be equitable.

In addition to the sections contained in the bill I suggest the following:

"SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to take charge of and lease, for terms not exceeding those provided by law for the various classes of leases for restricted allotments of the Five Civilized Tribes, all restricted lands allotted to members of any of the Five Civilized Tribes having three-quarters or more Indian blood when such allottees fail or refuse to accept or take possession of their allotments: Provided, That leases made hereunder which could have been legally made by the allottee without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior shall be delivered to him for administration at any time when he shall accept them: And provided, That until said allottees accept the administration of said leases the expense of making leases which the allottee could have legally made for himself without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior shall be reimbursed to the fund for the expenses of district agents provided for in the Indian appropriation act, the net proceeds thereof, together with all the proceeds of leases which require the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to be held by the Indian agent, Union Agency, and paid to the respective allottees as soon as they will accept said payments."

The propriety of such a provision of law is based upon the fact that a large number of full-blood Cherokees, Creeks, and Choctaws have refused to accept their allotments. Their allotment certificates and deeds sent to them by registered mail have been returned to the Indian agent. Most of these allottees do not know where their allotments are situated and are obtaining no return from them. Under the proposed section the district agents, without very great loss of the time which they are using to so much advantage in the protection of minors and in the removal of restrictions, could let it be known that they will make leases for such allotments, and the Indian agent, who is under a $400,000 bond, could hold the proceeds until the recalcitrant allottee can be found. There is no case on record where an allottee has refused to accept money, and I believe that as soon as any such allottee finds that there is money available for him and that his allotment will bring him an income for the future, he will take over the lease from the department, accept his allotment certificate and deed, and become interested in the use of the land allotted to him. In this way it is hoped that the Night Hawk and Snake bands, who are refusing to accept their allotments, will be induced to follow the lead of the majority of the members of the Five Civilized Tribes. In this way also it will be possible for the district agents to get in touch with this class of Indians and obtain their consent for selling part of their allotments in order that the proceeds may be used in improving the remaining portion. This will certainly be to the advantage of the Indian and will rapidly increase the area of taxable land in eastern Oklahoma.

I urge upon the attention of the committee that a large area of timber land in the Choctaw Nation, something over a million acres, is situated at the headwaters of rivers very liable to floods, and is the only stretch of forest land in a very large region. I am convinced that it would be constitutional for the Government to purchase this land from the Indians for a reasonable price and hold it as a national forest. All the land in this region which, because of being situated along creek and river bottoms, is capable of agricultural use has been allotted. The unallotted portion is rough, broken land which can not be utilized for home making. Unless Congress makes some provision for the retention of this area as a national forest, it will, either under the provisions of this bill as introduced or by operation of existing law as soon as allotments are completed, be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior and pass forever beyond the reach of government conservation. As I said above, the acquisition of the land by the Government would seem to be constitutional for the purpose of protecting navigable streams. It would be at least a paying investment for the Government, because the sale of timber under wise forest management would amply repay the purchase price. It would be fair to the Indians, because, if the land is exposed to sale, the cream of it will be bought in to begin with, and the remainder will be left as a drug upon the market. Choctaw and Chickasaw delegates have expressed to me informally their feeling that if the present appraised value of this land should be given to the Indians by the Government, the compensation would be fair, since the good and bad land would have to be taken in one lump. The Indians themselves would profit both practically and sentimentally by the maintenance of this public forest. Those who are not willing to adopt the ways of civilization would have a stretch of wild land, within which they could live and fish and hunt so long as they abide by the federal and state laws, whereas those who have allotments along the rivers and in the proximity of this forest land would have the protection of stream flow and the opportunity to purchase timber and wood at better prices, not only to-day, but for generations to come.

If the committee should deem it wise to adopt the above suggestions they can do so by amending section 3 as follows:

1. In line 15, page 3, after the words "Five Civilized Tribes," insert "except not to exceed 1,200,000 acres of timber land in the Choctaw Nation in a compact body to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior."

2. Add a new section between sections 3 and 4, on page 6, which shall read:

"SEC. 3a. That the compact body of timber land in the Choctaw Nation not to exceed 1,200,000 acres, as it may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby set aside as a national forest, to be known as the "Choctaw National Forest," and to be protected, administered, and improved according to the laws, rules, and regulations applicable to national forests in general; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,800,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay to the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians for the body of timber land, not to exceed 1,200,000 acres, designated for said national forest by the Secretary of the Interior, at the rate of $1.50 per acre, and the amount to be paid when definitely determined shall be transferred in the Treasury Department to the funds of said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, to be disbursed as part of said funds."

I find that the following further changes should be made in the bill:

1. In line 6, page 1, the words "such enrolled persons" should be stricken out and in their place there should be inserted the following words: "any enrolled persons of the Cherokee, Choctaw, or Chickasaw nations have not completed their allotments, and." The reason for this is that those enrolled with the Creek and Seminole nations have no remnant allotments to select, and unless the above words are inserted, there might be some confusion.

2. At the end of section 2, on page 3, there should be inserted the following:

"Provided, That this section shall not apply to those who have made allotment selections for which certificates of allotment have issued."

The reason for this is that the courts have held that the issuance of allotment certificate passes the title, and beyond that consideration it does not seem wise to allow those who have already obtained their allotments to cause confusion and delay by attempting to surrender them and take money instead.

3. In line 20, page 3, after the word "coal," insert the words "separate from the surface;" and in the same line, after the word "asphalt," insert the words "together with the surface;" also after the word "coal," in line 6, page 4, insert the words "separate from the surface;" and after the word "asphalt," in line 7, page 4, insert "together with the surface." The reasons for these insertions is the fact that the asphalt lies practically on the surface and is worked in open quarries. Consequently a sale of asphalt without a sale of the surface would be unreasonable. By inserting the words indicated above, I am confident this section without further change will provide for sale of asphalt, together with the surface and of the coal, separate from the surface.

In line 1, at the top of page 5, after the words "may elect," there should be inserted the words "but in no case later than February 1, 1912." The necessity for this insertion is to prevent delay in payments to such an extent that the provision for distributing the funds would be necessarily defeated. On page 7 strike out the word "before," both in line 5 and line 9, and in each instance substitute for it the words "payments to begin not later than." The reason for this is that the difficulty of making 100,000 payments is so great that practically a year will be consumed in their completion. This is because of the difficulty in finding the whereabouts of the Indians and the physical work required in making sure that each payment goes to the entitled payee. This provision would not delay final distribution one day longer than practically necessary, and would not require the continuation of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, since the Indians are always paid by the Indian agent or by special agents of the department.

Commissioner J. George Wright has made a careful study of the expense necessary for appraising land and mineral under section 3 of the bill. He reports that in the Creek Nation there are approximately 70,000 acres unallotted. This is distributed over about 120 townships, for which reasons it would take 10 men about five months to make the appraisements, at a cost of practically $7,000.

In the Cherokee Nation there are approximately 40,000 acres of unallotted lands in small tracts distributed over 150 townships. This would require 4 men four months, at a cost of $4,000.

The Choctaw and Chickasaw unallotted land, approximately 3,245,000 acres, is distributed over 612 townships. In about 106 of these townships there is more or less pine timber of a commercial value. To appraise this land and timber would require about 35 men for six or seven months, at an aggregate cost of about $25,000.

The total cost, therefore, would be approximately $36,000. I therefore suggest it would be impossible with the force already provided for the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the Indian agent to make these appraisals, and I further suggest that the following section be added to the bill:

"SEC. 11. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $36,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in making the classifications and appraisements provided for in section 3 hereof."

In connection with the disposal of land of the Five Civilized Tribes, I call your attention to the fact that section 10 of the act of May 29, 1908, provides for the sale of 2 acres for school purposes in each district. There are two mistakes in that provision. One is that the 2 acres should have been 2½ acres, for the reason that 2 acres can not be described in terms of government surveys, for which reason the cost of surveying and deeding the land for school purposes is very much increased. The provision that there may be but one school site for each school district falls short of covering the ground, since in Oklahoma each district where there are colored children must maintain two separate schools. I therefore suggest the addition of still another section to the bill, as follows:

"SEC. 12. Section 10 of the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat., 444), is hereby amended to read as follows: 'Sec. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell for use for school purposes to school districts of the State of Oklahoma from the unallotted lands of the Five Civilized Tribes land not to exceed two tracts of 2½ acres each in any one school district, at prices and under regulations to be prescribed by him, and proper conveyances of such land shall be executed in accordance with existing laws requiring the conveyance of tribal property; and the Secretary of the Interior also shall have authority to remove the restrictions on the sale of such lands, not to exceed two tracts of 2½ acres each for each school district, as allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, including full bloods and minors, may desire to sell for school purposes.'"

Very respectfully, JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD, Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, in line 26, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That allottees of the Cherokee, Choctaw, and Chickasaw nations having remnant allotments due them of not exceeding $50 in value shall be paid twice the value thereof in lieu of such allotment by check from the tribal funds of their respective tribes.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it limited to the tribal funds? Is the payment to be made out of the funds?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIS. Instead of giving them land that is worth less than $50?

Mr. OWEN. It is out of the tribal funds.

Mr. CURTIS. In lieu of land they have of a value of less than $50? I have no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, after line 26, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is directed, after July 1, 1909, and prior to December 1, 1909, to pay allottees out of the Creek funds the amounts severally due for the equalization of their allotments: Provided, That in making such payment for the equalization of the Creek allotments $800 shall be taken as the standard value of an allotment.

Mr. CURTIS. I dislike very much to make the point of order against the amendment, for I really think it ought to be enacted into law. But I think it should be taken up by the committee in a proper way; and so I make the point of order against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. CURTIS. That it is general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it proposes general legislation, and therefore sustains the point of order. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the same place the following:

The tribal councils when meeting shall receive compensation only for the length of time authorized by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert:

The town-lot payments in default shall not work forfeiture if payment with 10 per cent interest from date of such default is made before July 1, 1909. All right to acquire land for allotment by Choctaw and Chickasaw freedmen shall cease December 1, 1909.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the junior Senator from Oklahoma should explain the necessity of those two amendments.

Mr. KEAN. Or let them go out on points of order.

Mr. OWEN. The necessity for the amendment is this: The Secretary of the Interior has laid out a very large number of towns in Oklahoma in the lands which formerly comprised the land of the Five Civilized Tribes. The town lots go into the thousands, and in many of those cases transfers have been made, and parties to whom transfers have been made were not notified of these pending balances. The law provided forfeiture if they were not paid. In some cases notices were sent to the houses, and they were not delivered. I have a report from the department in regard to it, and it can be read if the Senate desires. I think there should be no objection on the part of anyone to the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the department ask for this legislation?

Mr. OWEN. I understand the department wishes it. I have here the report from the department. A similar provision is also in the bill which was reported—the Five Tribes bill—which the Senator will probably remember.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I have another amendment, providing for the payment of the Eastern Cherokee council. Congress two years ago appropriated approximately $4,000 out of their funds to pay them for their attendance at the Eastern Cherokee council, and going to and from. They have not been paid because of a technicality, and this is intended to confirm what Congress previously intended to do. I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

The Court of Claims is hereby authorized to allow, and, upon such allowance, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay out of the sum awarded to the Eastern Cherokees, under the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, October term, 1905, to the several members of the council of the Eastern Cherokees the sum of $5 per diem each for the period they severally rendered service in going to and from and attending the councils of the Eastern Cherokees, as shall be certified to the Court of claims by the president and secretary of the council, and otherwise established to the satisfaction of said court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I offer an amendment in regard to suits which have been brought in eastern Oklahoma relative to land titles. I should like to have the amendment read, and I desire to offer a brief explanation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of page 64 it is proposed to insert:

Provided, The Attorney-General is hereby authorized and directed to immediately dismiss the suits brought by the United States to set aside land titles in the eastern district of Oklahoma where the consideration was not inequitable and where there is no actual fraud involved.

Mr. KEAN. I shall have to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Senator to withhold the point of order until I can have an opportunity to explain the purpose of this item.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, last year in the Indian appropriation act we provided the sum of $50,000 to be used in protecting the Indians of the Five Tribes against fraudulent transactions. The purpose of that was manifest on its face—that these suits were to be brought at the request of the allottees. The language of the bill was "at the request of the allottee," and it was presumed that the money would be used in protecting the Indians there against actual fraud, or where some palpable wrong had been committed against them. But instead of the suits being brought in pursuance of law, they were brought under a general plan, bringing a cloud upon the title of every piece of land where there was any transaction whatever prior to the time when the restrictions were removed. It made no matter whether the parties were perfectly satisfied, whether the consideration was equitable and fair, whether they were now content with it; but it was brought for the purpose of requiring those who had been charged with fraud to prove their innocence. It was a general plan which embraced everyone who might be in anywise interested.

The effect of it has been to make titles in eastern Oklahoma regarded with extreme doubt all over the country. It has stopped immigration to our country and has lowered the value of land, and since the original purpose was merely to protect against fraud, and since this bill provides $100,000 to be used by the representatives of the Secretary of the Interior, known as "district representatives," who are charged with the duty of advising the uninformed members of the late Five Tribes, it does seem to me the State ought to have its peace against suits brought where there is no fraud, and where the consideration was not inequitable. I should like to have the amendment read once more.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Oklahoma pardon me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Undoubtedly a condition prevails down there where suits have been brought perhaps with less care to ascertain the facts than ought to have been exercised.

For one I would join in legislation which would enable a defendant to bring up an issue somewhat similar to the right ordinarily given to the plaintiff to strike out an answer on the ground that it was a sham and frivolous, but I can not see any force or effect in this amendment to direct the Attorney-General to dismiss a case when it is brought without due cause, because it is simply to commit to the Attorney-General the determination of the question whether there was due cause or sufficent ground.

Mr. OWEN. I shall be quite content to do that, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think we ought to pass that kind of legislation. Will the Senator prepare such an amendment? I recognize the difficulty of getting legislation. The Senate has been very patient with the committee. It has been embarrassing to me as chairman of the committee to sit here without objecting on a point of order to so much legislation, but I recognize the condition which surrounds us. I am willing to join with the Senate in their leniency upon the matter of allowing legislation on the bill.

If the Senator will prepare an amendment which will enable any defendant immediately to bring to the court the issue and the court then be required to pass upon the question, I would gladly join the Senator in that kind of legislation. It would be somewhat similar to the right which a plaintiff always has to attack a defense as a sham or as frivolous. But I must object to directing the Attorney-General to dismiss a suit when it is in the end left entirely in his discretion. We would simply throw out, it seems to me, beyond the real purview of legislation, a challenge to the Attorney-General, and it would accomplish nothing. If it would accomplish anything——

Mr. OWEN. With the consent of the Senate I will withdraw the amendment and offer it in the form suggested by the chairman of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma withdraws his proposed amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. When will it be in order to take up the point of order made on the amendment on page 68?

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from Kansas will pardon a suggestion, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has been waiting to offer an amendment. The amendment to which the Senator from Kansas refers will lead to debate.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well.

Mr. BACON. I wish to offer an amendment. The point at which it is to be placed in the bill is indicated at the margin at the top.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 5, after the words in brackets, it is proposed to insert:

> The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the roll of the Cherokee Nation the names of the following persons: Emily C. Howell, mother; Emily C. Howell, jr., daughter; Ellen E. Howell, daughter; Robert E. Lee Howell, son; Thomas C. Howell, son; Frank R. Howell, son; Evan C. Howell, son; James C. Howell, son; Stephen E. Howell, son; Lettie P. Howell, daughter; Eston E. Howell, son; William T. Howell, son; Julia B. Howell, daughter; Charles C. Howell, son; Mary D. Howell, daughter; all the above being the children of Catherine E. and Emily C. Howell, the first and second wives of Archibald Howell, deceased.

Mr. CLAY. I did not catch the names clearly. Is the name of R. E. L. Howell in the amendment? I did not hear that name read, and thought perhaps it was left out.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report accompanying those names, or will the Senator from Georgia kindly tell us where he got the list of names from?

Mr. BACON. They are, as stated, the names of the children of Archibald Howell, by his two wives, each of whom was a descendant of a Cherokee Indian.

Mr. KEAN. What evidence have we that they should go on the roll?

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Georgia yield to the junior Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. I have the information here in print, if the Senator wants it. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CLAY. I desire the attention of the Senator from New Jersey just one minute. He seemed to ask how many Howells there were. I want to tell him that I knew the father, and I helped bury him, and I know every one of those children. Some of them reside in my town and some of them in Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. KEAN. I believe they were Cherokee Indians. Were they not?

Mr. CLAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEAN. How much Cherokee?

Mr. CLAY. I do not know about that. The proof shows clearly——

Mr. BACON. I will state the fact. They made formal application to the Cherokee national council, at Tahlequah, Ind. T., October, 1887, to become citizens of the Cherokee Nation, and were all duly admitted by the then committee on citizenship as Cherokee Indians by blood, pursuant to an act of the national council of December 8, 1886, to all the rights and privileges of Cherokee citizens as enumerated under section 2, article 1, of the constitution of the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. KEAN. Now, let me ask the Senator from Georgia why were they left off the roll?

Mr. BACON. I was going on to state it for the information of the Senator.

Mr. KEAN. All right; that is what I want to know.

Mr. BACON. They were severally given certificates to that effect, signed by the officers of the commission. Some time later, when they were ready to remove to the Territory, the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes struck their names off the Cherokee roll because of their failure to remove to the Indian Territory within a certain specified limit of time, which failure the parties herein claim arose from circumstances beyond their control, resulting from the illness and subsequent death of their father.

I will state that the matter has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and has been considered carefully by a subcommittee, and while it has not been formally acted upon by the full committee, the members of it with whom I have had the opportunity to confer have approved of it.

Mr. KEAN. I am content, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Answering the inquiry of the junior Senator from Georgia, who asked whether the name of Robert E. Lee Howell appears in the amendment, the Chair informs him that it does.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, is it in order to take up the point of order raised by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] on the amendment upon page 68?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would be gratified if the Senator from Kansas would restate his point of order, and also state what particular subdivision of Rule XVI the provision is out of harmony with.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the amendment changes an existing general law, and is therefore general legislation. Second, it is a claim.

I think perhaps it would be well to make a brief statement of the facts, because this is a very important question. It has been passed upon by Congress several times.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish the Senator to state the point, and then I expect to go over the case anyway.

Mr. CURTIS. I state that the amendment is general legislation, and also it is a claim. I do not know under what clause of the rule it comes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Kansas state to what amendment his point of order is now addressed?

Mr. CURTIS. The amendment on page 68, beginning with line 24 and ending on line 2, page 70.

Mr. McCUMBER. Rule XVI provides that—

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, etc.

I suppose that is enough of the provision of the rule to make the matter clear.

Now, what I want to know of the Senator——

Mr. CURTIS. The point I make is that it changes existing law and is not an appropriation to carry out existing law. It amends the law of 1903. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. McCUMBER. I will take up that proposition.

Mr. CURTIS. If I am going to make a statement, I do not desire to make it piecemeal, and after I have made my statement then I would be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply asked the Senator to give me a statement of the particular clause of the rule upon which his objection is based. He has given that to me. That is eminently satisfactory, and that is all the information I am calling for from the Senator at the present time. I can go on myself and state why I think it does not come within the provisions of the rule, and I desire to do so.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator to wait until I complete my statement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to know the parliamentary situation. I made the point of order. I was recognized by the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, at the request of Senators, I yielded the floor and consented that the point of order might be passed over. After various amendments had been considered, I was again recognized by the Chair and had begun a statement. Can I be taken off the floor?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Kansas to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CURTIS. I yielded to him simply that he might ask me what point of order I was making.

Mr. McCUMBER. There was considerable intervening business after the Senator had been recognized, and then afterwards I was recognized upon the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. I would just as soon make my statement afterwards, if the Senator prefers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Both Senators will have an opportunity to be heard. The point of order, of course, is not debatable, except by consent. The Senator from Kansas will have a chance to be heard.

Mr. McCUMBER. I asked consent that I might debate this particular point of order, and I had read the rule upon which I understood the objection was based. The exception to that rule is as follows:

> Unless it be to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation, etc.

The only question, I suppose, here, Mr. President, is whether this is carrying out a treaty stipulation. If it is carrying out a treaty stipulation, I understand that all agree it is appropriate legislation upon a bill of this character.

Now, I want to go into the facts very briefly and demonstrate to the Senate and to the Chair that it absolutely is a treaty stipulation and that this is a provision carrying out that stipulation.

In 1866 the United States entered into an agreement to investigate and determine the losses sustained by the loyal Creeks and freedmen during the civil war and to further pay the amount found due. This was a treaty. It was called a "treaty" at that time. We have since called the agreements we have made with the Indian tribes "agreements" and not "treaties."

That was the first step; a treaty entered into between the United States and these Cherokee people, which agreed that we should ascertain the amount of their losses and agreed that we should pay their losses. That was a stipulation in what was then called a "treaty" and what we since call an "agreement."

In accordance with the treaty stipulation of 1866 there were appointed General Hazen and Captain Field as commissioners to determine the amount of the claim. That was the second step under the treaty.

The third step was that these commissioners ascertained the claims, and they awarded under the stipulations of that agreement, or, as it was then called, a "treaty," losses to the amount of $1,836,430.41. Of this amount, $100,000 was paid by the Government.

I now come to the next step. Nothing further was done to make payment of that agreement and that stipulation, but March 1, 1901, we entered into another and further agreement with the Creek Indians.

You call the next agreement an agreement and not a treaty, but it was exactly the same as the former and is as much a treaty as the former was. I suppose the Chair will consider all of those agreements as treaties, and that where we use the word "treaty"—a treaty to pay money—the Chair will consider that the use of the word "agreement" will not change the spirit or the letter of that particular rule.

It was agreed then that the claim arising under the treaty of 1866, which was the foundation of the Creek claims, should be submitted to the Senate of the United States as arbitrators; that the Senate of the United States should pass upon the subject, and that whatever the Senate of the United States found due the Creek Nation should be paid to them by the Congress. By whatever name you may call it, whether an agreement or a treaty, that was both a treaty and an agreement entered into between the United States and the Creek Nation.

They further determined that the Senate should make final determination thereof, and that in the event any sum was awarded provision should be immediately made for the payment. That meant that just as soon as the Senate acted upon that proposition an agreement should be made to pay it.

Now, I want to show that we did act as arbitrators upon that proposition, and that we did immediately make provision for its payment; but we paid only in part.

The next step, on account of the Senate not taking immediate action, was on June 23, 1902. Then a memorial was presented by the Creek Nation to the United States, in substance asking the Senate to take cognizance of their agreement and to proceed to make the award.

Then the next step was that the Senate referred, on motion, that petition, or memorial as it is called, to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs for their action and report.

Following this, the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs took cognizance of the matter for the Senate of the United States, and on February 16, 1903, within the time prescribed by the treaty or agreement, and after a full hearing, the committee reported in favor of allowing them in full for their claims the sum of $1,200,000.

When the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs acted upon it—and I want to call the Chair's attention particularly to that—the committee called attention to the fact that it was acting upon the provision of the old treaty asking the Senate to act as a board of arbitration, and that the action of the Senate upon it would be the act of arbitrators. They reported it, however, not as a separate bill; they reported it as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill; but though it was an amendment it was explained at every feature that it was in accordance with the award or the agreement to act as arbitrators and make an award.

Now, I want to call attention to the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The report sets forth the following:

> In pursuance of provisions of section 26 of an act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muskogee or Creek tribe of Indians * * * approved March 1, 1904, there is hereby awarded as a final determination thereof on the so-called "loyal Creek claims" named in said section 25 the sum of $1,200,000.

So the Chair will see that the Senate committee reported it back and asked the Senate to adopt their report as an award.

We did not even stop there. When the matter came up before the Senate, to show that the action was understood by all to be an award therefor and as binding as an obligation could be made against the Government, and to make the matter absolutely certain, in addition to this report, which perhaps few of the Senators may have read, Senator Quarles then specially called the attention of the Senate to the fact in the following words. This is what was stated by Senator Quarles at that time:

> It has occurred to me, sir, that the Senate ought to be advised as to the nature of this amendment, and that it ought not to be passed, coming, as it does, solely from the committee, leaving the Senate entirely in ignorance of the fact that in regard to this amendment it is sitting as a court of arbitration and is not engaged in the ordinary method of legislation.
> Now I rise to lay the facts before the Senate. This is a provision which arises out of the agreement made with the Creek Nation in 1891, whereby it is provided that the Senate shall, within two years, sit in the capacity of a court of arbitration and decide upon this claim, which arises from several treaties made by this Government with the Creek Nation.

When he declared that this claim arose out of several of these treaties, he stated what was absolutely correct:

> The determination of the Senate upon this proposition will amount to an award, upon which an action will lie quite independent of the fact of this provision in the other House of Congress.

So you will see, Mr. President, that there was no possible misunderstanding on the part of the Senate that their action created under the provisions of the previous agreement as binding an obligation upon the Government as could possibly be created.

The Senate thereupon awarded the sum of $1,200,000 by voting favorably upon the bill. The bill then went to conference. The House disagreed to the Senate amendment, and the conferees fixed the matter up in this way: They cut the amount in two, and then added a provision that the Creeks should accept the sum of $600,000, in full payment of this award, and then should sign, in each instance where they received the money, a receipt in full of all claims against the Government of the United States. The question arises, Are they estopped from coming before Congress now and asking for the full payment of their award? Or, placing it in another position, By the act of the arbitration of the Senate, is the Government estopped from denying its legal obligation to pay the full amount that was awarded to the Creek Nation?

Mr. President, if this contract had been made between two private individuals upon an exact equality, and one should acknowledge a debt to the other and then compel him to sign a receipt in full for a half payment, without any other consideration entering into the agreement, there is not a court upon the face of the earth that would enforce it, and there is not a court but would say that this would be no bar to a suit for the balance of the amount due, because there was absolutely no consideration given excepting a less amount than was actually due for a binding obligation. If that is a rule of law that should be applied between persons having the same political and social liabilities and rights, by a far greater reason it should be applied when the relation is a fiduciary relation as between guardian and ward. The great Government of the United States is the guardian of those Indians. That Government entered into an agreement with those Indians that it would take their claim and that the Senate would act as arbitrator upon that claim. The Senate has acted as arbitrator upon that claim. The Senate, as a board of arbitration, awarded them the sum of $1,200,000, and then, as an independent proposition, Congress came in and said: "You, the ward of the Government of the United States, shall accept $600,000; you can get no more, and before we will pay you, the ward, even the $600,000 you must sign a receipt in full."

Such a transaction as that, Mr. President, would be a disgrace to the Government of the United States; it would be criminal as between a trustee and a cestui que trust, and it would be even more so, in my opinion, if a criminal statute could be enforced against the Government.

That is the condition we are met with to-day. I insist that there can be nothing more clear than that this is a payment to be made in pursuance of a treaty obligation. The only difference between a treaty directly stating that the payment shall be made and this case is that the treaty or agreement provided that the Senate should act as an arbitrator and then, after they had arbitrated, that the amount so found due should be paid.

I know it has been urged, as I have understood, before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs that the subsequent action of the Senate, in conjunction with that of the other House, which constitute the Congress, in cutting this down to $600,000 was in effect a change of their attitude and a change of their award in the first instance; but, Mr. President, the legal obligation ensued the moment the vote was announced upon that proposition. After that legal obligation was incurred nothing that could be done either by the Senate alone or by the other House, or by both combined, could change the legal and moral effect of the award made by the Senate. If I understand correctly, the action of the Senate being an award, and the award being made in pursuance of a treaty obligation, therefore this amendment would come clearly within that rule.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When the Senate had ascertained the amount due, according to the terms of the treaty, was it not, in the opinion of the Senator from North Dakota, just as though in law that amount had originally been inserted in the treaty?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no question about it at all.

I think that is all I have to say in reference to the proposition at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely desire very briefly to call the attention of the Chair to a point of order in regard to this amendment, which I do not think has been raised. This is a provision for a private claim, which can only be received to a general appropriation bill when it carries out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment. There is no treaty stipulation cited on the face of this amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amendment, as it is now before the Senate, does so provide.

Mr. LODGE. Not unless it has been changed.

Mr. McCUMBER. It has been changed. I asked that that should be inserted in this provision, so that it would show upon its face, for it was the intention of the committee to have it so show.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the amendment, in line 2, on page 69, after the word "Indians," there have been inserted the words "pursuant to the stipulations of the agreement of March 1, 1901."

Mr. LODGE. The rule requires it to be set forth; but the stipulation in that treaty does not provide for the payment of $600,000 or $1,200,000——

Mr. GALLINGER. Or any other amount.

Mr. LODGE. Or any other amount. It provides for the decision of that claim by the award of the Senate. This provision is not to carry out a treaty stipulation. I make the point of order that the amendment does not come within the rule.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can not see how the Senator can say that this amendment is not to carry out a treaty stipulation, when the stipulation of the treaty is that the award shall be made by the Senate. The Senate made the award, and this is to pay that award. If that is not carrying out the stipulations of a treaty, then I can not clearly understand the English language.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that the amendment comes within the inhibition of the rule is clear from the provision for the payment of the attorney. I think the Senator is right as to the treaty, but there is no stipulation in the treaty for paying any money. The stipulation in the treaty is for the Senate to make the award.

Mr. McCUMBER. I beg the Senator's pardon. The stipulation is to pay such money as should be awarded.

Mr. LODGE. Unquestionably.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to finish the sentence.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. I was merely going to say, without looking at the law, that the first provision in article 12 of the treaty of 1832 reads:

> Shall be submitted to the Senate of the United States for determination; and within two years from the ratification of this agreement the Senate shall make final determination thereof.

In 1903 the law appears, and it says:

> There is hereby awarded as a final determination thereof—

Using the precise language of the treaty. Then it goes on, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has cited, that it should be a full release of the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts merely to say that the provision concerning the release could not appear in the award. That was in the act that was subsequently passed after the award by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. No; but it is stated in the statute that this is "a final determination thereof" under section 26, which carried out the provision of the treaty, and with the treaty stipulations stated on its face.

Mr. President, it seems to me impossible for us to go back of the statute and say what the Senate did. What the Senate did was to assent to the statement that the $600,000 was their "final determination thereof." That is what the Senate ultimately did; but whatever intervening steps may have been taken——

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator——

Mr. LODGE (continuing). The treaty stipulation was fulfilled by that act, for the treaty stipulation was merely that the Senate should make an award.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I am through, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the Senate's act as an arbitration board was completed when it first passed upon that subject in the form in which it passed upon it. The subsequent act of the Senate and of the House of Representatives combined, refers to the payment, and no matter what the declarations were they could not change the act that the Senate had already performed; and when the Senate had performed that act it created a legal obligation against the Government.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if, under a treaty, we are bound by an award of a board of arbitration, that award is paid, and paid by the action of both Houses, unless we are willing to dishonor the Nation in not doing it, and that award is binding on both Houses, but this award, made by the Senate on its preliminary vote, was obviously not binding on both Houses, for both Houses, including the Senate, subsequently said that $600,000 was "the final determination thereof," using the exact language of the treaty.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. After the Senate made the award and completed its work by inserting that award in the bill, as it did, how many times and how long after that was it in the power of the Senate—I mean, acting fairly within the law that binds others than governments—to modify that award which it had once solemnly made?

Mr. LODGE. It could modify the award, it seems to me, until it put it in the form of a statute, and it had no binding force until it did.

Mr. CLAPP. It could not, Mr. President. The treaty did not provide any such thing. The treaty provided that the Senate should make an award; and when that award was once made the function of the Senate as an arbitrator ceased. It could not be continuously modifying an award which it had made any more than an arbitrator who has made an award, has closed his service, and performed his function can go back and reopen it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think the award could have been final until it was put into a statute.

Mr. CLAPP. It could have been made final by a mere resolution of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Ah, but it never was put into a resolution by the Senate; it was put into a statute.

Mr. CLAPP. I beg the Senator's pardon; it was put into a bill——

Mr. LODGE. Well, a bill.

Mr. CLAPP (continuing). Reciting that it was the action of the Senate making an award, and, within a fair interpretation of the law, by which anybody but the Government would be bound, it passed beyond the power of the Senate to modify that award.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CLAPP. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the Senator from Minnesota the form of bill that was passed by the Senate in this case? I should like to see it. It seems to me it is quite important.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have the form of the award that was passed by the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, whatever you may call it.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not a bill; it is not a law; it is simply an award.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to see it. I think the Senate ought to see it.

Mr. CLAPP. This is the language——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I think, in justice to myself, I should state that the position taken by the House conferees was that there was no legal award, and that this claim had never been properly submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs so as to give them jurisdiction. I should like to make that point clear.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the provision read, so that the Senate may know what form this so-called "award" took.

Mr. OWEN. With the permission of the Senator from Minnesota, I will read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. The original treaty under which this amount is proposed to be paid was the treaty of 1866, article 4 of which reads as follows:

> Immediately after ratification of this treaty the United States agree to ascertain the amount due the respective soldiers who enlisted in the Federal Army, loyal refugee Indians and freedmen, in proportion to their several losses, and to pay the amount awarded each—

That was the language of the treaty. The amount was ascertained immediately afterwards in the way proposed by the treaty by a commission, consisting of Gen. W. B. Hazen and Capt. F. A. Field, of the Regular Army, who were designated, under the terms of the treaty, to make this ascertainment. They found that out of $5,800,000, or some such amount of claims, there was proven by positive, reliable proof $1,800,000. They designated by name the individuals, allowed to each the amount by an award, and reported it. The United States paid $100,000 to these people, which was distributed pro rata, and thereafter failed to pay.

When the Government desired the Creek Indians to allot their lands, to give up their tribal government and become a part of a new State, it was stipulated that the Senate of the United States should determine what amount should be paid them. The claim, although an award in the first case, under the treaty of 1866, had become by neglect of long years weakened in public esteem, but it was none the less an award under the treaty of 1866, and ought to have been paid, in common conscience, in pursuance of the pledge of the United States to these people to pay them the amount ascertained. The amount was ascertained, as agreed by the treaty of 1866, and it ought to have been paid to them. Then they patiently but humbly waited upon the pleasure of the United States, the sovereign power, and finally their petition, under the agreement of 1891, came to the Senate upon a memorial of Isparhecher, their ex-principal chief, and himself a loyal Creek. That memorial, as shown by the RECORD, was transmitted to the Indian Committee, which, after consideration, reported back an item on the Indian appropriation bill, making in form an award of $1,200,000 to these people. Before referring to the action of the Senate upon this item on the Indian appropriation bill I should like to call attention to the form of this item. It reads as follows:

> In pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of an act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muskogee (or Creek) tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1901, there is hereby awarded, as a final determination thereof—

Before the Senate passed upon that item, which was presented to the Senate, Senator Quarles of Wisconsin rose in his place and said, speaking to the Senate:

> It has occurred to me, sir, that the Senate ought to be advised as to the nature of this amendment, and that it ought not to be passed, coming, as it does, solely from the committee, leaving the Senate entirely in ignorance of the fact that in regard to this amendment it is sitting as a court of arbitration and is not engaged in the ordinary method of legislation.
> Now, I rise to lay the facts before the Senate. This is a provision which arises out of the agreement made with the Creek Nation in 1891, whereby it is provided that the Senate shall, within two years, sit in the capacity of a court of arbitration and decide upon this claim, which arises from several treaties made by this Government with the Creek Nation.
> The determination of the Senate upon this proposition will amount to an award, upon which an action will lie quite independent of the fact of this provision in the other House of Congress.

Mr. President, I do not think it judicious to enlarge upon the arguments already made. I call attention, however, to the fact that this payment is in pursuance of article 4 of the treaty of 1866, which is not an agreement, but comes within the dignity of a treaty under the law of the United States. Therefore the amendment is not subject to the point of order, because it is in pursuance of a treaty.

I further call attention, before taking my seat, to the fact that the Senate of the United States—not the House of Representatives—was the board of arbitration; that the Senate was not acting through a law, but was acting by expressing its will, understanding that it was sitting as a board of arbitration. It expressed that will, and put the sum of money due these people at $1,200,000; and they are forever barred from demanding anything in excess of that.

I do not agree, and I can not be silent when such a suggestion is made, that the Senate, sitting as a court of arbitration, may at any subsequent time after the declaration of its judgment modify that judgment and change it. If that be true, then no decision of a court or of this body would have any finality. There would be no repose in a judgment, but the plaintiffs might at any time come and attack the judgment of the court, or of the Senate sitting as a court, and there would be no peace. The rule of law is that there shall be repose, and when a competent tribunal passes upon a question definitely and precisely, understanding that it is sitting as a court of arbitration, the decision is final.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with what the Senator says about the finality of the judgment. My point, however, was that a preliminary vote was not a final judgment. The final judgment is the provision of the statute.

Mr. OWEN. I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks the report submitted by me from the Committee on Indian Affairs on February 11, 1909, on the bill (S. 3423) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made them by the Senate on the 16th day of February, 1903.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The report referred to is as follows:

> Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 3423:
>
> The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3423) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made them by the Senate on the 16th day of February, 1903, report the same back without amendment and recommend its passage.
>
> By the treaty of 1866 the United States agreed to investigate and determine the losses sustained by the loyal Creek Indians and freedmen during the civil war and to pay the amount or amounts found due.
>
> Article 4 of said treaty provides as follows:
> "Immediately after ratification of this treaty the United States agree to ascertain the amount due the respective soldiers who enlisted in the Federal Army, loyal refugee Indians and freedmen, in proportion to their several losses, and to pay the amount awarded each, in the following manner, to wit: A census of the Creeks shall be taken by the agent of the United States for said nation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and a roll of the names of all soldiers that enlisted in the Federal Army, loyal refugee Indians and freedmen, be made by him. The superintendent of Indian affairs for the southern superintendency and the agent of the United States for the Creek Nation shall proceed to investigate and determine from said roll the amounts due the respective refugee Indians, and shall transmit to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for his approval, and that of the Secretary of the Interior, their awards, together with the reasons therefor." (14 Stat., 787.)
> In accordance with this treaty agreement, Gen. W. B. Hazen and Capt. F. A. Field, of the Regular Army, the latter having been detailed as union agent for the Five Civilized Tribes, were designated as commissioners to ascertain and determine the amount of such leases. This report was made with exhaustive care and will be found in detail in Exhibit 1 hereto. (S. Doc. No. 420, 57th Cong., 1st sess., p. 18.)
>
> These awards amounted to $1,836,430.41. Prior to this award the Government made advance payment of $100,000 (16 Stats., 341), but no further payments were made, and on March 1, 1901, the United States entered into the following agreement with the Creek Indians.
>
> Section 26 of that agreement reads as follows:
>
> "All claims of whatsoever nature, including the 'loyal Creek claim,' under article 4 of the treaty of 1866, and the 'self-emigration claim,' under article 12 of the treaty of 1832, which the tribe or any individual thereof may have against the United States, or any other claim arising under the treaty of 1866, or any claim which the United States may have against said tribe, shall be submitted to the Senate of the United States for determination; and within two years from the ratification of this agreement the Senate shall make final determination thereof; and in the event that any sums are awarded the said tribe, or any citizen thereof, provision shall be made for immediate payment of same.
> "Of these claims, the 'loyal Creek claim,' for what they suffered because of their loyalty to the United States Government during the civil war, long delayed, is so urgent in its character that the parties to this agreement express the hope that it may receive consideration and be determined at the earliest practicable moment." (31 Stat., 869.)

Thus, as will be observed, the Senate was authorized to investigate and pass upon said claims, "or, in other words, to act as a board of arbitration."

The Senate of the United States on June 23, 1902 (Exhibit 1, S. Doc. No. 420, 57th Cong., 1st sess.), referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs the memorial of Isparhecher, ex-chief Muskogee (Creek) Nation, for himself as loyal Creek claimant, and as attorney in fact for others.

Testimony was taken, arguments heard (Exhibit 1), and on February 16, 1903, the Indian Committee made the following report:

"In compliance with the requirements of section 26 of an act entitled 'An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muskogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes,' approved March 1, 1901 (31 Stat. L., 869), and in conformity with the prayer of the memorial of Isparhecher, referred to this committee by the Senate, the Committee on Indian Affairs herewith submits the following report and recommendation:"

Then follows the statement of the case, and attention is called to the fact that the agreement of 1901 provides: "That within two years from the ratification of said agreement the Senate shall make full determination of said claims."

In 1902 Isparhechar, ex-chief of the Creek Nation, on behalf of himself and other loyal Creek claimants, had submitted his memorial to the Senate, asking that it should proceed as soon as practicable, as provided by said act, to examine said claims and to award the amount alleged to be due. Said memorial was referred to the subcommittee. The committee recommended to the Senate the payment of $1,200,000 by its report of February 16, 1903, aforesaid, to be passed on by the Senate in an award. (S. Doc. 3088, 57th Cong., 2d sess.)

The committee submitted to the Senate an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, in connection with this report, on page 33, after line 22, as follows:

"In pursuance to the provisions of section 26 of an act to ratifiy and confirm on agreement with the Muskogee (or Creek) tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1901, there is hereby awarded, as a final determination thereof, on the so-called "loyal Creek claims" named in said section 25, the sum of $1,200,000, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and made immediately available, etc., and providing in the proposed item for attorney's fees."

This item will be found on page 2252 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 16, 1903. It was quite thoroughly discussed on the floor of the Senate, and it was pointed out by a member of the Indian Committee [Mr. Quarels] that the action of the Senate would be an award of the United States in the following language.

Speaking to the Senate, Mr. Quarles said:

"It has occurred to me, sir, that the Senate ought to be advised as to the nature of this amendment, and that it ought not to be passed, coming as it does solely from the committee, leaving the Senate entirely in ignorance of the fact that in regard to this amendment, it is sitting as a court of arbitration, and is not engaged in the ordinary method of legislation.

"Now I rise to lay the facts before the Senate. This is a provision which arises out of the agreement made with the Creek Nation in 1891, whereby it is provided that the Senate shall, within two years, sit in the capacity of a court of arbitration, and decide upon this claim, which arises from several treaties made by this Government with the Creek Nation.

"The determination of the Senate upon this proposition will amount to an award, upon which an action will lie quite independent of the fact of this provision in the other House of Congress" (p. 2253).

The Senate thereupon agreed to the item without objection (p. 2254).

Thereafter, when the matter went into conference it was cut down to $600,000, and it was provided that the claimants should execute an acquittance to the Government in full for their claims upon receipt of the $600,000, which, after deducting the attorneys' fees, was distributed among them.

The loyal Creeks' claim was again considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and in its report of January 30, 1907 (S. Rept. 5689, 59th Cong., 2d sess.), made the following report:

LOYAL CREEK CLAIMS.

"In 1901 Congress enacted into the statute an agreement made by the Dawes Commission with the loyal Creek Indians whereby their claim was to be 'submitted to the Senate of the United States for determination,' the Senate acting as a court of arbitration. The act provided that whatever sum was awarded 'provision shall be made for immediate payment of the same.' (31 Stat. L., 869, sec. 26.)

"In pursuance of the act the claim of the loyal Creeks was duly submitted to the Senate and sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs for investigation. The committee examined treaties and records, heard testimony from the claimants, both oral and by depositions, heard counsel, who submitted briefs, and finally reported its findings to the Senate as an item on the Indian appropriation bill, which read as follows:

"'In pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of an act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muskogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1901, there is hereby awarded, as a final determination thereof, on the so-called "loyal Creek claims," named in said section 26, the sum of $1,200,000, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and made immediately available. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the loyal Creek Indians and freedmen named in articles 3 and 4 of the treaty with the Creek Nation of Indians of June 14, 1866, the said sum of $1,200,000, to be paid to such Indians and freedmen only whose names appear on the list of awards made in their behalf by W. B. Hazen and F. A. Field, as commissioners on behalf of the United States to ascertain the losses of said Indians and freedmen, as provided in said articles 3 and 4; and such payments shall be made in proportion of the awards as set out in said lists, and shall be in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims under said articles 3 and 4: Provided, however, That if any of said loyal Creek Indians or freedmen whose names are on said list of awards shall have died, then the amount or amounts due such deceased person or persons, respectively, shall be paid to their heirs or legal representatives: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to first withhold from the amount herein appropriated and pay to S. W. Peel, of Bentonville, Ark., the attorney of said loyal Creeks and freedmen, a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amount herein appropriated, as provided by written contracts between the said S. W. Peel and the claimants herein, the same to be payment in full for all legal and other services rendered by him, or those employed by him, and for all disbursements and other expenditures had by him in behalf of said claimants in pursuance of said contract. And further, said Secretary is authorized and directed to pay to David M. Hodge, a Creek Indian, of Tulsa, in the Creek Nation, a sum equal to 5 per cent of the amount herein appropriated, which payment shall be in full for all claims of every kind made by said David M. Hodge, or by those claiming under him, by reason of any engagement, agreement, or understanding had between him and said loyal Creek Indians.'" (Cong. Rec., vol. 36, pt. 3, 57th Cong., 2d sess., p. 252.)

A discussion followed in which the attention of the Senate was specifically called to the fact that by the adoption of that item the Senate announced its award under the law. In the language of Senator Quarles, who was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs and was opposed to the award:

"The determination of the Senate upon this proposition will amount to an award upon which an action will lie, quite independently of the fate of this provision in the other House of Congress."

In a word, the Senate was fully apprised of the whole matter, and then passed the item without any dissenting votes. (See pages 2252, 2253, and 2254 of the RECORD above cited.)

The House disagreed generally to the amendment made by the Senate to the Indian bill, and the measure went to conference. When the conferees made their final report the item carrying the award had been modified by reducing the amount found by the Senate from $1,200,000 to $600,000, and provided that the Indians should accept the same as full satisfaction of all claim and demand growing out of said loyal Creek claims, and that the payment should be a full release of the Government. (32 Stat. L., 995.)

The money thus appropriated, being only one-half of the amount awarded, was accordingly paid to the Indians. But in spite of the fact that they accepted, under compulsion, that amount under the terms of the act rather than lose all payment for their losses, yet they feel that the amount awarded them under the conditions of a solemn agreement between themselves and the Government has been only one-half paid, and they are now entitled to the balance. They respectfully submit the following reasons for their present claim:

I. The losses they sustained were the direct result of their loyalty to the Government. For this loyalty they were not only driven from their homes, but many of them—men, women, and children—in their flight from the Indian Territory to Kansas during the winter of 1861–62 lost their lives by attacks made upon them by other Indians and by organized whites, and all of them suffered untold hardships. More than 1,500 of the men entered the Union Army. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his report for the year 1865, says:

"The Creeks were nearly divided in sentiment at the opening of the war, about 6,500 having gone with the rebellion, while the remainder, under the lead of the brave old chief, Opothleyoholo, resisted all temptations of the rebel agents and of leading men, like John Ross, among the Indians, and fought their way out of the country northward, in the winter, tracked by their bloody feet upon the frozen ground. They lost everything—house, homes, stock, everything they possessed. Many joined the United States Army." (Commissioner's Report, 1865, p. 39.)

II. The Government promised them that they should be reimbursed for their losses. During the negotiations with the Five Civilized Tribes, preceding the reconstruction treaty of 1865, the commissioners, on the part of the United States, assured the Indians, loyal and disloyal, that "those who have been loyal, although their nation may have gone over to the enemy, will be liberally provided for and dealt with." Again the Indians were assured that above all other considerations it was the determination of the Government "to recognize in a signal manner the loyalty of those who had fought upon the side of the Government and endured great sufferings on its behalf." (Commissioner's report, 1865, pp. 34 and 299.)

And article 4 of the treaty of 1866 (14 Stat. L., 787) undertook to ascertain their losses and see that the same were paid. This ascertainment was subsequently made by two officers of the army—Gen. W. B. Hazen and Capt. F. A. Field. The Indians filed claims with this commission amounting, in the aggregate, to $5,090,808.50. The two commissioners, in keeping with their military training, insisted on having every item proven by witnesses presented before them. The impoverished Indians scattered over a territory twice as large as the State of Massachusetts, without property—not even a pony left them—and with many of their witnesses dead or left back in Kansas, could only comply in part. But they did prove the loss, before this exact and exacting court, of property found to be worth $1,836,830.41. This amount was awarded by General Hazen and Captain Field and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and a qualified approval affixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

III. The accuracy of the findings of Hazen and Field was never challenged by the Government. Using them as a basis, the sum of $100,000 was paid to the claimants. The Indians refused to take any portion of this latter amount until assured by General Williamson, the government agent authorized to make the payments, that the balance would be paid. Thus, when the matter came before the Senate as arbitrator, the Indians claimed the full amount of their losses as found ($1,836,830.41), less the $100,000 which had been paid, making $1,736,830.41. They also claimed interest for the thirty-six years that the claims had remained unpaid. This based on the fact that the Government usually paid interest on Indian funds.

The Indian Committee representing the Senate in making the investigation determined, upon some theory unknown to the claimant, to reduce the amount to $1,200,000. The loyal Indians of the Choctaws and Chickasaws had been paid the full amount of their losses as found, and their claims had not been cut by the commissioners who passed upon them.

The claims of the loyal Seminoles were submitted to the arbitration of the Senate by the same act that provided for the submission of the loyal Creek claims. The Senate reduced by 45 per cent the amount which the commissioners had allowed for losses, and then added interest at the rate of 5 per cent for some thirty-three years. The reduction of the principal was based on the fact that the Indians had been allowed all they claimed. But the reduced principal and the interest brought the award to $186,000, while the original allowance was $213,888.95.

The Choctaws and Chickasaws were thus paid the full amount of losses as they claimed them, and paid promptly after the date of the reconstruction treaty; and the Seminoles were generously dealt with by the Senate, a large amount of interest having been added to their claim. Yet when the Senate came to deal with the loyal Creek claims, which had been already cut by Commissioners Hazen and Field about 62 per cent, it further reduced the principal something more than 33 per cent (from $1,836,830.41 to $1,200,000), and refused to allow any interest. The claimants would have been glad to have accepted this award and been allowed, after the thirty-six years of waiting, to go in peace.

IV. A fourth reason why the balance of the award should now be paid is the fact that the Indians submitted the whole matter to the Senate, trusting with the simplicity of children in its honor and justice. They were heard, the award was announced, and they returned to their homes with the feeling of perfect security that at least that much was safe and the $1,200,000 would be paid them and the long controversy ended.

They had no knowledge of what was transpiring in the conference room. They were neither notified nor heard, yet provision was made for paying only one-half of their judgment, and conditioned that they should receive this as payment in full. The award between private parties would have been final and binding. (Wright v. Tebbitts, 1 Otto, 252.)

V. Congress in its legislative capacity could not legally alter the award. The Senate, in pursuance of an agreement and a law, was the sole arbitrator. It formally announced its award. It never again opened the case. It never again sat as an arbitration board. Its sole connection with the matter thereafter was as a branch of Congress in its political capacity. Its function as a court was terminated. The question of finding what was due these loyal Creeks, who, in the language of the act providing for the arbitration, "had suffered because of their loyalty to the United States Government during the civil war," was fully closed.

VI. To coerce the Indians to sign receipts in full for a part of their award, and refuse to pay the balance, would, if done by an individual, be immoral. These untutored wards of the Nation, who have been trained for generations to depend upon agents and other officers of the Government in all business transactions, and to do whatever they are told to do are presented with a sum of money and a receipt and told to sign the latter in order to secure the payment. Will such a receipt be held as a bar against the individual Indian? Is there not such a sense of injustice growing from the facts of this case as will compel the payment of the whole award? The Indians depend more upon such considerations than upon legal rights, which might be asserted as to the frailty of receipts in general as evidence of payment, and especially as to receipts procured by coercion or duress.

VII. There must be no misunderstanding as to who these claimants are. They are simply and solely individual Indians. Their names, the property lost, and the amount due each for his particular loss, are all set out in the findings of Commissioners Hazen and Field. The Creek tribe has no jurisdiction over the matter. On these claims the United States owed nothing to the tribe, and the latter never had any legal relation to them. The relinquishment of the tribe in its capacity as an organization can not have and should not have any effect on the pending claim.

Your committee recommends that the bill S. 3423 do pass, or that an item be placed upon the Indian appropriation bill to provide for the payment of the balance of this award.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, there was no agreement upon the part of these Indians that they would submit their claim to the joint action of the Senate and the House of Representatives. Their agreement was that they would submit it to arbitration at the hands of the Senate. While Congress has the power to ignore that, still the Senate ought not to repudiate its obligation.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this is not a new question; it has been before the Senate and the country at various times. Of course, it is a long time since this obligation arose; but it was not the fault of the people who are interested in it that it was not long ago settled.

The Creek Nation was divided into two parts. Some were loyal and some were disloyal. After the war they made a claim, which was settled, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has said, by the treaty of 1866. I do not care whether you call it a treaty or whether you call it an agreement, the fact is that the Government entered into a solemn obligation to dispose of this meritorious claim, a claim that ought to appeal to every man in the Senate.

These people lost their property and rendered to this Government a signal service. They rendered that service under most trying conditions. We talk about the patriotism of those who went into the Union Army. These men went into the Union Army in a community that was very nearly equally divided between the two opposing forces. They were loyal to the Government. They suffered intensely in person, in property, and in feeling. In 1866 we determined that they should be compensated for what they had lost, and we fixed the tribunal to determine what they had lost. This has been a most scandalous proceeding. There has been, perhaps, more criticism of it than of any other action of the Government during the last fifty years.

Proceeding according to our own stipulation, the claim was submitted to the body that we selected. We found—whether the finding can or can not be technically called an award—that this amount was due to those people, and we said in the treaty when we found it was due we should pay it. Was it necessary to provide that we would pay the award after it was made? It became a solemn award, as Senator Quarles said, upon which an action would lie if it had been between two individuals.

We have the power, we have the strength to say we will pay the award or we will not pay it. As the chairman of the committee has said, the Indians did not agree to leave it to the Congress of the United States. They agreed to leave it to the Senate. The Senate determined it. If it was possible to make an award by this body, we made an award; we called it an award, and by all the rules of common law and justice it was an award. In the first place, we said that it was an award. This body said:

> This is a just debt which the Government ought to pay and that it is under obligations to pay.

When the House of Representatives would not agree to appropriate the amount the Senate had fixed, the Senate consented—and it ought never to have done so—that that amount should be cut down by one-half. Did anybody give any reason why it should be cut down? Not at all. It was cut down simply because the House said they would not agree to the amount determined upon by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. May the Chair, for his information, ask the Senator from Colorado a question? Was the award reduced from $1,200,000 to $600,000 by the action of Congress?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the committee of conference, in order to get an agreement, decided that instead of appropriating $1,200,000 we should appropriate $600,000.

Mr. LODGE. That was the action of both Houses.

Mr. TELLER. It was the action of both Houses. We agreed to it, and it became a law. I do not mean to say that we could not by law set aside that award. I know, Mr. President, if it had been an award in favor of Great Britain we would not have dared to have set it aside. I know if such action had been taken by individuals it would have been regarded as criminal.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the award had been set aside, it would have been a breach of the treaty, would it not?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly; it would have been a breach of the treaty and a breach of common decency, I may say. Through a technicality you may get rid of it; you may say that we have provided for the payment of $600,000; but, Mr. President, justice will not be done if we repudiate the treaty.

I do not believe the point of order ought to be raised against the amendment; but, if it is, it will not be creditable to the Senate to declare that we may escape the payment of a just debt by a technicality.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator I think will see the distinction between the question whether the claim is meritorious, equitable, and just, and the question whether it is proper upon an appropriation bill. It is a question of the interpretation of the rule and not with respect to the merits of the claim.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. Some people at least have been trying for several years to have this injustice righted. There has been complaint from those people. I was down in that country a few years ago, and the presiding officer of that nation spoke to me about the injustice of it. I do not believe any man who has ever looked at it will not say it is unjust, and I do say it would be rather remarkable if we should hold these people strictly to the rule.

As the Senator from North Dakota says, these were our wards. If these people had standing in court as an individual would have under these circumstances, there is not a court on the continent having jurisdiction which would not right that wrong—not one. A guardian can not hold a pistol at the head of his ward——

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment, as I wish to make a suggestion in answer to the question that was put by the Chair himself as to what effect the subsequent action of Congress would have.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. The point we are making here is that the Senate, no matter in what form its action took effect, was a court of arbitration; and when it acted as a court of arbitration, any subsequent act as lawgivers would not change its previous award.

To make it clear, I want to put it in this light: Suppose the arbitrators agreed upon had been the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney-General, instead of the Senate of the United States, and they had made an arbitration and had decided that the payment should be $1,200,000; and then the Senate should pass a bill for $1,200,000, the House should cut it down to $600,000, and the Senate agree to that, with any stipulation it saw fit. Would that in the slightest degree affect or set aside the previous award made by these parties? And if it would not set aside an award made by parties entirely outside of the Senate, neither could it set aside an award that was made in the Senate. They could refuse to pay, but they could not change a fact that was once established and came into existence any more than they could say that the 25th day of last December was not a certain holiday.

Mr. TELLER. No, Mr. President; the award will ever stand. We may refuse to pay it, but, as I have said, it will not be to our credit if we do. There is no more just debt that the Government ever owed than this.

There are two phases of it. We deliberately provided the tribunal to determine it. That tribunal determined it. It was our duty as the guardian of the ward to have paid it. We refused; and we stipulated with them that "You shall not have any of this money unless you receipt for the whole." As the Senator said, that could not have been done between individuals if the debt was just.

Mr. President, this is a good deal of money; it is quite a large sum. We are not paying any interest on it. I suppose the real beneficiaries, those who were entitled to it years ago, are dead. That has been the trouble with many of our transactions. We wait until it is too late for the people who ought to be benefited by our acts of justice to take part in or to have any advantage from them. But the obligation rests upon us the same, and the heirs of these dead men are entitled to it as much as their parents were.

I believe it would be to the credit of the Government of the United States to pay this debt. I believe it would save it from criticism in the future such as it has incurred in the past, in a transaction not of magnitude enough to justify dishonor on our part, if any such thing could be conceived of. I believe it ought to be paid. I think the point which the Senator from North Dakota has made with respect to the point of order is well taken, and I do not think the point of order is well taken. The amendment is not out of order, in my judgment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in the first place, in my judgment, if the finding of the Committee on Indian Affairs giving to the loyal Creeks $1,200,000 was a legal award, then the point of order is not well taken. But, in my judgment, there was no legal award, and before taking up that question I desire to make a very brief statement in reference to the claim.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] say the original proposition is based upon articles 3 and 4 of the treaty of 1866, which is true. Those articles were never passed upon by the Supreme Court, but they were passed upon by the Court of Claims, and that court, in passing upon the question, says:

> The court decided as a conclusion of law that "all claims which the petitioners had against the United States for damages and losses growing out of the late rebellion were adjusted, settled, and released by the treaty of 1866 (14 Stat. L., 785), and the payment thereunder of $100,000, as provided in article 3, and that the claimants, having received that sum, are not entitled to be paid any further amount."

That was the finding of the only court that ever passed upon the articles of the treaty of 1866.

In 1901, when the agreement was made with the Creek Indians, a provision was placed in the agreement that the loyal Creeks' claims should be referred to the Senate of the United States as a board of arbitration. There was but one way for the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs to get jurisdiction of the claim, and that was for the Senate to refer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs and give that committee authority to act for this body. That was never done. A memorial was presented to the Senate which, in the regular course of business and under the rules of the Senate, would of necessity go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was not a reference of the claim to that committee for settlement. The Senate never authorized that committee to act in its stead. It took jurisdiction without any direction upon the part of the Senate.

Now, when it took jurisdiction of the claim it selected a bill that could not originate in this body, and it placed its finding upon that measure. When it selected that measure to put the item upon it was bound by the action of the House and the Senate on that measure, because it placed it upon a bill that could not become a law until it had been agreed upon by both the Senate and House and was approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas what materiality there is, when we are considering the rights of one party to an arbitration, as to how far the other party must go, in being bound, acting jointly with some other party?

Mr. CURTIS. The position I take now is the same as the one taken by me when the case was before the conferees, that had the claim been referred to the Senate committee with authority to act, there would have been a hearing, both sides would have been represented, and, as was contended in the conference, if both sides had been heard—and that was the judgment of the House conferees—no allowance would have been made; that the committee would have followed the decision of the Court of Claims.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Kansas says that this matter was not referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, but that the Committee on Indian Affairs took the papers, considered the matter, and reported their finding to the Senate, which the Senate confirmed. Was not the action of the Senate in doing that a ratification of what the Senate committee had done, and is not the ratification equivalent to an original authorization?

Mr. CURTIS. It is not so in this case, because it was placed in an appropriation bill that was subject to amendment on the floor of the Senate, was subject to amendment in the House of Representatives, and if the House bill was amended in the Senate, it was subject to change in conference; and therefore they were bound by whatever changes were made, and the award did not become final until the bill was finally acted upon and was signed by the President of the United States.

Mr. President, in that bill in conference the conferees agreed to it amended as follows: To reduce the amount to $600,000, and they put in this proviso:

> That said sum shall be accepted by said Indians in full payment and satisfaction of all claim and demand growing out of said loyal Creek claims, and the payment thereof shall be a full release of the Government from any such claim or claims.

Amended in that way the Indian appropriation bill, including this item, became a law.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me for a question?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand the Senator to say that if the action of the committee amounted to an award, the point of order would not lie. Am I correct?

Mr. CURTIS. In my judgment, if the finding of the committee as reported was a legal award, the point of order would not lie, but, in my judgment, it is not a legal award, because both sides were not given a chance to be heard, and the committee had no jurisdiction over the item, and the only award made was the provision for the payment of $600,000 in full.

Mr. ALDRICH. Of the Senate?

Mr. CURTIS. I mean of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. But if it was an award, the point of order would not lie?

Mr. CURTIS. I mean of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; I supposed so.

Mr. CURTIS. In carrying out the provisions of the appropriation act the Secretary of the Interior made the payments, and a receipt was taken, which is as follows:

> We acknowledge to have received from J. Blair Shoenfelt ———, and the same is hereby accepted as a full and complete settlement of our claim against the United States for property taken or destroyed during the civil war, as provided by the act of Congress approved March 31, 1903, and the act of the Creek council, May 3, 1903.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator another question. If the action of the Senate amounted to an award, would the Senator contend as a legal proposition that these loyal Creeks would be bound by the subsequent proceedings unless there was a new and additional consideration for the acceptance of this in lieu of the award?

Mr. CURTIS. The position I take is that it was not a legal award, and that it did not become an award until it was finally acted upon.

Mr. CLAPP. But if the Senator will pardon me, I should like to get his view as to that situation.

Mr. CURTIS. I will say very frankly to the Senator that if it was a legal award, then I do not believe the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CLAPP. No; I am not talking about that now. I am asking the Senator to give me his view upon this question: If that was a legal award, would the subsequent proceedings, unless they involved a new and additional consideration, be binding in the acceptance of the $600,000 in lieu of the award?

Mr. CURTIS. I think if the claimant accepted the money in full payment, and it was acted upon by the tribe, as it was, they would be bound by their receipt in full.

Mr. CLAPP. Without any additional consideration?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator has just used the term "if it was acted upon by the tribe." Was there any tribal existence in 1903?

Mr. CURTIS. There was; and I want to read what the tribe did.

Mr. HEYBURN. Had they not taken their lands in severalty prior to that time?

Mr. CURTIS. The land had not been fully allotted.

Mr. HEYBURN. The allotments had not been fully approved?

Mr. CURTIS. No, sir. It appears that the national council of the Muskogee (Creek) Nation, approved by the principal chief on May 23, 1903, accepted the $600,000, appropriated by said act of Congress, in full payment and satisfaction of all claims and demands growing out of the "loyal Creek claims," said payment to be a "final release of the Government from all such claim or claims." Said resolution was approved by the President on June 6, 1903.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the tribal relation existed, it would be valid; otherwise not.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the important fact that this award was due to private individuals, and not to the members of the Creek tribe; that the Creek tribe as such had no function in regard to this award to private persons; and answering the Senator from Idaho further in the purpose of his question a few moments ago, I call his attention to the fact that these persons had been made citizens of the United States March 3, 1901.

Mr. HEYBURN. I so understood.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the Senator to say that these are not tribal, but private and individual claims.

Mr. OWEN. It is an award in bulk to the individuals on the list made by General Hazen under the fourth article of the treaty of 1866.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will permit me for a moment, it was to be paid to the loyal Creek Indians and freedmen named in articles 3 and 4 of the treaty with the Creek Nation of Indians of June 14, 1866; the said sum of $1,200,000 to be paid to such Indians and freedmen only whose names appear on the list of awards made in their behalf by W. B. Hazen and F. A. Field as commissioners on behalf of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. Who made this agreement originally? Was it the Creek Nation or these individuals?

Mr. CURTIS. The council or the representatives of the tribe, and it was agreed to by the members of the tribe.

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not make any difference. It was made for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. ALDRICH. Was there any authority given by these individuals to anybody to make this agreement? Was it a treaty or simply an agreement?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Kansas knows that I was very much in doubt in committee about the same point, and there was not a great deal of testimony adduced there which really gave much light on the subject. I should now like to ask the Senator from Kansas, what, approximately, was the number of loyal Creek Indians during the war?

Mr. CURTIS. I think the commission found there were 1,523; that is, Indians and freedmen.

Mr. DIXON. Adult male persons?

Mr. CURTIS. Indians and freedmen.

Mr. DIXON. Did that include women and children?

Mr. CURTIS. I should judge not, unless they were property owners.

Mr. DIXON. They have already been paid $700,000 by the Government, have they not?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; $700,000.

Mr. DIXON. What did those Indians at that time own which could have been destroyed amounting to $1,200,000 in personal property?

Mr. CURTIS. Horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, forage, and property of various kinds. They presented claims to the amount of $5,000,000, and the two officers appointed to look into the claim found that property had been destroyed to the amount of $1,836,000——

Mr. DIXON. What kind of property was it that was destroyed?

Mr. CURTIS. As I say, horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, and other property taken and destroyed.

Mr. DIXON. That would be a thousand dollars to an Indian.

Mr. CURTIS. And their houses were destroyed and forage was taken, and everything of that kind. All the property they had was destroyed.

Mr. OWEN. To the family, not to the individual.

Mr. DIXON. To an Indian. There were only 1,500 Indians on the list, and an award of $1,200,000 (and $100,000 had already been paid) would amount to nearly a thousand dollars to each Indian. Unless they are different from any Indians I have ever known——

Mr. OWEN. The Senator has never known as good Indians as these.

Mr. DIXON (continuing). It would require a wild stretch of the imagination to think that there was a thousand dollars' worth of cayuses to each individual Indian on the reservation.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Montana that these people were civilized people for a long period of time. Back four or five generations they were civilized, and they had very extensive property. They went out into this western country in 1832.

Mr. DIXON. These were the Georgia Creeks?

Mr. OWEN. The Georgia Creeks, of the Mobile basin. They went out there, and it takes no stretch of the imagination to see how a very small number of cattle would increase in so long a period of time—thirty-odd years. Those people were quite well off. They put in claims for over $5,000,000 worth of property, and they offered evidence so far as they could. But they were scattered all over the country.

What I rose to point out was that while there were only a certain number of these individuals, they obviously must have been heads of families, because the children were not the owners of property, and the head of a family would naturally for himself and as the head of the family make the claim.

Mr. DIXON. How many disloyal Creeks were there at that time?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know what was the number of disloyal Creeks. There were some disloyal Creeks. But this does not turn on the matter of disloyalty or loyalty. It turns on the question of the pledge of the Government to ascertain this money and to pay it; and the fourth article of the treaty of 1866 said that the Government would pay it when ascertained in a fixed manner, and therefore it becomes an obligation of the United States not to be treated lightly nor to be set aside on the theory that these people could not have had what the chosen agents of the United States determined, upon proof, they did have.

Mr. DIXON. Was the treaty of 1866 ratified by the Senate?

Mr. OWEN. It was ratified by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. DIXON. In what year?

Mr. OWEN. In 1866.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Montana asked the number of disloyal Creeks. I see it stated in the report which the Senator from Oklahoma was kind enough to hand me:

> The Creeks were nearly divided in sentiment at the opening of the war, about 6,500 having gone with the rebellion, while the remainder, under the lead of the brave old chief, Opothleyoholo, resisted all temptations of the rebel agents and of leading men, like John Ross, among the Indians, and fought their way out of the country.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not desire to take up any further time, except to make this statement: I believe this item is subject to the point of order, because it is general legislation. It provides the manner of paying this claim, and it of necessity amends the general appropriation act of 1903. I submit, further, if this had been a legal award the committee would have reported the award to the Senate, the Senate would have approved of the award and said that it approved the award of the committee, amounting to $1,200,000, in settlement of this claim; and if the Senate had acted in that way you would have had a legal award; but the item was added to an appropriation bill, and as it finally became a law the item was for $600,000 in full payment, and this is binding upon the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I beg to ask the Senator from Kansas a question.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Was any attempt made to divide this award, appropriating it to the families or individuals?

Mr. CURTIS. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. To whom did the benefit run?

Mr. CURTIS. The benefit ran to all of the loyal Creeks whose names appeared in the list that had been filed with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior—I would not be sure which—one or the other; not to the tribe, but to the individual members whose names appeared in that list.

Mr. HEYBURN. And the tribal organization to be the trustee for the purpose of apportioning it?

Mr. CURTIS. Paying it.

Mr. HEYBURN. The tribal organization had ceased to exist then, had it not?

Mr. CURTIS. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why not?

Mr. CURTIS. No; the tribal authority had not ceased.

Mr. HEYBURN. If they became citizens of the United States in 1901, would not that terminate the tribal existence?

Mr. CURTIS. By act of Congress the tribal existence was continued, and there is a tribe there to-day.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does not the Senator think that the act of Congress is open to question, in view of the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Nez Percé case?

Mr. CURTIS. In view of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Cherokee case, I do not, because there they held that the Government and Congress had jurisdiction over the property notwithstanding the act declaring the Indians to be citizens of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Over the property, but how about the citizens?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly, but further——

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield, too. I join in yielding.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to point out the fact that the "Cherokee case," so called, which related to the right of the United States, through the Secretary of the Interior, to lease Cherokee lands for oil, was under the act of 1898, prior to the grant of citizenship, and therefore the conclusion of the Senator from Kansas, I think, is not very well taken.

Mr. CURTIS. Ah, but the decision came up after the act and after the Indians had been made citizens of the United States by the act of Congress, and after individuals had been given the right to make oil and gas leases, and after the treaty or agreement had provided that the certificate of allotment should be the evidence of their title. The decision was made after that; and notwithstanding the provisions of the treaty and the act of 1898, the Supreme Court held that Congress still had jurisdiction over the property.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. A later decision than the one referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma deals directly with the question of the quality of citizenship. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that there can be but one quality of American citizenship; that no citizen can have any rights that another citizen has not. It applied that in the Nez Percé case, and they hold there that these limitations or attempts to limit or qualify citizenship are futile; that they accomplish nothing.

I merely wanted to call attention to it because it seems to me that while the original act doubtless anticipated some one capable of taking at the time, yet there has been a failure of parties by reason of the citizenship which had been conferred upon these Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. Well, Mr. President, at any rate the general council of the Creek Nation acted upon it, and the money was paid to the individual members, and they receipted in full.

I have nothing further to submit upon the point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Kansas has just stated that if the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs had reported this as an award, and the Senate itself had acted upon it as an award, it would be binding as an award.

Mr. CURTIS. May I correct the statement of the Senator? Providing the Committee on Indian Affairs had jurisdiction of it and had gotten possession of the papers in a proper way, which I deny.

Mr. McCUMBER. In either event the whole question turns upon the point whether the Senate acted as a court of arbitration and whether it understood that it was acting as a court of arbitration in fixing an award or whether it was acting in conjunction with the other House in making a law for an appropriation. I know of nothing that will be more important in determining that matter than the law itself. I will not call it a law, but the award itself, the word that was used by the Senate in its action. Here are the words. This is what the Senate of the United States said:

In pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of an act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1901—

Showing that it was considering that treaty and not the mere making of an appropriation—

there is hereby awarded—

Not that "we hereby appropriate" a certain sum of money, but "there is hereby awarded"— as a final determination thereof, on the so-called "Loyal Creek claims," named in said section 26, the sum of $1,200,000, and the same is hereby appropriated.

Now, there are two provisions. There is a provision awarding, and there is a provision appropriating. They are clearly separable. The provision awarding is the provision that we say fixes the right of the Creek Indians, and I can not understand how anyone can claim under any provision that it is not an award.

As has been suggested time and again, the agreement was not that the Creek Indians should submit to the Congress of the United States the determination of the question, but that they should submit it to the Senate of the United States. They submitted it, and the Senate declared that it awarded $1,200,000, and then they said they appropriated that sum.

The House then changed the sum of the appropriation, and all that it could do would be to change the sum appropriated, $1,200,000. The House had no jurisdiction to interfere in the slightest degree with the award that was made by the Senate of the United States.

Let me put this proposition: As suggested to me by the Senator on my left [Mr. BRANDEGEE], suppose Congress had refused to appropriate anything, and nothing more had been done with it, and then suppose the Indians had made application before the Court of Claims, for instance, giving jurisdiction thereto, for $200,000,000. Could not the defense interpose this award of the Senate of the United States as a complete bar to recovering more than $1,200,000? I do not believe there is a lawyer here who for a single moment will doubt the proposition that that would be a complete bar; and if it would be a complete bar on the part of the United States, it would be as complete a bar on the part of the Government to claim that it is not an award.

Mr. President, I can not possibly see that it makes any difference how this got before the Senate, but in my opening remarks I showed step by step how it got before the Senate. Every one of those steps recited that previous step, and every one of them recited that it was for the purpose of securing an award. When finally we got it before the Senate it was declared openly that it was to be an award, and not only by a Member of the Senate, but the provision which we passed declared that it was an award to pay according to the terms of a certain treaty.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, there are a good many difficulties about this question, both in reference to the equitable side of it and the legal side. While it is true that the Senate, as a part of the lawmaking power, passed the provision the Senator has read, it did not pass it in the form of an award, with notice to the parties interested that they had made an award. The only notice which went to the parties interested was the act of Congress, and it reads in this wise:

In pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of an act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muskogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1901, there is hereby awarded, as a final determination thereof, on the so-called "loyal Creek claims," named in said section 26, the sum of $600,000, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and made immediately available.

That was not only the action of the Senate, but the action of the House of Representatives, and it was approved by the President. It is the only official record in existence as to what the award was.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon a question?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator contend that under an agreement to let the Senate make an award the other party is bound by the declaration of the House at the other end of this building?

Mr. ALDRICH. I say this is the only record that the award was made. If you were asked to furnish a certificate of the action of the Senate, you could not furnish it. There is no legal record in existence, so far as I know, that there has been an award made except this.

It is barely possible that this claim appeals to the equitable sense of Senators, and it does to mine. It looks to me as though we ought to pay these people. But whether we ought to pay them on an appropriation bill, with a limited time for discussion, I have some doubt.

There is another question involved. These claims arose forty-two years ago. Who is going to get the money that is to be paid under this appropriation if you pay this $600,000. Can anybody tell what part of it will be paid to attorneys and what part to the original claimants or the survivors? I have seen statements in the newspapers about great amounts to be paid to attorneys in this award.

Mr. GALLINGER. Sixty thousand dollars are provided in the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Sixty thousand dollars are to be paid on the face of the amendment, but how many of the claims of these fifteen hundred claimants or their representatives have been assigned to other people? These questions are perhaps not before us in one sense, but they may be in another sense.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will allow me to answer——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. My answer to the question as to who would get this money is that there is nothing in the treaty requiring either the Creeks or their representatives to designate who may get it after it has been delayed by Congress for a term of years.

Now, Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not quite through with my statement. It may be that there is nothing in this provision in the form in which it is as to whom the money is to be paid, but I was asking as a matter of curiosity if any member of the committee knew to whom the money was to be paid. These claims arose forty-two years ago. Most of the original claimants must be dead. It does not, you may say, affect the equity of this case or the legality of these claims; but if we are going to stretch the rules of the Senate and put this claim on the bill, the precedent may be very troublesome to us in the future. I think we ought to get all the information that is possible with reference to the claim before we pay it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the RECORD in regard to this matter. On page 2252 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 16, 1903, there is set forth the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs relative to this matter, pointing out precisely the action of the Senate. The report points out what the action of the Senate was; that it was considering this matter, knowing that it was acting as a board of arbitration, and that it did act as a board of arbitration, and in manner and form accepted this proposition as an award.

The argument of the Senator from Rhode Island in effect is that after the Senate has made an award, then the House of Representatives can come into this Chamber through the conferees and take the judge by the throat and compel him to retract. Is that an element of justice that should be pursued as a precedent? When the Senate acts as a board of arbitration, shall any power have the right to come in and say that the Senate shall recede from its position under the penalty of not passing the appropriation bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senate considered this as a final award, why did they put it on an Indian appropriation bill and send it back to the House?

Mr. OWEN. Because it was the most convenient way in which to pay the award when made. The crux of the matter is that the Senate, acting as a board of arbitration, declared this sum to be due, when they were charged with the knowledge of the fact that they were sitting as a board of arbitration and having made the award coincidently with it they provided payment. They might have made the award and not provided payment, but the subsequent proceedings looking to the payment by the Senate, and then the Senate having been coerced by the House of Representatives, it does not in anywise diminish the force of the adjustment through this board of arbitration.

Mr. CURTIS. They knew, did they not, Mr. President, when they put the provision in this bill that it would be subject to amendment in the other House?

Mr. OWEN. That related only to the payment of the award, not to the award itself.

Mr. CURTIS. And unless the Senate had agreed to it, it could not have become a law in that appropriation bill.

Mr. OWEN. I say that related to the payment of the award and not to the award itself. The award is one thing; the payment of the award is another thing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas makes the point of order that the amendment is obnoxious to paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, in that it proposes general legislation. The Senator from Massachusetts interposes an additional point of order to the effect that the item is not for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation.

The Chair has been greatly impressed by the strength of the argument of the friends of the amendment as to the equitable character of the claim. But in deciding the point of order the Chair is, of course, precluded from considering either the equitable nature of the claim or the supposed merit of the claim that is involved in the amendment.

The Chair is of the opinion that in determining the parliamentary question which is raised, it is impossible for him to go back of the act of Congress of 1903 and consider any agreements, awards, or settlements which may have been made prior thereto. The Congress has spoken upon the question, and it is not within the province of the Senate to set aside, nor is it within the province of the Chair to ignore, its deliberate, conclusive action. It is provided in the act as follows:

In pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of an act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muskogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1901, there is hereby awarded, as a final determination thereof on the so-called "loyal Creek claims" named in said section 26, the sum of $600,000, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and made immediately available.

Congress, in order, apparently, to leave no doubt as to its purpose and the effect of the act, provided:

That said sum shall be accepted by said Indians in full payment and satisfaction of all claim and demand growing out of said loyal Creek claims, and the payment thereof shall be a full release of the Government from any such claim or claims.

Unless this act has been very materially modified or repealed by a subsequent act it stands as the supreme law, and standing as it does, it negatives the suggestion that the pending amendment is to carry out an existing law or treaty stipulation.

The Chair is also clearly of opinion that the amendment can not be entertained under the third paragraph of Rule XVI. It proposes to change a general law. Therefore, it is in the nature of general legislation, and is in contravention of the rule.

In view of the foregoing considerations, the Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Kansas and the point of order interposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I have now drawn the amendment objected to in such form as to meet the objection. I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At what point does the Senator wish to have the amendment inserted?

Mr. OWEN. At the bottom of page 64.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 64, after line 26, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Attorney-General is hereby authorized to dismiss the suits brought by the United States to set aside land titles in the eastern district of Oklahoma in cases where the consideration was not inequitable, and where there is no actual fraud involved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I desire to submit an amendment to come in at the close of the admendment just adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment just agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

All suits pending or hereafter brought in the eastern district of the United States district court of Oklahoma to cancel conveyances of Indian allotments shall be given precedence over all other actions, civil and criminal, excepting where the defendant is confined without bail and on petition for the writ of habeas corpus.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I think it very well to adopt the amendment of one Senator from Oklahoma, but I think this is going a little too far. I make a point of order on the amendment that it is general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I request the Senator to withhold the point of order for a moment, that I may make a statement with reference to the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. The Chair has already ruled on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey withhold his point of order?

Mr. KEAN. I withhold it for a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma will proceed.

Mr. GORE. I would merely like to say that more than 30,000 suits have been brought in the State of Oklahoma during the last eight months with respect to the transfer of Indian allotments, and it has operated as a stroke of paralysis to the eastern section of our State. It, of course, casts a cloud on every piece of land involved in the suits, and casts suspicion on every other transfer and every other title falling within this description. If one case could be tried every day it would require ten years for the trial of these suits. If ten cases were tried every day it would occupy one entire year in the trial of these actions.

This statement ought to be sufficient to impress the Senate with the importance of this disposition of the matter to the people of the State of Oklahoma. I submit that the suits were brought indiscriminately, without investigation. The records were consulted where transfers had been made and suits were instituted and investigations were made afterwards. Some of them have already been dismissed as being entirely without foundation; but it requires too much time, if they are allowed to take the ordinary course of litigation.

I am informed that suits of this kind have been brought to cancel conveyances where the Secretary of the Interior had himself expressly and formally removed the restrictions from the land involved. I cite one particular case where a piece of land was sold by an Indian to a white man. The deed was executed and delivered, and a mortgage was made for the purchase money. Suit has been brought to cancel the mortgage to secure the payment of the debt. So far no suit has been brought to cancel the deed itself.

There is another story told illustrative of this litigation. Land was allotted to a Cherokee woman who was unmarried. Subsequently she married. She leased the land in her married name, and suit has been brought against her for defrauding herself out of her own land. That illustrates the character of the litigation.

Something ought to be done to facilitate, to expedite, and to force a settlement of these suits. The amendment merely gives them precedence over other cases, excepting criminal actions, where the defendant is confined without bail, and in cases brought on petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I insist upon my point of order. We have already given the Attorney-General power to dismiss a certain class of cases, and I think that is sufficient.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment on page 54, inserting the matter from line 7 to line 22.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the amendment be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OWEN. I offer an amendment in behalf of the Chickasaw chief, Douglas H. Johnson, asking a larger compensation for his services.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of the Chickasaw fund to D. H. Johnson, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, compensation for his services as such governor, at the rate of $3,000 per annum, from March 4, 1906, so long as he shall legally serve as such governor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I had called the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment on page 88, from line 1 to line 13, inclusive, and understood that he was to withdraw it. Upon information which has come to me very recently with respect to the matter embodied in the amendment, I am compelled to make the point of order against it on the ground that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

I should like to say the reason I do that is that I am informed by representatives of the Oneida Indians, who have just arrived in the city, learning that this legislation was likely to be proposed, that there was an entire misunderstanding upon their part in agreeing to the distribution of this money upon the basis provided for in the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator is correct. I had intended to withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be regarded as open. The question recurs on the amendment reported by the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 88 it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to pay to the Oneida band of Indians of the Oneida Reservation, Wis., their proportionate share of the perpetual annuity accruing to the Six Nations of New York Indians, under the sixth article of the treaty of November 11, 1794 (7 Stat. L., p. 46), on the basis of a capitalization of the said annuity at 5 per cent, as provided in the agreement made with the said Oneida band January 4, 1909, said agreement having been made in pursuance with the act of Congress approved April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 70), $20,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26203) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KEIFER, Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, and Mr. BOWERS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 26466. An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Burlington, Iowa;

H. R. 26482. An act to authorize the construction of two bridges across Rock River, State of Illinois;

H. R. 26829. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved April 23, 1906;

H. R. 27864. An act granting a right of way over a strip of land along the eastern boundary of the Fort McPherson Military Reservation to the commissioners of Fulton County, Ga., for road purposes; and

H. J. Res. 241. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish one condemned bronze cannon and cannon balls to the city of Robinson, Ill.

BOSTON AND MAINE RAILROAD.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7752) for the relief of the Boston and Maine Railroad.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the Boston and Maine Railroad $2,840.83, for railway mail service furnished between Fitchburg, Mass., and South Ashburnham, Mass., from July 1, 1897, to June 7, 1908.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 22, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 20, 1909.

CONSUL-GENERAL.

Edward L. Adams, of New York, now consul-general of class 6 at Stockholm, to be consul of the United States of class 5 at Dublin, Ireland, vice Alfred K. Moe, nominated to be consul of class 5 at Bordeaux.

POSTMASTERS.

CONNECTICUT.

William A. Smith to be postmaster at Hazardville, Conn. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

FLORIDA.

John B. Leffingwell to be postmaster at Bradentown, Fla., in place of John B. Leffingwell. Incumbent's commission expired February 1, 1909.

James A. Zipperer to be postmaster at Madison, Fla., in place of Alexander Zipperer. Incumbent's commission expired January 27, 1909.

INDIANA.

William L. Walters to be postmaster at Fort Branch, Ind. Office became presidential January 1, 1909.

IOWA.

William C. Snyder to be postmaster at Lake City, Iowa, in place of William C. Snyder. Incumbent's commission expired January 14, 1909.

INJUNCTION OF SECRECY REMOVED.

On February 18, 1909, the Senate removed the injunction of secrecy from a special agreement between the United States and Great Britain for the submission to the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague of questions relating to fisheries on the North Atlantic coast. (Ex. U, 60th, 2d.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 20, 1909.

[Continuation of legislative day of Monday, February 15, 1909.]

The recess having expired at 11 o'clock a. m., the House was called to order by the Speaker.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 28167.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the following bill and to consider the same in the House. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28167) to grant additional authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out certain provisions of public buildings acts, and for other purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us have the bill read.

Mr. PAYNE. The bill ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Missouri that he is notified by the gentleman from Iowa that he desires to call up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. This bill is three or four pages long, and the Chair will furnish an opportunity——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I suggest this bill will take only a few minutes. It carries no new appropriation, it merely makes certain changes made necessary by changed conditions in respect to public buildings acts passed in the last two Congresses, and I hope the gentleman will yield.

Mr. COUSINS. I think the gentleman should come in after this. This bill is desired at the other side, and it must go over there or we will be running amuck with the appropriations. There are four appropriation bills—

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I appeal to the gentleman to give way for a few minutes for this purpose. This bill must go over to the Senate in order to pass this session.

Mr. COUSINS. How long?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. For a few minutes.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, if I am recognized I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. It will take five minutes to read the bill, but the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in every instance in which the act of May 30, 1908, included the cost of the site in the extension of the limit of cost fixed for a public building previously authorized to be constructed upon land owned by the United States, such limit of cost be, and the same is hereby, amended and fixed at the amount named in said act for each of such buildings, but exclusive of the cost of the sites thereof, respectively.

SEC. 2. That so much of the amount heretofore authorized for the construction of a suitable building for the accommodation of the United States post-office, United States courts, and other governmental offices at Muskogee, Okla., as may be necessary shall be available for the acquisition of a suitable site, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to acquire such site by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise: Provided, That the limit of cost heretofore fixed shall not be exceeded in the acquisition of such site and the erection of a suitable building thereon.

SEC. 3. That of the amount heretofore authorized for the enlargement of the post-office building at Rock Island, Ill., the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be available for the acquisition of additional land.

SEC. 4. That the amount heretofore authorized for the enlargement, extension, and repair of the United States post-office at Portland, Me., shall be available for the United States court-house at Portland, Me.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to reduce the open space for fire protection at Du Quoin, Ill., to 15 feet, to insure the acquisition of a suitable site within the limit of cost heretofore fixed.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, disregard the provision requiring sites to be bounded upon at least two sides by streets in so far as same shall apply to the town of Plymouth, Mass.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to apply not to exceed $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the amount heretofore authorized for the erection of a suitable building for the accommodation of the United States post-office at West Point, Miss., for the acquisition of a suitable site, in addition to the $5,000 heretofore authorized for the acquisition of a site.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, disregard the provision requiring sites to be bounded upon at least two sides by streets in so far as same shall apply to the city of Westerly, R. I.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to reduce the open space for fire protection at Beatrice, Nebr., to 10 feet, to insure the completion of the proposed addition to the present federal building within the limit of cost heretofore authorized.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a temporary addition to the United States post-office and court-house at Detroit, Mich., at a limit of cost not to exceed $7,500, to be paid from the appropriation heretofore authorized for the extension and remodeling of the United States court-house and post-office at Detroit, Mich.

SEC. 11. That so much of section 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved May 30, 1908, as authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a suitable site for a new custom-house in the city of Boston, Mass., at a limit of cost of $500,000, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site for a new custom-house building at Boston, Mass., at not to exceed $500,000, or in his discretion to cause plans to be prepared for the enlargement, remodeling, or extension of the present custom-house building in said city; and for this purpose he is hereby authorized and empowered to select and employ a special architect for the purpose and to compensate him for his services on the basis of the schedule of the American Institute of Architects, and so much of the appropriation heretofore made for the acquisition of a new site as may be necessary is hereby made available for that purpose.

SEC. 12. That in the acquisition of a new site heretofore authorized for the subtreasury at San Francisco, Cal., and for the purpose of securing better facilities for light and air and a larger open space than is now required by law to be provided as a protection against the danger of fire in adjacent buildings and in consideration of the granting to the United States of a perpetual right of way over a strip of land 25 feet in width next adjacent to such site, or the dedication of said strip of land to the city of San Francisco for a public alley, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause said strip of land to be graded, paved, and improved to such extent as may be necessary to put the same in condition for use or as may be required to make it conform to the ordinances and regulations of the city of San Francisco governing the acceptance of the dedication of land for the purposes of a public alley; and for this purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to expend such sum as may be necessary, not to exceed $10,000, from the appropriation for "Repairs and preservation of public buildings:" Provided, That said alley shall not be graded, paved, or improved as aforesaid at the cost and expense of the United States for a greater distance than said subtreasury site may abut thereon, nor until the title to such subtreasury site shall have become vested in the United States.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire additional land for the further enlargement of the federal building site at Beaumont, Tex., by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, at a limit of cost not to exceed $800, and to make payment therefor from the unexpended balance of the appropriations made for carrying into effect the provisions of section 1 of the act of June 6, 1902, so far as the same may relate to the federal building at Beaumont, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6 of the bill, after line 12, insert the following:

"SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, disregard the provisions requiring sites to be bounded upon at least two sides by streets in so far as same shall apply to Bedford City, Va."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any item in this bill which releases the title of the United States to any land at any place?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to reduce the open space for fire protection at South Chicago, Ill., to 15 feet."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I accept that amendment, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section:

"SEC. 16. That the item contained in section 5 of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes,' approved May 30, 1908, for 'United States post-office at Washington, D. C., $500,000,' be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to add to the same the following provision: That if any balance remains within said limit after acquiring the site herein authorized, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend the same in preparation of the necessary plans, and toward the commencement of the construction of said building."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I would like an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, in the last bill $500,000 was appropriated for the acquisition of a site for a new post-office in the city of Washington. It seems that they have succeeded in procuring a site for $450,000, so that $50,000 is left as an unexpended balance of that appropriation. This $50,000 shall be used for the purpose of preparing plans for the new building, appropriation for which, however, is not made in this bill.

Mr. WEEKS. That is the appraiser's storehouse?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; it is the post-office at Washington.

Mr. MANN. Would not this permit plans for the building without any limit of cost and authorize the commencement of work?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. That is just what it would do.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No appropriation is made; hence there can not be a limit of cost fixed.

Mr. MANN. But, then, there is a commencement of work; hence it becomes a work in progress. I suppose the gentleman's committee will take care of that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is it expected this building will cost?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has no idea as to what the size and character of that building is to be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman that until the committee decides the size and character and limit that is to be put on the cost, it would seem ill advised to authorize the preparation of the plans.

Mr. MANN. And there is a commencement of construction.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It has been found that time will be saved by such a course.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is better to lose time and save money, I suggest to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If we fix a limit of cost in this bill, it will be considered as an appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It has been so considered as to similar public buildings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But since that time Congress has passed an act that nothing shall be considered as an appropriation unless the specific amount is appropriated, and the Comptroller of the Treasury follows that statute.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If there is to be any objection to it, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman withdraws the amendment?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I withdraw the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 26915. An act making appropriation for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate recedes from its amendments to the bill of the House of Representatives (H. R. 24140) entitled "An act extending the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, concerning transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement," disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill (H. R. 27523); and, pending that motion, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] if he can inform me what time is desired on that side?

Mr. HOWARD. We shall not ask for time.

Mr. COUSINS. In that event, I should say we would not require more than twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to close debate on this bill in forty minutes—one-half of the time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was then agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DIEKEMA] will take the chair.

Mr. CARLIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARLIN. If a motion to adjourn were made at this hour, and assuming it would be carried, to what time would the House stand adjourned?

The SPEAKER. We are in Committee of the Whole, and we can not adjourn; but we could when the committee rises. The Chair is under the impression, however, that there are special orders for to-morrow.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DIEKEMA in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 27523, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 27523) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, there is so little of new matter in the bill which the Committee on Foreign Affairs offers to the Committee of the Whole House that very little time is necessary to be used in its explanation. The bill carries $3,592,738, an increase of only about $18,000 over the appropriations of last session, and $350,000 less than the estimates of the State Department. There are very few new items. There is a proposition to amend the law with reference to chargé d'affaires acting in the place of ambassadors or ministers who may be absent on leave, which will save the necessity of deficiency appropriations, which have been carried constantly from year to year by the Appropriations Committee, but it makes no difference whatever in the amount appropriated or expended. The other new items are for very limited amounts—one for the entertainment of the Prison Congress in Washington, one for the entertainment of the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, and the department is asking for 10 student interpreters in Turkey to correspond with the provision now made for student interpreters in China and Japan. Under the new Government of Turkey very wide fields are being opened to the United States and other countries in the way of trade.

The very best investment that has ever been made, in my judgment, has been the appropriations for student interpreters in China and Japan. They have enlisted in the service a class of very able and bright young men, who are willing to enter the service for a thousand dollars a year, and to-day many of them are occupying positions such as deputy consuls and vice-consuls in the Orient, rendering the very best service to this Government. We want a corps of student interpreters in Turkey, as I said, to correspond with those in the Orient, in China and Japan. There is also a new provision in the bill providing for ten additional consular assistants. We recommend this proposition instead of another proposition calling for $125,000 for the vice-consuls who might take the place of consuls.

The idea of the committee in adopting this provision for ten new consular assistants is that they will be a permanent corps of American citizens especially trained to assist or act in place of consuls. Their salary starts at a thousand dollars, and after seven years they may reach $1,800.

Mr. Chairman, we are carrying on this foreign service with only about $3,500,000. I doubt very much if any department of this Government is accomplishing so much with that amount of money. We are supporting and paying for ambassadors, ministers, consuls-general, consuls, and other officials and employees, as follows:

Ambassadors, at $17,500 each	10
Ministers, at $12,000 each	8
Ministers, at $10,000 each	24
Diplomatic agents, at $10,000 each	3
Minister resident and consul-general, at $10,000	1
Minister resident and consul-general, at $5,000	1
Secretaries of embassies and legations (ranging from $2,000 to $3,000 each)	41
Second secretaries ($1,800 to $2,000 each)	12
Third secretaries, at $1,200 each	7
Consul-general inspectors	5
Consuls-general	63
Vice-consuls-general	65
Deputy consuls-general	26
Consuls	241
Vice-consuls	241
Deputy consuls	23
Consular assistants	20
Consular agents	286
Interpreters	21
Clerks in consulates	314
Student interpreters	16
Marshals	8
Total	1,329

Consuls-general	63
Consul, class 1	1
Consul, class 2	1
Consuls, class 3	10

Since the adoption of the consular reorganization act two or three years ago, by which all the fees are turned directly into the Treasury instead of being paid in part to consuls, our consular system has become almost self-supporting.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How are these student interpreters to be appointed, or by whom?

Mr. COUSINS. They are appointed by the President, after being examined by a board of examiners, one of whom is from the Civil Service Commission and two others named from the State Department.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Are their appointments confirmed by the Senate, or will they be?

Mr. COUSINS. I think not, in that case.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, they are not directly under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission, are they?

Mr. COUSINS. Practically; yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Would you say, then, that they are under the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. COUSINS. I should say practically; yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How are these various clerks appointed whom I see named in the bill? Are they appointed by the President?

Mr. COUSINS. Clerks are not, but the consuls are. Under the Constitution the President shall appoint ambassadors, ministers, consuls, and other diplomatic agents, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do the consuls appoint their own clerks, or are the clerks under the civil service?

Mr. COUSINS. No; they are not. When the clerks receive less than $1,000 per annum they may be foreigners; but during the last three years we have Americanized the system to such an extent that more than 50 per cent now employed are Americans.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I think that is absolutely commendable; but how are the clerks who draw salaries exceeding $1,000 appointed?

Mr. COUSINS. By the State Department.

Mr. COX of Indiana. They are appointed by the Secretary of State?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And their appointments are not confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. COUSINS. No. They do not represent the Government, except in a clerical capacity.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I see the time in which these student interpreters are to serve is limited to five years. Is that correct?

Mr. COUSINS. They enter into an engagement with the Government to serve five years, if their services are desired.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It is presumed, I suppose, that at the end of that time their service will automatically cease?

Mr. COUSINS. In very few instances have their services to the Government ceased. From student interpreters some have been advanced to more important positions, such as vice-consuls and deputy consuls, or secretaries, and have proven most useful officers in the foreign service.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then the idea is to give them an opportunity gradually to work themselves from the bottom to the top.

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I think that is a good idea.

Mr. COUSINS. I was saying that since the adoption of the consular reorganization bill the consular service has been practically self-supporting. It costs this Government only about $400 to maintain a consulate at the present time. During the last fiscal year the fees of the consulates amounted to $1,512,304. The salaries of the consuls were only $1,037,000, making a net gain of $475,304.

Of course the consular establishment is not wholly self-supporting, for the reason that there is charged to that service all the inspectors' expenses, all of the vast contingent expenses that we appropriate, amounting to half a million dollars.

Only a few years ago these consuls paid out of their own pockets probably half of the postage that was required to answer the communications from American business men. To-day we are appropriating for these contingent expenses $525,000, which cover postage and other miscellaneous items, and which relieves these representatives of the Government of the great expense of answering correspondents from our country.

There has been a very great improvement in the last three or four years, under the administration of Mr. Root, than whom, in my judgment, no greater Secretary ever served the United States. [Applause.] With the very intelligent and consistent support of the gentlemen of the minority on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and particularly that of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], looking to the improvement of the foreign service, we have had the greatest progress that has been witnessed, in my judgment, in any department of the Government. [Applause.] I shall now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield back such time as was allotted to me, as it seems not to be the desire of anyone to occupy time now.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chargés d'affaires ad interim, $40,000.
Total, $550,500.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. Is the amount carried for this item the amount carried in the bill of last year?

Mr. COUSINS. There is no change either in the salaries or classification of ambassadors and ministers.

Mr. HAMLIN. Can the gentleman inform me if it is the same amount carried in the bill for 1908?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Any unexpended balance at the close of the fiscal year is available for expenditure in the next fiscal year without any further appropriation?

Mr. COUSINS. The balance of the salary, if unexpended, would revert to the Treasury.

Mr. HAMLIN. What becomes of the balance of the fund?

Mr. COUSINS. It reverts to the Treasury.

Mr. HAMLIN. And must be reappropriated?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Are the expenditures for this last fiscal year for this purpose any greater than the expenditures for the fiscal year 1908?

Mr. COUSINS. This is for 1910.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand; but the gentleman said that the same amount was carried in the fiscal year of 1909.

Mr. COUSINS. For the present fiscal year.

Mr. HAMLIN. Are the expenditures any greater for this year than for the year 1908?

Mr. COUSINS. I stated that there was no change either in the salaries or classification of ambassadors or ministers.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, I notice from the report of the Secretary of State that the expenditure for these items of 1908 was only $467,749.42.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri said the expenditure for 1908. That is not this year. We passed a bill which did make a change——

Mr. COUSINS. We passed a bill in 1907 which increased the salaries very much; we increased the salaries of certain ministers.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then the gentleman from Iowa misunderstood my question. I asked if there had been any increase since 1908.

Mr. COUSINS. There was in 1907, which provided for 1908.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then the necessary expenditures for 1909 would be greater than 1908?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes. I have not distinctly heard the gentleman's questions. There were many increases in salaries for 1909 over 1908, but none in this bill for 1910 over those for 1909.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 1685 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows: "For such time as any secretary of embassy or legation shall be lawfully authorized to act as chargé d'affaires ad interim at the post to which he shall have been appointed he shall be entitled to receive, in addition to his salary as secretary of embassy or legation, compensation equal to the difference between such salary and 50 per cent of the salary provided by law for the ambassador or minister at such post."

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order against that paragraph, I would like to ask the chairman the reason for this change.

Mr. COUSINS. The reason is this: For many years a portion of the salary, or compensation, of chargé d'affaires has had to be appropriated in the deficiency appropriation bill. This provision does not increase the amount in any instance.

Mr. MACON. Then, it is simply desired to obviate the necessity of making two appropriations?

Mr. COUSINS. Exactly.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For six student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Japanese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Japan, at $1,000 each, $6,000: Provided, That said student interpreters shall be chosen in such manner as will make the selections nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as interpreter to the embassy and consulates in Japan so long as his said services may be required within a period of five years.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph. I would ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether it is necessary to have 10 student interpreters at Constantinople. I can see the reason for 10 in China and for a number in Japan, but it seems to me that 10 at Constantinople is a large number.

Mr. COUSINS. No; we have necessity for the employment of 15 interpreters for Turkey and the region around Turkey where the Turkish and Arabic languages are used.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MACON. I renew the point of order. Is that the provision for 10 interpreters for Turkey?

Mr. MANN. They are student interpreters. It is on page 8.

Mr. COUSINS. It will be the most economic investment the Government can make.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman from Illinois is ahead of the reading clerk. He has not yet reached the provision. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 10 student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the language of Turkey with a view to supplying interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey, at $1,000 each, $10,000: Provided, That said student interpreters shall be chosen in such manner as will make the selections nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as interpreter to the embassy and consulates in Turkey so long as his said services may be required within a period of five years.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that paragraph, for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question in regard to it. What is the necessity for the creation of these 10 positions at $1,000 a year each in Turkey?

Mr. COUSINS. I was answering a moment ago a question which I thought pertained to this paragraph when I said that there are 15 posts at which we must have interpreters, and we can not hire them for the amount that we are paying the student interpreters in China and Japan now, $1,000.

Mr. MACON. Under existing law do we employ fifteen?

Mr. COUSINS. We have to have fifteen in Turkey and the surrounding region.

Mr. MACON. And that is necessary under existing law?

Mr. COUSINS. I will ask the Clerk to read a few statements here that I think ought to be in the RECORD, pertaining to the trade and prospects of trade with Turkey under their new government.

Mr. MACON. I expect the gentleman and I can get together without waiting for this reading.

Mr. COUSINS. I think this ought to be in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The September (1908) number of the Near East, a paper devoted to the political and commercial interests of the Turkish Empire, said:

"For many years past, firms endeavoring to do business in the Ottoman Empire have met with difficulties. The extension of their clientele has been accomplished only by slow degrees. The openings for the development of trade have not been numerous. It is now generally admitted that these drawbacks will disappear. It is no exaggeration to state that the amount of trade which is to be secured within the confines of the Ottoman Empire is gigantic. In spite of the country's wealth of material, the bulk of the goods consumed is purchased abroad."

OCTOBER 13, 1908.

Consul William C. Magelssen, at Bagdad, says of conditions in that part of Asiatic Turkey:

"The foreign trade of Bagdad, including imports and exports, for 1907 amounted to $23,577,813. Although the United States is one of Turkish Arabia's best customers, the latter takes practically nothing in return. With the completion of the Bagdad Railway, and the subsequent development of Mesopotamia and adjoining regions, the trade will in the near future be doubled, and American manufacturers would do well to make an effort to secure their proper share of this commerce."

Consul-General Ravndal, of Beirut, in the Daily Consular Report for October 22, 1908, reports that in a recent decree the provisions prohibiting the importation into Turkey of typewriters with Arabic, Armenian, or Turkish characters or lettering have been abolished, and he urges the American manufacturers of typewriters to bestir themselves, as to gain a foothold in these virgin markets.

JANUARY 25, 1909.

Consul-General Ravndal, at Beirut, says:

"Already the commerce of the Levant, although still in its infancy, is considerable. Turkey alone exports goods to the value of approximately $100,000,000, while her imports are still more important. For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1906, they were officially estimated at $138,792,933. As for the United States, it buys in a year Turkish products to the amount of about $15,000,000 and sells to Turkey American manufactures valued at about $4,500,000."

JANUARY 28, 1909.

Special Agent R. R. Dennis, in a special report on the American farm-implement trade with Turkey, says:

"The great change that has lately taken place in the Ottoman Empire promises to be the forerunner of an immense increase in the volume of foreign trade."

NOVEMBER 27, 1908.

A native of Turkey, who is now in business in New York City, wrote to the Bureau of Manufactures as follows:

"With the new constitution in the Ottoman Empire, articles formerly not allowed to enter the country started going there with a rush since the restrictions and drawbacks existing under the old régime have been removed by the new, and an immense field of trade and enterprise is opening in the whole country. The openings for the American staple products and manufactures and the trade opportunities for the American capitalist are many, and those who will be the first on the ground will reap the best profits."

Mr. MACON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman, after the reading of that very important communication, if under existing law it is necessary to employ the 15 interpreters in Turkey; and if so, what is the total cost of their employment?

Mr. COUSINS. The total cost would be more than if we do not educate and employ American citizens.

Mr. MACON. I see that it will cost $10,000 in this particular paragraph for the salaries of the 10 students.

Mr. COUSINS. Exactly.

Mr. MACON. Then in the next paragraph we provide for the payment of $125 a year for each student.

Mr. COUSINS. Oh, that is for their schooling, their tuition.

Mr. MACON. And that practically makes $1,125 per annum for each of them.

Mr. COUSINS. That is all. As I said, it is one of the most economic investments that we have ever made.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman remember just what we pay the 15 interpreters that we are employing under existing law?

Mr. COUSINS. No; I could not give the exact amount.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman assures me as chairman of the committee, after having made investigation, that this will not be in excess of existing expenditures for this service.

Mr. COUSINS. Not at all. In fact, I can give the gentleman the word of the Chief of the Consular Bureau, who says it will be an economic investment.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman's word is good to me.

Mr. COUSINS. I should dislike very much if the gentleman should make any objection to a provision which will, as these testimonials show, open a vast field of trade, and very likely in cotton goods, and I take it that the gentleman is somewhat interested in that.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman understands that I have no desire on earth to hinder the progress of the affairs of any of the departments of the Government.

Mr. COUSINS. That is right.

Mr. MACON. My only idea in connection with this matter being to prevent an unnecessary depletion of the finances of the country, I do not want to be a party to the increase of our expenditures, and thereby further exploit the revenues of the country, when it is not absolutely necessary to do so. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERKS AT THE EMBASSY AT LONDON.

For 2 clerks at the embassy to Great Britain, 1 at the rate of $1,500 per annum and 1 at the rate of $1,200 per annum, $3,000.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he would object to this amendment to that paragraph, to insert the words "who shall be American citizens" after the word "clerks," in line 9, on page 9?

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I ask the gentleman if there would be any objection to this amendment, to insert the words "who shall be American citizens" in line 9, page 9, so the paragraph will read:

For two clerks who shall be American citizens at the embassy at Great Britain, etc.

Mr. COUSINS. Well, we have a general law now that every one receiving a salary as high as $1,000 shall be an American citizen.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Then I wish to ask the gentleman why it is necessary to insert back here—the exact item I can not place now, but I remember the reading of it—that they should be American citizens?

Mr. PERKINS. Those are interpreters.

Mr. COUSINS. They are secretaries of legations, and it is necessary that they should be American citizens, because, for one reason, they have charge of important papers.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. But they receive salaries of over $1,000 a year.

Mr. COUSINS. All of them.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. What distinction do you draw between clerks and secretaries?

Mr. MANN. They do not receive salaries of over $1,000 a year, but receive salaries of $1,000 a year.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. You have that provision on page 8, line 12, so why not have it on line 9, page 9?

Mr. COUSINS. You can not procure American citizens for $800 who are competent to do this work, and the Congress in its wisdom fixed a limit at $1,000, and it has accomplished almost a complete Americanization of the foreign service. Of course the amendment, if offered, would be subject to a point of order, because it would be a change of existing law, and I should be obliged to make the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I think perhaps the gentleman misunderstood the subject about which he asked; and that was with respect to interpreters, was it not? He said the words "American citizens" were put in another part of the bill. The provision on page 8 is in reference to interpreters. The general provision covers assistant secretaries and consular agents. There was some question whether the general provision of law would apply also to interpreters, so it was deemed best to have a special clause in reference to interpreters, directing that they should be citizens of the United States, which is not required in reference to other employees. That explains, I think, the matter and the reason for this provision being found in the paragraph.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Of course, I shall not offer the amendment if it is covered by existing law. I merely raised the question to get information on the matter.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 24373. An act to reimburse Royal L. Sweany, late deputy collector of internal revenue at Tacoma, Wash.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 26305) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PENROSE, Mr. DOLLIVER, and Mr. CLAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEYBURN, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. MCLAURIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 138. Joint resolution to provide for the printing of 25,000 copies of a portion of the report of the National Conservation Commission.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following bill and resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 9154. An act to amend an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, approved May 27, 1908.

Senate concurrent resolution 101.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of that part of the Arkansas River between Little Rock and Dardanelle with a view to ascertaining if said part of said river is susceptible of being made available for purposes of navigation during the entire year, and, if found capable of being made so available, then to report an estimate of the cost of improving such part of said river by the construction of locks and dams, or otherwise, as well as to report an estimate of the probable tonnage that will seek transportation thereon in the event the same were so improved.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreters, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, $325,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do it for the purpose of getting some information from the chairman of the committee, and I know of no better source of getting it than of him. The bill appropriating funds for this established purpose covering the fiscal year 1908, the only year that I have the report on, was only $225,000.

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I notice in the report of the Secretary of State that he did not use that amount even by some $7,000. Now, why this increase of $100,000 per annum for this item?

Mr. COUSINS. This increase was provided in the bill in the last Congress.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am aware of that fact, but what was the reason for it?

Mr. COUSINS. The reason for it was that our representatives abroad, in many instances, were buying their own typewriting machines and paying postage on letters in answering communications from American merchants, and have been for a decade or more, and the Congress, in the last session, provided for that; and the fact that $7,000 was returned to the Treasury only shows the exactness with which this administration is carried on by the State Department, and instead of being subject to criticism it is a most commendable thing that when they found they did not need it it is returned to the Treasury.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be put in the attitude of criticising; I am simply asking for information.

Mr. COUSINS. I do not wish to put the gentleman in that attitude, and I am glad to give such information as I can.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not want to cripple this part of the service in any way whatever, but I would like to ask this question: Why were these officers abroad compelled to pay money out of their own pockets heretofore? Was it because the Government did not appropriate sufficient money?

Mr. COUSINS. Precisely; and it was perhaps because these men had so much at heart the interest of American business that they were willing to put their hands in their own pockets and pay the postage.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then, if the gentleman is not in error as to his statement, why did they not use the whole $225,000 appropriated for the department for that purpose for the fiscal year 1908?

Mr. COUSINS. Because you can never know how much of a contingent fund will be used.

Mr. HAMLIN. But, if these men were needing this amount of money for the purpose of paying postage, and so forth, why did not the department use the $225,000 instead of turning back nearly $8,000?

Mr. COUSINS. Because they found at that particular time it was not necessary; and that is most commendable conduct on the part of the State Department, in my judgment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the evidence which has been presented to the gentleman convince him that the full $325,000 will be needed to pay the expenses during the next fiscal year?

Mr. COUSINS. I believe so; I have never known an administration of affairs that has been conducted more exactly for the public interest than has been the administration in the State Department in recent years.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the committee to this fact: That there was appropriated for this purpose for the fiscal year 1908, $225,000; there was expended $218,964.91, leaving a balance of $6,035.92. credited to this fund, with a repayment of $1,245.81, making a balance of $7,282.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, the point that I can not understand is why, if these consular agents and other representatives of the Government in foreign countries needed money to pay their expenses, that $7,000 of money already appropriated for that purpose was not used for reimbursement to them for any expenses they had been to. I can not see the condition arising why there should be an increase of $100,000 in twelve months in this item alone.

Mr. COUSINS. Why, it is not an increase. This appropriation of the amount mentioned by the gentleman affects not only the paying of postage and buying of typewriting machines, but for rent of offices as well. For years the consuls have been allowed to live in back streets and alleys and in the poorest places in foreign cities.

We have improved that condition by giving increased rent allowances and have bettered the conditions in the offices by procuring typewriting machines; by paying the postage, which had formerly been paid out of the pockets of these gentlemen who represent our interests abroad; by installing necessary furniture and books.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then, I come back to the gentleman with the question, If that condition existed, why did they not use the full $225,000 that was appropriated for the year 1908?

Mr. COUSINS. As I said to the gentleman, you never can know what the contingencies will be.

Mr. HAMLIN. These men report to the Secretary of State, do they not?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMLIN. He would know that when he gets these reports.

Mr. COUSINS. They are sent and must be audited in the Treasury Department.

Mr. HAMLIN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRANSPORTATION OF DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS IN GOING TO AND RETURNING FROM THEIR POSTS.

To pay the cost of the transportation of diplomatic and consular officers in going to and returning from their posts, or when traveling under the orders of the Secretary of State, at the rate of 5 cents per mile, but not including any expense incurred in connection with leaves of absence, to continue available during the fiscal year 1910, $30,000.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit the following amendment to that paragraph: Insert the word "actual" after the word "the" and before the word "cost," in line 5, page 10; and the words "not to exceed" at the beginning of line 8, page 10; and strike out the word "at" in line 8, so that the paragraph will read:

To pay the actual cost of the transportation of diplomatic and consular officers in going to and returning from their posts or when traveling under orders of the Secretary of State, not to exceed the rate of 5 cents per mile.

Mr. COUSINS. I have not the slightest objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 5, page 10, before the word "cost," insert the word "actual;" at the beginning of line 8 strike out the word "at" and insert the words "not to exceed."

Mr. COUSINS. I have not the slightest objection to the amendment.

Mr. FASSETT. I would like the gentleman to explain about cost and actual cost.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 45.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to strike out the last word, and would like to ask the chairman of the committee another question in regard to this item. There has been carried, it appears, in these bills covering this item $30,000 each year. I notice in the last report that we have from the Secretary of State for the year 1908 there was only $8,259.79 used for the purposes provided for in this paragraph. Now, supposing that that is an average, at least, of the expenses required under this item for each year, I would like to know the necessity of appropriating from year to year $30,000 for this purpose.

Mr. COUSINS. The gentleman has the report for two years ago.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have the last report issued by the Secretary of State that is available to Members. I have the report for the year which closed June 30, 1908.

Mr. COUSINS. That was appropriated for in 1907.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; but it does not make any difference when it was appropriated. The point I make is that there was an appropriation of $30,000, and only $8,000 was used.

Mr. COUSINS. And every cent that was not needed reverted to the Treasury.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then, can the gentleman tell me——

Mr. COUSINS. And I wish to say, further, that there was an additional amount carried in one of the appropriation bills reported by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAMLIN. Can the gentleman give us any reason why there will be $30,000 needed for the next fiscal year for this purpose?

Mr. COUSINS. The only reason is the judgment of the Secretary of State; and if there is one penny more appropriated than is necessary, it will revert to the Treasury. You never can know a year in advance how much money will be required for the transportation of these officers, but you do know that every dollar of it must be audited and go through the Treasury Department.

Mr. HAMLIN. I for one am opposed to appropriating blindly a lot of money for any purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the gentleman that we ought to be as economical as we can; but does not this idea suggest itself to the gentleman, that is it very uncertain as to how much we will use of this appropriation, because there might be some serious international difficulties that might make it necessary for the agents of the Government to do considerable traveling, and they would have to be paid out of this fund; and if we were holding the appropriation down to a too close figure, it might be impossible, without a violation of the law, for the Government to send its agents to different places that might be necessary?

Mr. HAMLIN. I recognize the fact that we can imagine a great many things which might arise; but it seems to me that to appropriate four times as much as has been used is stretching it a little.

Mr. NORRIS. But because it is appropriated that does not mean that the money is lost or unnecessarily expended.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is not lost, but you are tying it up unnecessarily. I do not think it ought to be done.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman recall the fact that we have a new administration coming in, and that there will probably be a larger number of changes than in the fiscal year 1908?

Mr. HAMLIN. I confess, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. And that there might be changes made in many cases with profit.

Mr. HAMLIN. I had overlooked for the moment the fact that we are to have a new administration come in, and had overlooked the fact that the policy of that administration seems to be to increase all salaries and expenses.

Mr. COUSINS. No; there is no increase in this.

Mr. HAMLIN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPENSES UNDER THE NEUTRALITY ACT.

To meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended under the direction of the President pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question in relation to this. Can he inform the committee whether any of the $8,000 appropriated last year and the year before has ever been used, or whether there has been any necessity for using it?

Mr. COUSINS. If it was not actually used, it reverted to the Treasury, as I have said in reference to other items.

Mr. HAMLIN. What is the purpose of this appropriation, may I ask?

Mr. COUSINS. The "neutrality act," so called, is the act of April 20, 1818, declaring the policy of the United States toward foreign governments and the rights of individuals within the United States with reference to foreign complications, including enlisting in or accepting commission in foreign service while in the United States, arming vessels against people at peace with the United States, or to cruise against citizens of the United States, compelling foreign vessels to depart, and so forth.

The expenses of the foregoing paid under provisions of section 291, Revised Statutes, were as follows: 1905, $414.02; 1906, $671.49; 1907, $232.10.

Mr. HAMLIN. In 1908 there was no expenditure.

Mr. COUSINS. If there was no expenditure, then the money reverted to the Treasury.

Mr. HAMLIN. If there is no expenditure under this, what is the necessity of appropriating the money?

Mr. COUSINS. There was a time, near about the date of the Spanish war, when a vastly greater amount was needed. This is a sort of emergency fund; nobody can run away with it; it must revert to the Treasury if not properly expended.

Mr. HAMLIN. We can start them off with an opportunity to run away with it.

Mr. COUSINS. Oh, no; no one can get a penny of it improperly.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPAIRS TO LEGATION AND CONSULAR PREMISES.

To enable the Secretary of State to keep in repair the legation and consular premises owned by the Government of the United States and occupied by its agents, $10,000.

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment after the last paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 12, page 13, the following:

"Installation of water supply at Seoul: To enable the Secretary of State to install a water-supply system in the American consulate-general at Seoul, Korea, $971.95."

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I will say for the information of the Committee of the Whole that this item has been acted upon by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Items of cost have been fully set forth by the department in House document No. 1430, and it is really necessary that this provision should be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

International Bureau of American Republics, $54,000: Provided, That any moneys received from the other American republics for the support of the bureau, or from the sale of the bureau publications, shall be paid into the Treasury as a credit, in addition to the appropriation, and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the Secretary of State for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the bureau: And provided further, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print an edition of the Monthly Bulletin, not to exceed 5,000 copies, for distribution by the bureau every month during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I wish to ask the gentleman about the item in reference to the International Prison Congress. Is $10,000 all they asked for?

Mr. COUSINS. They asked for $50,000, but the committee put it at $10,000.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that is sufficient? As I remember, every time we have appropriated for expenses of our commissioners to the International Prison Congress, when it was abroad, we appropriated considerably more than $10,000. I assume that it will cost more when the congress is held here, and we have to do something toward taking care of the delegates, than it did when the congress was held abroad. Is it expected that there is to be any other appropriation in some other bill on this subject?

Mr. COUSINS. I do not think that it is so expected. Some members of the committee thought that $5,000 would be sufficient, inasmuch as we were to entertain them here at home, but the department asked for $50,000.

Mr. MANN. That did not meet with the approval of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER], for I remember that he figured on the proposition that we should have $25,000 to take care of the commissioners from two countries at an entertainment of some kind up on Lake Champlain.

Mr. PERKINS. But there was no appropriation for that amount.

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman from Vermont said it should be $25,000.

Mr. COUSINS. As to the Lake Champlain appropriation, I will be ominously silent on that subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I thought I might get a rise from the gentleman from Vermont. [Laughter.]

Mr. COUSINS. I have a fellowfeeling for him because he is a member of the committee. We thought we could entertain this prison congress for $10,000. I remember that the gentleman from Mississippi last year raised the question whether we should appropriate anything at all to maintain this institution.

Mr. MANN. I have raised that question several times myself in the House.

Mr. COUSINS. It happens that nearly forty years ago this House, or this Government, originated the idea of the prison congress. We are in a way obligated by reason of our history on the subject to carry out this proposition of the department, because we have invited these people, and the committee, after a good deal of discussion, concluded that we could entertain the delegates for $10,000. If the gentleman from Illinois wishes to offer an amendment for a larger amount, I would be glad to test the sense of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that I shall have to raise a point of order against any such amendment.

Mr. MANN. I regret to say that my attention was distracted at the time we passed the item or I should have offered an amendment, which would not have been subject to a point of order, increasing the amount. If we are to entertain these gentlemen, we ought to do it with dignity.

Mr. PERKINS. That matter was carefully considered by the committee, and it was thought that for the purpose of entertaining the delegates here $10,000 was amply sufficient. It was suggested by some interested in the cause that our Government should pay the expenses of delegates from the other countries who should go over the United States and view the prisons, inasmuch as the prison at Washington does not make this a special point for investigation. It did not seem to the committee that it was reasonable that the Government of the United States should pay the expenses of a large number of gentlemen interested in this subject traveling all over the land. We will entertain them here, but it did not seem right that we should take the money of the people of the United States to pay their traveling expenses for investigations.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman says "travel all over the land," of course nobody would justify that.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; but to go to various places where prisons are found, to go to places of special interest to those engaged in the study of criminal or prison statistics.

Mr. MANN. Here is an international prison congress, originated in this House, originated by this Government, which for the first time in its history meets in this country; and what do we propose to do? As Congress is not in session they can not show them Congress. Certainly they will not show them any prison in the District of Columbia, because there is no prison here that any gentleman would want to show to a foreign prison delegate with respect to himself or with respect to the delegate. What will they do? They ought to be able to show them the prisons in the district represented by the gentleman from Kansas, Fort Leavenworth—a credit to the United States. They ought to be able to show them some prisons that are a credit to the United States; but they will come here and go away, perhaps, after viewing the prison in Washington, with a feeling that the United States is so far behind on any kind of humanitarianism that they ought never to come back to this country.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether, when the delegates from this country have gone to other countries, the other countries have paid their expenses or whether our own Government has? I understand that we paid the expenses of those we sent abroad to investigate the question of prisons there, and I do not see why delegates coming here now should not do the same.

Mr. MANN. My information is that these delegates have been shown the prisons in foreign countries at the expense of the foreign countries, but that has gone by.

Mr. COUSINS. I think very likely out of this sum they could take them to Chicago and show them the institutions there that may be a credit to the Nation; and, furthermore, I want to suggest that there is no telling what may happen to this legislation in its travels after it leaves the House. Possibly it might be well for us to be a little conservative of the amount to start with.

Mr. MANN. Well, while I believe that the Senate is the greatest legislative body in the world, and occasionally crosses a "t" or dots an "i" with advantage, I hope that it will do it this time.

Mr. COUSINS. I hope, then, that if we are thrown down and forced to accept a larger amount, to have the able assistance of the gentleman from Illinois in the final test.

Mr. MANN. I believe that when you do a thing at all you ought to do it in a creditable manner. If you are entertaining guests, do not be stingy about it. If you do not want to invite guests, do not invite them. [Applause.]

Mr. COUSINS. I am very glad to hear that announcement, and I think it will help other provisions in the bill and in other bills. I quite agree with the gentleman, but the committee reached this conclusion.

Mr. MANN. Now, may I ask the gentleman in reference to the paragraph under discussion, which relates to the publication of the Bureau of the American Republics and which provides that the amounts received from the sale of the bureau publications shall be paid into the Treasury as a credit in addition to the appropriation? Does not the gentleman think that these indefinite appropriations of that sort, as a rule, are improper? Do not we appropriate enough money to publish the bulletin issued by this bureau?

Mr. COUSINS. Well, this is existing law and they are now issuing the most valuable bulletins that have ever been issued by the department, and I think the Members of the House realize that fact. I myself have received lately some of the most valuable publications that I have ever had, to be bound for my private library, and I am fully in accord with this appropriation, as I believe other Members are.

Mr. MANN. Nobody is objecting to that, but $54,000 is appropriated. Now, it has been the constant practice of this House to object to a provision covering money received from something of that sort back into an appropriation, and not covering it into the Treasury.

Mr. COUSINS. Well, the amount realized from the sale of publications last year was $1,690.21.

Mr. MANN. I do not think they need it. I make the point of order on the words in line 17, page 15, "or from the sale of the bureau publications." That simply means they will be covered into the Treasury. We appropriate the money necessary to run the publications.

Mr. NORRIS. That would mean also that the appropriation would be cut down by whatever amount would otherwise come in by virtue of these sales.

Mr. MANN. They would lose this thousand dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. The appropriation is already too small for that particular item.

Mr. COUSINS. I hope the gentleman will not cripple the publication of these documents. It is a small matter. I doubt if it is subject to a point of order. It is existing law.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but it is not existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. Let the Chair understand the objection made by the gentleman from Illinois. Is it to the words in line 17, beginning with the word "or" and ending with the word "publications?"

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear from the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, the only thing to say is that it has been existing law for many years. I suppose it went in originally on an appropriation bill, and I suppose this committee can deprive itself of the credit of nearly all legislation if it wants to by technical points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether this is existing law in any statute outside of an appropriation bill?

Mr. COUSINS. I think not; I think it went in on an appropriation bill. I am going to be perfectly frank with the committee; but I want to say again that the committee can deprive itself of the credit of a great deal of good legislation if it chooses to do so.

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, if he insists upon his point of order and it goes out, whether it will not be well to increase the total amount from $54,000 to $55,600?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

Mr. FASSETT. That will make it then about as broad as it is long.

Mr. MANN. The House has always maintained the principle.

Mr. COUSINS. Well, if the point of order is insisted on, I will offer the amendment that the total——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment: In line 14 strike out the word "fifty-four" and insert "fifty-six."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 14, strike out the word "fifty-four" and insert the word "fifty-six."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, I was very much pleased to hear the chairman of this committee make the comment he did make upon the publications of this bureau. I have been looking into it somewhat recently, and it seems to me that several copies of these bulletins that were issued are of exceptional high grade and quality; and it does occur to me that there ought to be some steps taken by which quite a number of these publications could be given as a quota to Members of Congress for free distribution, or that some other method should be adopted by which some of these publications could be distributed without expense; and I would like to ask the chairman if his committee has given any consideration to that subject?

Mr. COUSINS. I will say to the gentleman that I recently had a letter from the director of the bureau inviting me to give the names of such persons as might wish to receive these publications, and I have not the slightest doubt that if the gentleman will address a communication to the director that he can have the publications to furnish such libraries in his district as he may desire.

Mr. NORRIS. But I judge the law provides, from this item in this bill, that these publications shall be sold, and I presume that, comparatively speaking, a very small number of them could be given out free, and it is a publication that, as an educational medium on the subjects dealt with in the publication, can hardly be surpassed; and it ought to be, it seems to me, given for distribution. There are many people all over the country who do not know that such a thing is issued, who would be immensely interested if it could be brought to their attention.

Mr. COUSINS. Well, these publications are costly; they are illustrated——

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COUSINS (continuing). And the committee has been, as I have indicated, very conservative about expenses; and as I have said, I think the gentleman can get these for his libraries, where reference can be had to them.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, it may be that is true; but it occurred to me since they are published for sale that it would be like an ordinary magazine or newspaper that you could get only what would be given out as sample copies, and if all the Members of the House and Senate were to ask for a reasonable number——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will send his name and address, they will send the publication annually. What more can the gentleman ask?

Mr. COUSINS. Certainly; and it will be only a little while when we shall move into the premises provided by Mr. Carnegie, and then we hope our expenses will be curtailed.

Mr. MANN. And if everybody asked for them, they would have to increase the quantity published.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE.

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1909, $4,800.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Page 16, line 13, strike out the word "nine" and insert the word "ten."

So as to read:

Calendar year 1910.

It is a clerical error in the print.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 13, strike out the word "nine" and insert the word "ten."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. If anyone in the House is able to give any excuse whatever for this appropriation I wish somebody would do it. The idea of our contributing to maintain an agricultural institute in Rome, when we are the agricultural nation of the world, is to my mind the most ridiculous proposition that I have ever heard submitted. It is not in the interests of agriculture; it is for a particular individual.

Mr. COUSINS. We have agreed to this by international convention, the most solemn obligation that we have; and we have cut down the amount of the estimate from $14,000 to $4,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman explain what this institute is for?

Mr. COUSINS. It is to consider agriculture in all its phases.

Mr. NORRIS. When was the international agreement made in regard to it?

Mr. COUSINS. It was signed at Rome, June 7, 1905.

Mr. NORRIS. Do we get reports from this institute?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes; the Department of Agriculture gets reports.

Mr. NORRIS. Have they been of any practical benefit to our people?

Mr. COUSINS. Probably no nation in the world can help us very much on agriculture, but it helps in international amity.

Mr. MANN. Then this contribution is not to agriculture, but to amity?

Mr. COUSINS. There are many things that we gain by international amity.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman ever heard of a report being made?

Mr. COUSINS. I dare say that the conventions that are held between the nations of the earth are of vastly greater importance to the United States than to other governments.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman speaks of convention. This is a private snap over in Rome.

Mr. COUSINS. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COUSINS. It is an international convention between us and eight other nations.

Mr. MANN. It is a private snap over in Rome. I know what it is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COUSINS. Why, the gentleman calls it a private snap. Our representative gets no salary whatever. The conventions are carried on by our representatives over there.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the institute always held in the same place?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe I have the floor. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Have you any idea how long these various international congresses and institutes are going to be continued? We have a dozen international institutes and congresses. We have the Institute of Agriculture, the International Railway Congress, the International Prison Commission, and all these various things. Is there any idea to make them permament, or what do they expect to do with them?

Mr. COUSINS. I remember the gentleman asked the question as to the prison congress last session. I told him then that we should investigate the subject, and in all probability we will get rid of that at the next session. But this year it happened to be the fact that we have invited these nations to participate in a meeting which we ourselves originated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see the force of that.

Mr. COUSINS. I can not answer as to how long this international agricultural convention will be held.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me it would be very bad policy to encourage the existence of a lot of permanent international institutions and congresses of this sort.

Mr. COUSINS. Let me say to the gentleman that this year the State Department had invitations for 48 various conventions or congresses and recommended only four. The department has been very conservative in that matter; and, as I said before, the Department of State believes that these international meetings and conventions are of very great good to the country in many ways.

Mr. COLE. I want to say just a word in relation to this international institute of agriculture. About two years ago there was a conference in Rome on the subject of agriculture. Many nations were represented. The authorities in Italy agreed to and did build a very fine building as a permanent home for this institute. They expended $400,000 in the construction of this building, and each nation is supposed to keep a delegate there, a personal representative.

The purpose of this agricultural institute, as I understand it, is to afford a sort of clearing house for all agricultural information throughout the world. At the present time we have a great many agricultural agents seeking information, making investigations throughout the world. Instead of sending out all those agents to all the various nations of the earth, each nation gathers its information, sends it to this headquarters, and from there as a central point it is disseminated throughout the world, and the United States at the present time receives regular reports from this international court.

And instead of sending special agents out, costing the United States Government tremendous sums of money, we have there a clearing house where all this information can be gathered for a very moderate price.

Mr. YOUNG. Does this institution issue a report, and if so, how is it distributed, and how many come to the United States, and how are they distributed here?

Mr. COLE. I am not familiar with the details of the working of this institute, but, as I understand it, their information is transmitted to the Agricultural Department of the United States, and it is disseminated in the same manner that all other information is disseminated by that department.

Mr. YOUNG. Is it issued by the Department of Agriculture as a special report?

Mr. COLE. I am not familiar with that. In fact, it is merely in its incipiency. Our agent has only been there for about a year and a half or two years, and its practical operation is not perhaps yet perfect, but I think it has within it elements of great value to the agricultural interests, not only of this Nation, but of the civilized world.

Mr. COUSINS. I think it ought to be said in this connection, referring to the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] as to the International Railway Congress, that only a year and a half ago probably the most significant evidence furnished to the Senate was by a gentleman from Great Britain, giving the details of their system of railways and railway management. That is published in the documents which you all receive, an outgrowth of this International Railway Convention.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa is not to be criticised because he is not familiar with this item or with the work done by the item, and no gentleman in the House is subject to criticism for lack of knowledge of the subject. The gentleman from Iowa seemed to assume that this item was for a convention. He stated that it was to pay the expenses of a convention. Now, there was no convention held last year, there is no convention held this year, there will be no convention held next year, but the item is just the same. It is not for a convention at all.

Mr. COUSINS. The gentleman must not put me in that attitude. My statement was that it is a permanent institution.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman may revise his remarks as he pleases. I do not care what he says.

Mr. COUSINS. I have no need to revise my remarks.

Mr. MANN. That is all right. I am perfectly willing; but what the gentleman said was that it was to pay the expenses of a convention.

Mr. COUSINS. Oh, no. Now let us understand each other. What I said was that it was created by a convention. This appropriation is not for any special meeting. It is for a permanent institution that was created by an international convention.

Mr. MANN. Some distinguished gentleman of Rome conceived the notion of having an agricultural institute in Rome which he would head, and he went so far that he persuaded a number of nations to agree to that.

Mr. COUSINS. It was a Californian who originated the idea, and the gentleman from Illinois should know that most of the distinguished men of Rome have been dead for a good many years. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. And it would be better for the world, probably, if this one were with his fathers. It certainly would be better for our Treasury. This agricultural institute is a pure fake. It does no good for anybody except those who draw the money. It has no standing with the Agricultural Department here. It issues no reports of value to anyone. It is a pure and simple private snap.

Mr. COLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COLE. I wish to state that this proposition is indorsed by the Agricultural Department here, and was indorsed by the agent of the Agricultural Department before the Committee on Agriculture not more than six weeks ago.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have no doubt of that. I do not deny that statement. I said it had no standing with the Agricultural Department here. Of course, the man who represents the Government over there, drawing this salary, is for the item, and will continue to be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much is paid in salaries for this agricultural institute by the United States Government?

Mr. COUSINS. There is no officer that draws a salary under this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. There is not? What is that money used for?

Mr. COUSINS. It is purely for clerical work, in collecting and disseminating information.

Mr. MANN. Who represents the United States at this institute?

Mr. COUSINS. Our representative at Rome.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Ohio ought not to have their wires crossed. The gentleman from Ohio just said that we had a representative there who is paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. COLE. I did state that we had a representative there——

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman was correct.

Mr. COLE. We have a representative there, but he is not drawing a salary, aside from what he receives as the regular compensation as an agent of the Agricutural Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does anybody know to whom and for what this money is paid? I will ask the gentleman from Ohio or the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. COUSINS. I said that this is purely for clerical work. Mr. David Lubin does not draw a cent of salary out of this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I will tell the gentleman what this is for; neither the gentleman from Iowa nor the gentleman from Ohio seems to know what it is for. The money is to maintain and pay the expenses of a part of a building for the benefit of somebody else. A little of it may go for clerical services, but they have a large building there, and this is to pay the running expenses of that building. What is the building for? You might as well have a building at the bottom of the Pacific Ocean as far as any good to this country is concerned.

Mr. COUSINS. Of course the gentleman from Illinois knows more about it than anybody else in the world, when he says that we receive no benefit from it.

Mr. MANN. I may not know more about it than anybody else in the world, but I am willing to put my knowledge against that of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. COUSINS. I think the gentleman knows more about every subject than anybody else in the world. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I am still willing to put my knowledge against that of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he can give us the name of our representative at this institute at this time?

Mr. COUSINS. David Lubin.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does he make any pretense toward any special knowledge of agriculture?

Mr. COUSINS. I do not know what is in his mind or what his abilities are.

Mr. HAMLIN. Can the gentleman give us any idea how this institute benefits the farmers of America?

Mr. COUSINS. As I said a while ago, I believe every international convention and all international congresses are a benefit to our country. They bring the nations closer together; it helps us in our commerce; it helps us in matters of amity; and there is no doubt, in my judgment, that every time they meet together all conditions are improved.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to ask one more question. What authority appointed this man Lubin as our representative?

Mr. COUSINS. The President is authorized by the treaty to make the appointment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, this provision did not originate with the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is the result of a convention, technically so—more plainly stated, a treaty—introduced by and between the Government of Italy and the President of the United States and ratified by the Senate of the United States.

This convention imposed certain obligations on the Government of the United States, and it is in pursuance of that obligation, which has the binding effect of law, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs made this appropriation. The history of it is set out, and if the gentleman will permit me, I will read it:

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE AT ROME.

This institute was created by an international convention signed at Rome on June 7, 1905, to which the United States is a signatory government. The convention was approved by the Senate on June 27, 1906, was ratified by the President on July 7, 1906, and was proclaimed by the President on July 29, 1908.

Under this convention the United States is required to pay annually the sum of $4,800 as its share of the expenses of the institute. Connected with the institute is a permanent commission and a general assembly, membership and representation in which require an additional estimated appropriation of $8,600, making $13,400. The convention makes no provision for withdrawal therefrom.

The institute has been too recently established to afford an idea of its practical benefits and results. It is primarily of interest to the Department of Agriculture.

Now, then, we appropriate in this bill for the proportional part for the United States of all the expenses.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand it is not a question whether we want to make the appropriation, but by virtue of the treaty we are compelled to make it.

Mr. HOWARD. We are, unless the treaty is denounced and withdrawn from by the United States.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then there is no use in arguing the matter any further. I think we ought to withdraw from it, but if we have not withdrawn we must make the appropriation.

Mr. HOWARD. The Department of State in the estimate requested an additional $8,000 for the purpose of enlarging, in a measure, the participation of the United States in this institution. This committee declined, and refused to incorporate one dollar of that additional increase in this bill, and limited the appropriation to only the exact amount required under the treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it might perhaps be of some interest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] and to others whose attention has been directed to this matter to know that the Committee on Agriculture inquired into it in connection with the hearings had by that committee in preparing its appropriation bill. The hearing was taken up in connection with the remarks made by Doctor Clark, Assistant Chief of the Bureau of Statistics in the Department of Agriculture, who was a delegate to the institute in Rome last summer, and inquiry was made of him as to the practical value of the work being done by the institute. His reply was that that work was regarded by agricultural experts all over the world as being of very considerable value, that the function of the institute was to afford a sort of clearing house for agricultural information throughout the world, and that the information accumulated by that institute and distributed around among various governments through their agricultural departments was of actual practical benefit and value.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman know of any benefit the United States has received from that institute?

Mr. SCOTT. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], in questioning Doctor Clark, brought out the suggestion pretty strongly that the United States was giving more than it was receiving through this institute, and yet I think Doctor Clark rather insisted that while at present we may perhaps be contributing more than we gain, still there is a chance that now and then some matter of information may come to us which will be in the nature of news, and may have some real value to us.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it not also true that there is a chance, a strong probability, that if we carry on this nonsensical work over there we will impart to other nations a thousandfold more than we receive?

Mr. SCOTT. That is entirely probable, but I do not see that there is any objection to that. We are living in an altruistic age, and it ought not to be a condemnation of a proposition that as a result of it we give to others more than we obtain from them.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman from Kansas believe that this country, the greatest agricultural country in the world, expending ten or twelve million dollars every year in the interests of agriculture, ought not to give the benefit of our researches and our discoveries to nations which compete with the American farmer in the sale of products?

Mr. SCOTT. I would hardly take that view of it. I think that our situation, agriculturally, is so different from that of any other country that any little advantage which they might obtain through acquaintance with information which we have developed here will not bring us any harm.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me ask the gentleman, Did not Doctor Clark also suggest—without undertaking to quote his language—that each representative there refrained from imparting more than he had to; that each sought to get as much from others as possible, in order to derive a benefit; and did not he state that we had infinitely more to impart in respect to the modern methods of agriculture than any other nation on earth?

Mr. SCOTT. I did not get the impression that there was any disposition on the part of representatives of other nations to withhold information which they might have and draw from us all they could get.

Mr. RUCKER. Did the gentleman get the intimation that other nations had any information that would be beneficial to us?

Mr. SCOTT. I fear I have not time to answer that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask that his time be extended two minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am confident that there is no better source of information than the chairman of the great Agricultural Committee of this House on this proposition.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman does me great honor.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to ask if he has ever seen any report that has been issued by the Italian institute that would give any information to the farmers whatever?

Mr. SCOTT. I have not seen any such report, but the fact that I have not seen it does not argue that such a report may not have been made. My understanding is that whatever reports do issue from this institute go to the departments of agriculture of the various countries, and the results are used by the officials in those departments.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the gentleman understand that it is the purpose to issue reports touching on subjects appertaining to agriculture?

Mr. SCOTT. That is my understanding.

Mr. HAMLIN. But the gentleman does not know of any having been issued?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not know personally of any individual reports.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is it a question of theoretic farming, or what is it over there anyway? There are no experimental farms or anything of that kind used in connection with it?

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, not in connection with this institute. All the governments of Europe are spending a greater or smaller sum of money to get information in order to promote agriculture in their respective countries, and in connection with the expenditure of that money naturally they develop information, methods of tillage, breeding of seeds, or things of that sort that are of interest to our people, and it is the expectation that whenever anything is developed of special interest so as perhaps to make it important to be known by any other country it will be reported to that country through that institute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended in order to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it not true that the United States Department of Agriculture has been making extensive experiments in the matter of the production of what is called "macaroni" wheat?

Mr. SCOTT. Macaroni wheat was introduced into the United States through the Department of Agriculture several years ago, but the department is no longer conducting experiments in connection with it for the reason that the industry seems to be thoroughly established, inasmuch as we produced last year about 50,000,000 bushels of macaroni wheat.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it not a fact that information with respect to the production and adaptation of macaroni wheat to certain sections of our country was aided by this very institution at Rome?

Mr. SCOTT. I have no doubt that has been the fact.

Mr. MANN. What makes the gentleman believe it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to get some information about this matter over in Rome or somewhere, and I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I have listened some little while to get the information that I still would like to get. What good is this institution doing the people of the United States? Where is the return for the investment that we are making? My friend from Georgia has clearly elucidated the matter to the extent of saying that a treaty—which is a law and no higher dignity than a statute—has been made that calls for the making of an appropriation to carry it on.

Mr. COUSINS. I would ask that the Clerk read from the provisions of the treaty.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman state what it is? If not, then I ask unanimous consent that it be read, but not in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE 9.

The institute, confining its operations within an international sphere, shall—

(a) Collect, study, and publish as promptly as possible statistical, technical, or economic information concerning farming, both vegetable and animal products, the commerce in agricultural products, and the prices prevailing in the various markets;

(b) Communicate to parties interested, also as promptly as possible, all the information just referred to;

(c) Indicate the wages paid for farm work;

(d) Make known the new diseases of vegetables which may appear in any part of the world, showing the territories infected, the progress of the disease, and, if possible, the remedies which are effective in combating them;

(e) Study questions concerning agricultural cooperation, insurance, and credit in all their aspects; collect and publish information which might be useful in the various countries in the organization of works connected with agricultural cooperation, insurance, and credit;

(f) Submit to the approval of the governments, if there is occasion for it, measures for the protection of the common interests of farmers and for the improvement of their condition, after having utilized all the necessary sources of information, such as the wishes expressed by international or other agricultural congresses or congresses of sciences applied to agriculture, agricultural societies, academies, learned bodies, etc.

All questions concerning the economic interests, the legislation, and the administration of a particular nation shall be excluded from the consideration of the institute.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, we have heard article 9 read, and I now have a copy in my hand. I should like to know from the committee reporting the bill, if any of this work that this institution has referred to it has been done? I am trying to get at the result of it; I am trying to find out what we are getting for our money. I understand that we started out on a large scale to collect everything on the other side of the world, and compile all that is fit to be gathered and compiled, and send it over here for our information. Now, what has been gathered, and what has been published?

Mr. COUSINS. If the gentleman will go to the Department of Agriculture he will find everything——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has the gentleman been there?

Mr. COUSINS. I have probably distributed a good many thousand copies of the bulletins that copy from these reports.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell me one thing new that has been sent here that the gentleman has distributed?

Mr. COUSINS. Oh, I have not learned them by heart, but I suppose I have distributed a good many thousands of them that contain copies from the articles that have been sent to our Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have distributed everything that that great friend of the farmer, Secretary Wilson, has had to pass through his department that has gone to my credit, and I think I have an intelligent constituency, as much so as any other man in the United States, and I have never heard of a scientist, I have never heard of the real farmer, I have never heard of a stump speaker, I have never heard of a preacher, I have never heard of a country doctor, I have never heard of a banker, I have never heard of a presiding elder in my whole district who ever got any information from Rome about how to farm.

Mr. COUSINS. In view of the action of the gentleman's constituency at the last election, I can not quite agree with him in his statement as to the intelligence of his constituency.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I stood up in front of my enemy and I did not turn tail and run in that campaign, like the gentleman did. [Laughter and applause.]

I stayed at my post, and because I did I was assassinated by the tobacco trust, the powder trust, and the other people that I have fought like a man, when the gentleman was absent from his post. I make no apologies for my defeat. I am proud of having such enemies; they may be your friends.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph for the purpose of getting this matter before the committee; and one way to get rid of it is to strike out the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. The first amendment offered by the gentleman was to strike out the last word of the paragraph. He now offers an amendment to strike out the paragraph. By unanimous consent this second amendment will be entertained by the Chair.

Mr. FASSETT. I object.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who objected, the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry. Is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee still before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman to strike out the last word is still before the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the motion to strike out the paragraph before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desired to be heard if it were.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the pro forma amendment for a few moments. The debate we have just heard about the agricultural institution at Rome is very illuminating to all the Members of the House. It illustrates very clearly some of the difficulties under which the Committee on Foreign Affairs is laboring in attempting to prepare its annual appropriation bill. The Department of State seems to feel that the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the membership of this House are not to be trusted too far in investigating our international relations. The time was when the House of Representatives constituted practically the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Congress managed the foreign affairs of our country.

For one, I wish that those days were here now. The present Department of State has not given us sufficient information to enable us to explain fully upon the floor of the House all of the items in this bill in which Members are interested. We called before the committee the Assistant Secretary of State, now serving as Secretary of State, and particularly requested that he should inform us specifically, item by item, the purpose of each one of these appropriations for international bureaus; the purpose for which money had been already expended, and the bases of authority under which we are now asked to appropriate money. But the Secretary did not give us information as to all of these items. There are some 16 or 17 which were originally recommended by the Department of State. As to two of these, by independent investigation the committee discovered that there was no convention or no treaty authorizing the appropriation, and no law requiring the appropriation, and as to these two items the appropriations went out on a point of order in the committee; but as to the remaining 14 or 15 international bureaus and institutions of one sort and another, we had printed the testimony of the Secretary of State. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] has just read to the House the testimony of the Secretary of State covering this International Institute of Agriculture at Rome. It does not explain, and from the context we can not explain exactly for what purpose this appropriation was used last year in Rome. All we can tell you is what the Secretary told us in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I am sorry to say the information is not as full as we should have hoped it to be. I, as a member of the committee, even though only a minority member, could wish that the Department of State would not hold us at arm's length, but would show more confidence in the membership of the committee and the membership of this House. Now, I for one am opposed to the establishment of all these international bureaus, but the House of Representatives is not responsible. It is done by treaty, ratified by the Senate in all these cases, and we are called upon under the terms of those treaties to appropriate the money to carry out all these conventions. Therefore, as a member of this committee, I feel that I am obliged to vote in committee and on the floor of the House for the item which the bill carries. But I regret, as a member of the committee, that we can not furnish the House with more complete information, and I have just informed the House why we are unable to do so.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Chairman, I wish, in replying to the gentleman from New York, to say that although in my work with him on the committee I have noticed and admired the zeal with which he does seek to secure information and the skill and ability with which he conducts himself on the floor, I must say that I can not agree with him in his references to the Department of State.

I can not feel that the Committee on Foreign Affairs deal at arm's length, or in any other way, except sympathetically, with the Department of State; and certainly since I have been a Member of this body I have never seen a tendency on the part of the Department of State to decline to furnish any information at any time that has been asked for by the Committee on Foreign Affairs or by any member thereof. If we have not informed ourselves concerning these items, it is our own fault, and I am very glad for one to take my share of the blame. I can not feel it right to pass it on to Mr. Elihu Root, the Secretary of State, or the other members of the Department of State. I have never addressed a request to the department that has not been at once honored with as full information as they could give, and I am quite confident that such has been the experience of every member of the committee, I hope not excepting the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON].

I think it only right that this statement should be made as coming from one member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs at least; and in saying this I feel confident that I voice the sentiments—I was going to say of all the other members of the committee, and I think I may indeed say all but a very few of the other members of the committee. And in saying that also I would like to add that I know of no committee that has more harmony between the two sides of the House, the two parties, than the Committee on Foreign Affairs, where the Democratic and Republican members work together in absolute sympathy, as they should, peculiarly in relation to the matters over which this committee has jurisdiction.

Mr. PERKINS. I agree with my friend from Michigan [Mr. DENBY] and must somewhat disagree with my friend from New York [Mr. HARRISON] in reference to the information obtained from the Department of State. I think the gentleman from New York is right perhaps in his suggestion that there may be some ancient items in this bill, in reference to provisions of treaties made long ago, which might profitably be investigated; but if there has been any lack of investigation, I think it has been rather the lack of the committee in asking information than any refusal to furnish information.

The gentleman referred to the provision in reference to this convention or agricultural college in Rome, by whatever name it is properly called, which item has brought about this debate. Now, there was no full information in reference to that furnished by the Secretary of State, but certainly there can be no charge made of any unwillingness on the part of the department to furnish all it knows. This appropriation is of such a peculiar character, its utility is so uncertain, as is shown by the debate we have had here to-day, that if the Department of State could not furnish full information as to its usefulness, it is quite apparent that the entire House of Representatives is at some trouble to ascertain satisfactorily whether or not there is any utility to be found in it. That the department was unable to furnish us information which nobody is able to furnish us certainly is no cause of surprise, and certainly is no cause of criticism.

Mr. HARRISON. My colleague was present at the committee meeting in which we pointed out to the Assistant Secretary of State the fact that there were a great many of these international bureaus and institutions for which we were asked to appropriate, and at which we asked the Assistant Secretary of State to give us as full a statement as possible for each one of these appropriations.

Now, the gentleman heard the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] read on the floor here a few moments ago the statement of the Assistant Secretary of State as to the necessity of this appropriation, but it did not satisfy the House, and I, for one, am free to say it did not satisfy me.

Mr. PERKINS. In reference to that, I can say, Mr. Chairman, that I think some of these items run so far into the past, have become so rusty from the course of years, that I doubt if in the State Department or anywhere else any satisfactory information can be found; but that is not the fault of the State Department, it seems to me.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman's criticism certainly does not apply to this item, because this is only about two years old.

Mr. PERKINS. No; this, though new, is still obscure.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of State to mark the boundary and make the surveys incidental thereto, between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, in conformity with the award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal and existing treaties, including employment at the seat of government of such surveyors, computers, and draftsmen as are necessary to reduce field notes, $100,000, to be immediately available, together with the unexpended balance of the previous appropriation for this object.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I notice in this paragraph that you appropriate $100,000 to enable the Secretary of State to mark the boundaries and make the surveys incidental thereto between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. COUSINS. For the next fiscal year.

Mr. MACON. And you appropriate $75,000 for the present fiscal year. Was this $75,000 used?

Mr. COUSINS. Most of it. They are providing this year for a more extensive survey and demarcation than for several years. It must be remembered that this work can be carried on only about six months in the year. They have made very extensive preparations with reference to the proposed work for the coming year.

Mr. MACON. How many years has this provision been carried in the bill?

Mr. COUSINS. About six years.

Mr. MACON. What is the amount appropriated heretofore?

Mr. COUSINS. Four hundred and fifteen thousand dollars, all told.

Mr. MACON. About how long does the gentleman think it will take to establish this boundary line?

Mr. COUSINS. The estimate is from eight to nine years.

Mr. MACON. Pretty expensive proposition, is it not?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes; because it is very difficult work.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit a question? I understood in another part of the consideration of this bill that in all these items any unexpended balance reverted automatically to the Treasury.

Mr. COUSINS. Except in continuing appropriations, such as for international surveys.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is the point I want to raise. I see at the end of the fiscal year 1908 there was an available balance of this fund of $106,797.39, and then you appropriate $75,000 more.

Mr. COUSINS. No; since that report, the most of that $106,000 has been spent.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman did not catch my question. Since the available balance, you appropriate $75,000 more, which would make about $181,000, and now you propose to appropriate a hundred thousand dollars more.

Mr. COUSINS. I say that the available balance has been nearly all spent. They are already getting the parties together, horses and all manner of equipment, on the Pacific coast, ready to start as early as they can.

Mr. HAMLIN. When did they spend this $100,000?

Mr. COUSINS. Since the preparation of the report which the gentleman holds in his hand, and principally, I think, during the last three months.

The Clerk read as follows:

The judicial authority and jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases now vested in and reserved to the consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, China, by the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act creating a United States court for China and prescribing the jurisdiction thereof," shall, subsequent to June 30, 1909, be vested in and exercised by a vice-consul-general of the United States to be designated from time to time by the Secretary of State, and the consul-general at Shanghai shall thereafter be relieved of his judicial functions.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the provision just read. I want some information concerning this change. I understand that the consul-general insists that the work is too heavy for him.

Mr. COUSINS. Yes; his time is needed for the transaction of business that belongs to the office. This merely gives authority to the vice-consul-general to try these cases.

Mr. MACON. Without any additional compensation?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

Mr. DENBY. The Secretary of State is authorized to designate the person who shall discharge the duties that are now discharged by the consul-general. I have a statement here showing the vast amount of minor judicial work which has been heretofore and is now imposed on the consul-general, and which interferes with the discharge of the more important functions of his office. I do not think it necessary to read the report of the number of cases. I assure the gentleman that it is absolutely essential that he be relieved of this work.

Mr. MACON. If there is to be no extra expense, no extra office created, I can not see why the responsibility for this class of work should not be shifted from the consul-general to the deputy.

Mr. DENBY. There is no extra expense.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL OFFICE OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the year 1909 toward the support of the international office of public health, created by the international arrangement signed at Rome December 9, 1907, in pursuance of article 181 of the international sanitary convention signed at Paris on December 3, 1903, $3,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he remembers the provisions of the treaty upon which this appropriation is based? Is that an indefinite and permanent provision? Has that to go on forever, or does the treaty itself fix any period of expiration?

Mr. COUSINS. I have the treaty here. It is quite lengthy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman remember that particular point, as to whether it is indefinite?

Mr. COUSINS. It is indefinite.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not expire by its own limitation?

Mr. COUSINS. No; it does not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the gentleman think it would be well to suggest to the State Department to give notice of its termination? Of course I believe that as long as we have a treaty and we have undertaken to pay our share, the only decent way of seeking to pay our share is to put an end to the treaty. Does not the gentleman think it would be well to give notice in this case? This has been going on now since 1881, has it not?

Mr. COUSINS. No; this is new, 1903, and this is the first appropriation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, this is the first appropriation?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

PURCHASE OF PROPERTY FOR LEGATION PURPOSES AT TOKYO, JAPAN.

Purchase of residence erected by Mr. R. S. Miller, Japanese secretary to the embassy at Tokyo, at his own expense, on ground held by the United States in perpetual lease for legation purposes in Tokyo, $3,267.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that provision.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I will simply offer in explanation of this the statement of Mr. Secretary Root, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY], who has further data upon the subject. The Secretary had this to say:

For the purchase of the residence erected by R. S. Miller, Japanese secretary to the embassy at Tokyo, at his own expense, on ground held by the United States in perpetual lease for legation purposes in Tokyo, the appropriation of the very moderate sum of $3,267 is requested. This would add to the embassy property at Tokyo a good modern house as a permanent residence for the Japanese secretary adjacent to the houses of the ambassador and of the secretary of embassy, which have long been owned by the Government. The house could not be duplicated to-day at the sum named.

This recommendation was first made by me on January 23, 1906, and was repeated last year. My conviction that this is an entirely just and proper request constrains me again to ask its favorable consideration. The particulars with reference to this item may be found in House Document No. 432, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.

In considering the question as affecting the present Japanese secretary, it is only fair to recall that when he entered upon his present duties some twelve years ago, among the buildings comprising the present embassy premises there was a dwelling for the Japanese secretary, which, however, was later on condemned and torn down; and also that the present building was erected on government property with the permission of the then minister and mainly by reason of his desire, for reasons of official business, to have the Japanese secretary live conveniently near.

I had a conversation with the consul-general at Yokohama recently, in which he said that he had seen this building and that it could not be reproduced now for less than $4,000. These are the facts in the case, and probably it is a very good investment. We now own nine of our buildings abroad, and this will make ten.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, if this matter stood alone, perhaps it might be a fairly good investment for the Government at this particular time. I am not going to question the gentleman's statement as to its probable cost if it were to be constructed now; but I do not think there is any warrant of law for carrying this appropriation upon this appropriation bill; that it is unauthorized by existing law, and if it were permitted to remain in the bill, when a point of order might be made against it, we would have each year some new amendments providing for the construction of this or that building here or there, a magnificent structure in London, one at Paris, one perhaps in the City of Mexico, one at Berlin, and so on, and there is no telling where it would stop. I do not believe in establishing such a precedent, and for that reason I must insist upon the point of order, believing that it is my duty to do so.

Mr. DENBY. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a few moments until I can offer further explanation?

Mr. MACON. Yes.

Mr. DENBY. The gentleman's objection seems to be that this might establish a bad precedent, and that upon other legation property in other countries similar houses might be erected, and then Congress would be called upon to purchase them. As a matter of fact, that is not possible. We own only three legation sites in all the world. In fact, we do not own this site.

Mr. MACON. No; this is under a lease.

Mr. DENBY. Yes; but it is practically owned by the United States Government. The circumstances surrounding the construction of this house were very peculiar. Mr. Miller was the Japanese secretary of the legation as it then was and lived in a residence which, as the chairman has stated, became uninhabitable. Just before the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese war it became peculiarly necessary that Mr. Miller should be close to the ambassador and ready with his advice and his skill in the interpretation of languages at all hours of the day and night. There was no room in the house of the minister or ambassador at that time.

There was no house convenient near at hand, and so Mr. Miller asked the minister if he might be authorized to put up the house at his own expense on the legation grounds, which were very extensive. The minister recommended to the Secretary of State that he be given that authority, and the Secretary of State gave that authority to him to erect a house at his own expense. I would say that Mr. Miller, while one of the most valuable men in the foreign service of the United States, and practically the backbone of the embassy at Tokyo, is a very poor man. He had to borrow the money with which to erect this house. He borrowed it at a high rate of interest, and is now paying a high rate of interest on the loan. The house cost him 6,535 yen. We are not asking the Government to reimburse him for interest or any incidental expenses or any appreciation in the value of the house, but merely the exact cost of the house to him in the year 1903. And it seems to me that equity and simple justice, I will say to the gentleman from Georgia, if he will look at the matter from that standpoint——

Mr. MACON. If the gentleman locates me as being from Georgia he can not hope to get me to see this matter his way at all——

Mr. DENBY. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MACON (continuing). For I am very proud of Arkansas and do not care to lose my identity with it.

Mr. DENBY. It is a great honor to come from either State, and I feel it is not at all necessary to apologize for the mistake. I think if the gentleman from Arkansas will consider and take into consideration all the peculiar facts concerning this case, the small salary, the poverty of this man, his great service to the Government, and the fact we are getting a splendid investment, and the further fact that a precedent can not be established, and the precedent can not be a bad one, because there is no other quarter of the world except Peking, Tokyo, and Seoul where we own premises or come so near owning them as we do at Tokyo; and, therefore, I do not think there is any danger in Europe where this thing can be repeated. If the gentleman will consider, it is merely a question of justice between the United States and this man.

The United States owes him a residence. We give our Chinese secretary in Peking a residence, and there is no reason why we should not give this man a residence and no reason why we should compel him to pay the cost of the residence himself practically on American territory.

Mr. MACON. Why are not all the secretaries furnished with residences, if we owe them to them?

Mr. DENBY. It is not always necessary for the secretaries to be in the same compound and so close to the ambassador as in Tokyo. It is absolutely essential that he should live on the embassy's premises, and particularly as the case was then, with a great war brewing, which immediately broke out in 1904. He had to come there; there was no place for him to go. There was no appropriation for a house and they permitted him to build, under the circumstances that arose in that case. We did not make him any promises that we would reimburse him—that is, any official promises—but he was told, and has been told consistently, that every effort would be made to get back the cost of the residence.

I can not see that there is anything to it except—I quite appreciate the validity of the gentleman's objection on general principles as to creating a precedent if the circumstances were not so unique as they are in this case, and therefore the precedent to which he objects, and soundly objects, can really have no effect in this case. I hope the gentleman will try to look at it from the point of view that this country practically really owned this land. We are too big to make him pay out of his funds in fact for the right of serving the Government.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to oblige the gentleman from Michigan, as I would each and every other Member of this House whenever they ask me to oblige them in any way; but I have a duty to perform, and I can not see that duty through the eyes of each and every Representative here. I must view it through my own.

I do not think it wise for the Government to purchase houses that have been erected upon grounds leased by the Government, not owned by any of its officers, and in that way establish a precedent of allowing its officials abroad, when they think they need a home, or really know they need one, to erect a building without lawful authority and then expect the Government of the United States to take it off of their hands. I do not believe it would be a good precedent, and I will not lend my voice or vote to it, and hence I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I desire to offer one remark from the present first secretary of the embassy at Tokyo, and I will say, in this connection, I have never seen Mr. Miller, and there is nothing personal to me in this nor——

Mr. MACON. I am sure of that; the gentleman sees it that way; that is all.

Mr. DENBY. The first secretary states that Mr. Miller was persuaded, with the consent of the department, to build at his own expense a small residence in the legation grounds. I can not see how any more equitable case could ever be presented for reimbursement than this case.

Mr. MACON. Then I do not think it wise for the department to encourage one of its employees to do a thing that is directly in the teeth of the law, and I will not give my sanction to it.

Mr. DENBY. It is the only case of the kind that has ever arisen, and it is the only case of the kind that can ever arise.

Mr. MACON. It will not be long, if this is allowed, before we will probably have another.

Mr. DENBY. This can be the only one; there is no more property on which a house can be erected.

Mr. MACON. In my opinion, this will be construed to be a precedent for the construction of other buildings in a similar way, and I insist upon the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas insists upon the point of order to the whole paragraph. The point, as the Chair understands it, is that there is no warrant of law existing upon which this appropriation can be based.

Mr. MACON. Authorizing this purchase.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COUSINS. Of course it is admitted that it is subject to the point of order. I would like to appeal to the gentleman's benevolent consideration. [Laughter.] It seems to me so justifiable that I hope he will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. MACON. I must insist. I have given my reasons.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas insists upon his point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 16, on page 22, insert a new paragraph:

"That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire in foreign countries such sites and buildings as may be appropriated for by Congress for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States, and to alter, repair, and furnish the said buildings, suitable buildings for this purpose to be either purchased or erected as to the Secretary of State may seem best, and all buildings so acquired for the diplomatic service shall be used both as the residences of diplomatic officers and for the offices of the diplomatic establishment: Provided, however, That not more than $1,000,000 shall be expended in any fiscal year under the authorization herein made: And provided further, That in submitting estimates of appropriation to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to the House of Representatives, the Secretary of State shall set forth a limit of cost for the acquisition of sites and buildings and for the construction, alterations, repairs, and furnishing of buildings at each place in which the expenditure is proposed, which limit of cost shall not thereafter be exceeded in any case, except by new and express authorization of Congress."

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order.

Mr. MACON. Then, I make the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, no; it is plainly subject to the point of order, but I hoped the gentleman might reserve it so that I might have the privilege of making a remark or two upon the subject.

Mr. MACON. I was proposing to reserve it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understand the gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing that I could do in the way of courtesy for the gentleman from Ohio that I would not like to do. Propositions of this kind ought to come up in an independent measure and be permitted to be considered and disposed of on their own merits, and therefore I did not reserve the point of order, but make the point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi, if he will permit me, that we are substantially in a helpless position here in the matter of bringing up new legislation, and I think when legislation of this sort is proposed which has some merit, as many think, a few minutes' opportunity for discussion might be well be allowed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Which is a very good argument——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman forgets that we have considered this very proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Nebraska has made a very good argument for a change of the rules, but so long as the rules continue as they are now I shall object to permit an independent proposition like this to come up, because I think it ought to come up on its own merits at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE B.

SALARIES, CONSULAR SERVICE.

For salaries of consuls-general and consuls, as provided in the act approved May 11, 1908, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States,' approved April 5, 1906," as follows: Consuls-general, $303,000; consuls, $733,000; in all, $1,036,000.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, owing to the action of the House a few weeks ago, when the consulate at Messina was destroyed by earthquake, removing that consulate to Catania, at a salary of $3,000, it becomes necessary to amend this paragraph, and I offer the following amendment to accomplish the legislation already enacted by the House:

Page 23, line 2, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four;" and in the same line strike out the word "six" and insert "seven."

Mr. MACON. Do I understand this amendment is offered to page 2?

The CHAIRMAN. To page 23, line 2.

Mr. MACON. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. COUSINS. This, of course, is not subject to a point of order, because the House has already legislated in regard to it.

Mr. MACON. Then I will say that there is no point of order reserved or contemplated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 3, page 23, after the word "dollars," the following:

"Provided, That the consuls-general and consuls shall ascertain the law and practice and experience of foreign countries in which they are stationed dealing with an income tax; inquire into the present mode of assessing and collecting this tax, the rates imposed and revenue received from this source; ascertain the effect of this tax upon trade and business, whether it causes money to be locked up or to disappear or the wealthy class to emigrate with their wealth to other countries not imposing such tax; and also investigate and ascertain whether these laws are avoided and evaded; and if so, by what means and to what extent, and report the results of their investigations to the Secretary of State for the information of Congress."

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order. Does the gentleman desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in reference to the point of order just made that it seems to me that this amendment is pertinent and relevant. The amendment does not undertake to make new law or new legislation, nor does it undertake to change existing law. The amendment clearly directs our consuls and consuls-general to perform certain portions of the general duties already imposed upon them by the law creating the positions they occupy. So I respectfully insist that this is a directory order proposed to be inserted in this appropriation bill, asking our consuls and consuls-general to furnish the Secretary of State, for the information of Congress, facts that every Member here agrees is interesting and pertinent, and they should perform this as a part of the general duty already imposed and resting upon our representatives abroad.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I should like to supplement what the gentleman has said by calling attention to the fact that this House has on several occasions passed resolutions calling upon the Secretary of State to obtain from our consular agents specific information on the operation, enforcement, and results of the income tax in foreign countries. I remember that such a resolution was adopted by this House at the time the Wilson tariff act was being considered, and that information when secured was incorporated in the records of the House of Representatives. It seems to me, therefore, plain that the information which is called for by this resolution is only an elaboration of the duties already performed by consular agents from time to time. In fact, that is exactly what the consular agents are for. They are to secure in foreign countries and send to the Department of State, or possibly under the present law to the Department of Commerce and Labor, information which may be of interest to the people and to the Congress of the United States, and this information, Mr. Chairman, will be of peculiar interest at this time, because the extra session of Congress which is soon to convene will be called upon to enact a revenue bill—a tariff law—into which there may be incorporated and into which there certainly ought to be incorporated an income tax to provide additional revenue and to relieve the people of the United States of some of those taxes which go to increase the cost of living, and which do not fall upon the wealth of the country. It seems to me, therefore, that this resolution offered by the gentleman is not only in accordance with the former practice of this House, but it is in the development of the very duties of the consular agents.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is clearly subject to the point of order. If it be true that under a resolution of the House the Secretary of State is authorized to obtain this information, then it is a discretion now lodged in the Secretary of State, with which this amendment proposed to interfere. Doubtless the Secretary of State has authority at present to direct the consuls to report upon any proposition abroad or upon any question which relates to our interests here, obtaining information from abroad. But this is legislation proposing to interfere with that discretion, and its purpose is to legislate upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, it ought to be said in this connection, I think, that there is not a line of legislation on the statute books specifying the duties of foreign representatives. Under the Constitution, the President of the United States shall appoint our representatives abroad, and Congress could not in any way modify that right of the Executive, and therefore it is plainly subject, as I insist, to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems very clear to the Chair that the amendment proposes to impose new duties upon the consuls, not now imposed by statute, and therefore is subject to the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have called the attention of the Chair to the fact that those consular agents have already, from time to time, reported as to the operation of the income-tax law abroad, just as they have reported, and continually report, on the operation of the postal savings banks abroad, and other functions of government in which the people of the United States have a peculiar interest.

Mr. COUSINS. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. COUSINS. I dare say if the gentleman would address a letter to any consul, or to any consular agent, such consul or consular agent would advise him in reply of the conditions that he seeks information about.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not doubt that fact, and I do not doubt the fact that these consular agents are making these periodical reports to the Department of State. But if I introduced a resolution to-day calling upon the Secretary of State, as I ought to have the right to do, for such information as he may have concerning the operation of the income tax in foreign countries, I might get a more or less complete report from the Secretary of State for use here upon the floor. But, Mr. Chairman, if we are to have such information complete and useful, it ought to be proper for Congress to suggest to the Secretary of State, as is proposed in this resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. That is an argument that might properly be addressed to the gentleman who made the point of order; but the point of order having been made, under the conditions the Chair is obliged to sustain it.

The Clerk proceeded with and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the amendments, to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DIEKEMA, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 27523) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and having made sundry amendments thereto, recommended that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken upon the amendments in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COUSINS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 28059) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion I would like to make some inquiry about time for general debate.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that all general debate be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I understood this bill was coming up next week, and I promised considerable time. The bill has been brought up to-day unexpectedly, and I would like to have at least thirty minutes on this side.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have withdrawn all yielding of time on this side because of the impossibility of getting the appropriation bill through the Senate. We gave seven hours' general debate on the bill making appropriations for the army, and there are other bills coming up next week, and it is absolutely necessary to close this bill up to-day or it may not get through in ten days.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman make it twenty minutes?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not do that. I will not object to giving the gentleman the whole ten minutes on that side and take none of it myself.

Mr. SULZER. I accept that, with the understanding that if anybody, under the five-minute rule, wants an extension of time the gentleman from Iowa will not object.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is according to how much time he wants.

Mr. SULZER. Well, say ten minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would not object to any man that has anything to say having ten minutes.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 26203) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the pension appropriation bill with Senate amendments and that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. KEIFER, Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, and Mr. BOWERS.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. HULL of Iowa to go into the Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. STERLING in the chair.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I now yield ten minutes of the general debate to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. I yield ten minutes to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a few remarks on the subject of an income tax. During the present fiscal year we are incurring in the operation of the Government a deficit, which, at the end of the year, will probably amount to about $125,000,000. One of the problems before the Committee on Ways and Means at the special session of Congress soon to assemble will be to provide additional revenues for the Government. It has been proposed that a part of this additional revenue shall be raised by lowering the customs duties so as to bring into the country additional imports and increase the income of the Government in that way. This change will tend to place the tariff upon a revenue basis, with incidental protection when circumstances make it necessary in order to maintain competition between foreign and domestic products.

With this programme I am decidedly in accord. It has been also proposed, however, to increase internal-revenue taxes upon certain articles of common consumption and to lay duties not now in existence on certain articles of importation, such as coffee. To this proposal I am decidedly opposed. It involves an increase of the present evil. It involves the idea of increasing the living expenses of the American people. It involves a tax on the breakfast table of every family in the land.

Mr. Chairman, there is a method which the Committee on Ways and Means can resort to. There is a method of taxation which it can appeal to, which involves no increase in the cost of living to the American people, no restraint on any industry. It is a method which has gone through more than a century of trial in European countries—a method which has been used in Great Britain since 1798 off and on, and which has been used in Great Britain constantly since 1842. It is a method which has been used and is now in use in Prussia, in Austria, and, I think, also in Italy and Switzerland.

It is the income tax, a tax which at the present time is raising for the use of the British Government $162,000,000 a year on a 5 per cent basis, a tax which was tried in the United States from 1863 to 1874, and which during that time raised a total of $346,908,000, a tax which has stood the test of the Supreme Court on many occasions. A subsequent income tax was only declared invalid by a doubtful and divided court by a decision in the Pollock case. Mr. Chairman, the income tax is not, as most of our present national taxes are, a tax on consumption. It is not a tax which increases the cost of living to the people of the country, as most of our national taxation does, and it is a tax which, with peculiar propriety, calls upon the people in proportion to the benefits which they derive from the protection of the Government, and which falls upon them also in proportion to their ability to pay. I have no doubt that if we levied a tax of only 2 per cent on the incomes exceeding $1,000, this Government can secure a revenue greater than the Government of Great Britain derives from its tax of 5 per cent. It would more than make up the deficit. It would give us all the additional revenue that we require. This revenue which can be raised in this way will not fall upon the people in proportion to what they consume, as is now the case with practically all of our national revenues, but it will fall upon them, as I have stated, in proportion to the benefits which they derive from the Government, and also in proportion to their ability to pay.

Mr. Chairman, it is one of the crying disgraces of this country that wealth does not share its proper portion of the burdens of government. It escapes in all great cities, it escapes in state taxes to a large extent, and when we come to the national revenues, it escapes completely. These millions which we raise every year, these eight or nine hundred millions of dollars in taxes which we levy upon the people of the United States, fall as a burden upon individuals and not as a burden upon wealth. They are levied almost in a per capita method of taxation, so that this great Government, bringing prosperity to the people of the United States in great disproportion, is not supported by the people of the United States in proportion to the benefits which they derive, but is supported by them practically as it would be supported if we levied a per capita tax.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of an income tax, and I am in favor of an income tax levied upon a sliding scale, so that the smaller incomes shall not be taxed as heavily as the larger incomes are taxed. This was the revenue income tax which was enacted in 1862 and which was amended several times later, once in 1865, once in 1867, and again in 1870. The first law passed provided a tax of 3 per cent on incomes up to $10,000, but exempted those below $600. It provided a tax of 5 per cent on incomes over $10,000; and in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Ways and Means, which is even now engaged in the work of framing a new revenue bill, should not omit the duty of devising such an income tax as will stand the test of law and at the same time lay a proper share of the burdens of government upon the wealth of the United States, upon the incomes of the people of the United States in proportion to their incomes, with a lighter tax upon the low incomes and a heavier tax upon the larger incomes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule, the time for general debate having been exhausted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one commandant of cadets (lieutenant-colonel), in addition to pay as captain, $1,100.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 12, strike out the words "captain, one thousand one" and insert the words "major, five," so that the line will read:
"In addition to pay as major, $500."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say in explanation that since the bill was framed there has been a redetail to this position of commandant of cadets, and in place of a captain being there there will now be a major, so it makes this bill carry the additional pay provided by law. It makes the pay $500 in place of $1,100.

Mr. NORRIS. Is he the same man?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; it is not the same one.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as very much of the time of ten minutes given for general debate on this bill was exploited in the consideration of an income tax, may I ask the gentleman in regard to the bill itself? Would there be any impropriety in that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should imagine not.

Mr. MANN. Is there any practical change in this bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is a change in regard to one clerk, where we increase the salary, as I remember now, $300, a clerk who has been there for a long time. In the last part of the bill there is a provision in regard to Constitution Island which we will strike out, because it is now agreed to by both Houses. I say to the gentleman there is a little difference in regard to the professor of English. The department and the academy wanted to make him a professor of the academy. Under the law that would make him a colonel, making him a lieutenant-colonel first and afterwards a colonel, and——

Mr. MANN. And be on the retired list eventually.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes. Heretofore we carried this professor of English among the army officers detailed to West Point, and now, in order to make it sure that there will be a civilian officer, we put that professorship or instructor under the civilian employees of the institution and provide that he must be taken from civil life. Now, we increase that salary $500.

Mr. MANN. How many civilian professors are there at West Point?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is the only one, except——

Mr. PARKER. There are civilian professors for Spanish and French.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; there are civilian professors for Spanish and French.

Mr. MANN. The other professors are army officers?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The others are all army officers. All the instructors of the higher grades are army officers.

Mr. MANN. In that respect different from Annapolis.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have always been different from Annapolis.

Mr. MANN. And the Annapolis professors are now seeking to get on the retired list, so as to get on an equal plane with the professors of West Point.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes. I do not believe in it, and I will say, when we gave it to them last year, although we did not give it to them in the language they wanted, we did last year give the right to employ a professor of English outside of the academy, but we carry him as a civilian.

Mr. MANN. But there is nothing in this bill at any place which would authorize the placing of a civilian professor on the retired list.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. On the contrary, we have guarded against it in the most careful manner and carry him in a different part of the bill from that in which we have heretofore carried this position. The instructors are nearly all army officers, and we now carry this place under the head of civilians and not in any part connected with the army, and we declined absolutely to give him the title of professor. We give him the full pay, however, of a professor.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly; but the gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman. I did not know who the gentleman addressed.

Mr. OLCOTT. As a matter of fact, the civilian professors at West Point now are retired on three-quarters pay.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I did not know that; it is news to me.

Mr. OLCOTT. There are no civilian professors, but they are taken from civil life and given the rank——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all; not one of them is given the rank except the master of the sword, and we gave him by special act the rank of a first lieutenant.

Mr. MANN. I was trying to conduct this school for the benefit of the gentleman from New York, who has a bill seeking to put the professors at Annapolis eventually on the retired list.

Mr. OLCOTT. I am only trying to get the civilian professors at Annapolis in exactly the same category as those at West Point. I am very glad, indeed, to have this school, and it is certainly a fact——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The professors and instructors at West Point are all army officers, except as above stated, and in the army before detailed to West Point; and I will say to my friend from New York, in trying to secure the reappointment of officers now on the retired list of the navy to professorships of Annapolis, the Secretary of the Navy told me he was very strongly in favor of making the professors of Annapolis naval officers, believing it would be better than to take them from civil life.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one constructing quartermaster in addition to pay as major, $1,000: Provided, That this increased salary shall only apply during the time this office is held by the present incumbent.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that provision.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it is only a limitation; but I will say to my friend from Arkansas that on account of the very superior ability of the man now in charge of this department, on account of the great work that is carried on by him, he is given an additional compensation of $500 more than he would otherwise receive. Now, while the bill carries this additional compensation, we believe that he has saved the amount many times over by his great ability. If, at the expiration of the present fiscal year, he goes out, and a new quartermaster shall be detailed, the committee believe that he ought not to have this additional compensation "on account of his superior ability," because he will have had no experience. We are spending $7,000,000 there, and if the gentleman will examine into the work under the control of Major Carson, the quartermaster in charge, he will find that he has saved, from what we know such work would have cost when done at other places, hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. MACON. You propose to increase his salary $500?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We propose that the next officer shall not have this increase if the officer now in charge is detailed and must go to another place.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for extra pay of officers of army on detached service at the Military Academy, $29,900.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, we have reduced the compensation of the commandant of cadets $600, and so as to make the provision conform to the action we have already taken, I move to strike out, on line 8, the word "nine" and insert the word "three."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 8, strike out "nine" and insert "three," so as to read "$300."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of two enlisted men employed as clerks in the office of the adjutant, United States Military Academy, at 50 cents each per day, $365.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is simply carrying out what the law provides. We have a great many men at West Point who are enlisted to do this character of work, and it saves the employment of a large number of civilian employees at much higher wages.

Mr. MACON. Does the existing law allow the additional pay of 50 cents a day in the paragraph reading "For pay of two enlisted men employed as clerks in the office of the adjutant, United States Military Academy, at 50 cents each per day, $365?"

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is simply carried in the law. The law provides that men doing this class and character of work shall have 50 cents a day each. It is in the statutes. I will say, why we see so many of them here is for the reason that it is a permanent enlistment of men to do this class of work. It is a saving to the Government. At the same time, it gives a class of men encouragement to continue all the time as clerks, whereas the clerks that they would have to employ might be young men who would be offered really higher wages if employed as clerks than these men when they are in the employ of the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. I notice so often this item: "Clothing on discharge." Why is that repeated, and what is it for?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say that that comes in here under the different heads of the service. For instance, the law authorizes certain men in each branch of the service at West Point, and their pay as "cavalry detached." Now, it is clothing on discharge from cavalry detached. In other places it is for other detachments.

Mr. NORRIS. What does it mean?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It means that the law authorizes certain allowance for clothing to soldiers. If they do not use the amount allowed, the Government pays them on discharge the difference between what they are allowed and what was used. That is what it means.

Mr. MACON. After the gentleman's explanation, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of two enlisted men employed as clerks in the office of the commandant of cadets, at 50 cents each per day, $365.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to call attention to the condition, as it appears in the press and from private investigation, of affairs at West Point, inasmuch that there seems to be a steadily decreasing interest throughout the country in young men seeking an education there. It is not many years ago that West Point of all other institutions was sought for by the young men of the country for educational and patriotic purposes. Now, I think—at least it is so in New England, and I assume that section of the country represents the whole—it is sometimes exceedingly difficult to find anybody who will take examinations for that institution. I have not, indeed, been able to get more than half a dozen by advertising in every paper in my district for young men who are ready to compete in a competitive examination for that position.

The question arises, On account of this decreased interest, inasmuch as we are spending some $3,000,000 a year there and inasmuch as many of the boys who have entered there do not remain, what is the cause of this and what should be the remedy? I have obtained from one of the boys in the senior class, not appointed by me at West Point, the record of his own class in this respect. He has been there some three and a half years. His class entered 168 in number. They now number only 103. In three years they have diminished one-third of the entire number. Take the lower classes; and, with the exception of the freshman class, he says the average is about 83. That is, they are only educating at this enormous expense about 400 cadets, when the number should be some 550. Not only that, but there is a considerable disposition among the cadets at West Point to resign, as you see many of them have resigned, by the great diminution in the numbers of the senior class. I think one reason of this condition of affairs is a false idea as to the qualifications a cadet should possess. Inasmuch as the best scientists and mathematicians have been selected as instructors in that institution, the idea seems to have obtained an ineradicable foothold there that no boy should be admitted to that institution who is incapable of solving the abstract problems of the calculus or an intricate problem of logarithms. Important as is a mathematical and scientific education, it is not the whole thing in the makeup of a man.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does not the gentleman know that the larger proportion of the great high schools of the country now prepare boys so that they are admitted to West Point? The high school in my town and the high school of my county town have prepared boys who have never gone to any other school on earth, and they have been admitted to West Point on the prescribed examination.

Mr. TIRRELL. I know nothing about that; but in our section they not only have competitive examinations, but the boys have to pass through an exceedingly severe entrance examination, in which many have been turned down because they have not, in mathematics, been up to the standard demanded by the institution.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman know that the rules for admission to West Point provide that any boy having the physical qualifications, with a certificate of graduation from a high school, is entitled to admission to the academy without any further mental examination?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. TIRRELL. The truth of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that important as mathematics is it does not constitute all the education, by any means, that a graduate from West Point should possess. He should, above all things, be so cultivated in polite literature, languages, and collateral studies that his imaginative faculties may also be alert; because without the imaginative faculties, without the possibility of picturing the conditions of a field of battle and providing for emergencies—a quality not stimulated by a mathematical and scientific education—a man becomes largely incompetent to fill the positions to which he may be assigned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not criticising the institution or its methods of study. I am simply directing the attention of the House to the fact that I believe, in that particular line, they are carrying their requirements too far, and that they are excluding a large number of boys who would make brilliant records in the military history of the country who do not possess the extremely developed mathematical faculty which seems to be demanded by the examiners of this institution.

In the remainder of my time, in order that the condition of affairs at West Point may be fully understood, I ask that this clipping from a newspaper be read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. YOUNG. Before that is done, do I understand that the gentleman wishes to lower the standard for admission to West Point?

Mr. TIRRELL. Not at all, but I claim that by the extreme mathematical test required many boys who would average up high in that institution and be amply qualified to fill all the requirements of military service are shut out.

[The time of Mr. TIRRELL having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended ten minutes.]

Mr. TIRRELL. In other words, it strikes me, from the experience I have had in the last four Congresses, that the question of mathematical ability is carried to such an extent that many young men are unable to get in. And yet we have had boys recommended by the principals of the best high schools in my State and boys of that class as boys of exceptionable ability and, in their judgment, amply qualified.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIRRELL. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG. Has the gentleman ever examined the list of questions asked in mathematics in these examinations?

Mr. TIRRELL. I have.

Mr. YOUNG. Are they not such as any bright, educated boy could answer—65 per cent of them?

Mr. TIRRELL. No, sir; I have studied the examination papers, and I would be willing, notwithstanding my friend from Michigan is a brilliant scholar, to venture the assertion that he could not pass the examination.

Mr. YOUNG. Perhaps I could have done better forty years ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIRRELL. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. Some four years ago the graduates of the high schools could be certified and get certificates which would enable them to enter the academy without having an examination. Can the gentleman inform the House why that practice is no longer pursued?

Mr. TIRRELL. I can not.

Mr. ESCH. Was it due to the fact that the students admitted on on those certificates were not sufficiently high in mathematics?

Mr. TIRRELL. Very likely. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Clerk to read the article I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

TOO FEW CADETS AT WEST POINT—CLASSES NOT FILLED AND AUTHORITIES ASK FOR MORE—CONGRESSMEN BLAMED FOR NOT NAMING ALTERNATES AND SO CAUSING VACANCIES WHEN APPOINTEES FAIL.

WASHINGTON, January 26.

Because of their inability to get full classes at the Military Academy the West Point authorities are asking Congress to pass a new law providing for more entries each year.

At the present time the cadet corps is more than 20 per cent below its maximum strength. The situation has grown so serious that it is attracting attention of the War Department.

The appeal to Congress is intended to stimulate interest in the needs of the service by giving more opportunity for appointment to the Military Academy.

The authorities ask that in addition to the present number of cadets authorized a law be enacted permitting the appointment of two additional men from each of the various States.

The maximum strength of the corps, were all the vacancies filled, is 530; but at latest accounts there were only 409 cadets in the academy, a shortage of 121.

This dearth of material for new officers is particularly deplored, because so many demands are made on the regular establishment for officers to act as instructors at military schools and colleges, and also to act with militia organizations.

With these officers on detached duty, there are not enough experienced men to take charge of the troops and maintain the army in the high degree of efficiency that is absolutely imperative because of its low numerical strength.

In the recommendations for appropriations from Congress the West Point officials offer the suggestion for more appointments and would have the law provide as follows:

"Hereafter the corps of cadets shall, as nearly as practicable, be maintained at its maximum authorized strength, and for this purpose a sufficient number of extra appointments are authorized not to exceed two from each State, extra appointments to be distributed in an equitable manner among the congressional districts of the States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and Porto Rico, according to a roster to be kept by the Secretary of War."

Just before he retired as superintendent of the academy, Col. Hugh L. Scott submitted a report on the examinations of last spring. He said at that time that, with two entrance examinations just completed, the number of vacancies should be at the minimum; but, as a matter of fact, there were actually more than 100 places unfilled.

These were attributed to a number of causes, as shown in these figures:

Failure to report for examinations (principals, 20, and alternates, 91)	111
Failed to complete examinations	14
Mentally and physically disqualified	61
Qualified mentally, physically rejected	10
Qualified physically, mentally disqualified	131
Qualified alternates, no vacancy	7
Qualified physically, withdrew from mental examinations	1
Qualified principal, appointment revoked	1
Qualified and directed to report for admission	124
Total	460

"It is probable that no plan will keep the corps entirely filled," said Colonel Scott in submitting these figures, "except legislation to authorize a sufficient number of extra appointments to offset the normal shortage."

Much of the blame for the conditions at West Point is laid at the doors of Members of Congress. Each Member has the appointment of one cadet and two alternates.

"But we can not get Congressmen to name the alternates," said a member of the General Staff. "They seem to think that the naming of alternates in some way detracts from the rights and opportunities of the principal. The result is that when the principal fails to 'make good,' there is no one to step into his place, and the Congressman who has followed this policy can not name another candidate until the following year.

The logical result of this shortsightedness is found in the number of vacancies that exist at the academy. The army can not fill these vacancies as is done at Annapolis. So, accordingly, the Military Academy grinds on with mighty little grist on which to work.

"As a matter of fact, the Military Academy has never in its history had full classes. The present situation, however, is causing concern because of the imperative need for more officers."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I had intended, on the item of "pay of cadets," to have taken up the subject of the number of cadets in the Military Academy. It is an important subject. There are only 403 cadets now in the Military Academy. There is room for 672 in the barracks, and with such a plant as we have at West Point and considering the need of officers of high ability, for the engineers, the ordnance, and the artillery, we should have more cadets.

The gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken in thinking that we do not need mathematical ability in men who are to do engineering——

Mr. TIRRELL. I hope the gentleman will not misrepresent me.

Mr. PARKER (continuing). Men who are to do engineering, men who are to build ordnance, and men who are to take care of the problems of gunnery. It is one of the sad things in our army now that we have not cadets enough to fill all these branches, and that many officers, even in the coast artillery, have had to be taken, with more or less success, from civil life. In the infantry and cavalry it may be a different thing. It may be well to give college graduates, as they do in Germany, an opportunity to go into the army and then stand examination for promotion. It is not well to have ill-educated officers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not true that nobody can be a great general or strategist unless he has instinctively to a high degree the mathematical sense?

Mr. PARKER. I agree. Now, with reference to the entrance examinations, they do not require logarithms and the calculus. The gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken. It is an examination, so far as mathematics are concerned, only in ordinary arithmetic and in algebra up to the simpler quadratic equations. It asks only what any boy ought to be able to get in any high school. If the high schools—well, Mr. Chairman, I will not say anything about our public schools and other schools, but there is too much of a disposition in these days to wish to graduate pupils with honor, and to pass them if they have done fairly in a certain number of recitations from day to day for a number of years, without proper reviews or being at all sure at the end whether they remember what they have learned or not. I have seen men, graduates from high schools, who could could not spell well or write a decent letter, because they were not examined when they entered the high school to find out what they had really learned in the grammar schools.

In West Point they have the best system of instruction that I have ever known anywhere. Every class is divided into many divisions—first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh—and with a small number of scholars in each division, under practical military officers as instructors. The cadets are promoted from one division to another or put down from one division to another, according as they do. The first division goes over much more ground than the last. But whatever is learned at all must be learned thoroughly. As a result, there is real work done at that academy, and if a man does not keep up he is dropped. A class that begins at 168 may graduate only 103, because it is the survival of the fittest, and the most manly fight is fought in that work at West Point that ever was done in any army. It brings us men who are ready to work, ready to do their duty, and fit for their places.

Mr. TIRRELL. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman think it advisable to have a system of study which cuts down students one-half during the course?

Mr. PARKER. I do. The best school I ever went to was at Andover, Mass., where one-fifth to one-third of every class were dropped yearly, and that is why Andover scholars have always stood well in the community. The West Point system gives us officers for the high grades, who proved themselves in the civil war. If we could graduate more than enough for the army and, as we used to do, too, send to civil life West Point graduates, instead of putting them all into the army, we would have a better reserve for a time of war than could be made in any other way. Think of Jackson, think of McClellan, think of Grant, think of the many officers that came from civil life on either side of that great struggle, who were graduates of West Point. Think of those who carried the war with Mexico to a triumphant conclusion. West Point graduates are the real reserve for this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for one minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Now, it is proposed, and was proposed in the committee, that in order to use that plant at West Point worthily, and to make it the great school that it should be, Congressmen and Senators and the President should send cadets there once in three years instead of once in four years, just as at the Naval Academy they increased appointments from once in six years to once in four years, and later to once in two years. Such a provision would increase the number without diminishing the standard. I am sorry to say that we ascertained in the committee that objection would be made on the floor of the House, and we did not put that provision in the bill. Before this bill was opened I wanted to lay this matter before the House, because I believe it imperative to the success of that institution that there should be more appointments and more graduations, and even with that increase a large number of officers will have to be appointed from the enlisted men or from civil life.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a few words on the subject under discussion. In reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL], I want to say that, in my judgment, the trouble about which he complains is not so much the severity of the examinations at West Point as it is the neglect of Members of Congress to keep the vacancies in their districts filled. I understand that there are to-day over a hundred vacancies at West Point which have not been filled by Members of Congress. I take a deep interest in the welfare of the Military Academy at West Point. We all know that there is no better military school in the world. The standard of admission should be high. America is proud of West Point as a military institution; we are proud of its record in the past; and I am now and always have been in favor of maintaining there the highest standard. It ought to be done. Instead of lowering the standard, we should keep it up, at least, to what it is to-day. We know that a young man physically qualified and who has graduated from a high school will have no difficulty in passing the preliminary examination and getting in; and after he gets in he will have no trouble in staying in if he works and studies. The great trouble with some of the cadets at West Point is that they fail to keep up with their studies and pass the examinations. It is their own fault. If a young man admitted to West Point will study and work and keep up with his class, there will be no trouble about passing his examinations and graduating with honor. If he will do the work required, he will never be set back, never dismissed, never asked to resign because he has failed to meet the requirements of the institution.

In my judgment the gentleman from Massachusetts is laboring under a misapprehension regarding this matter, and I wish to say that I agree with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] that one of the best changes Congress can make at the present time is to have cadets appointed by Members of Congress every three years instead of every four years, as at present. That would keep up the maximum quota of the classes. To-day the principal reason it is not done is due largely to the fact that there are so many vacancies from various congressional districts. These vacancies should be promptly filled.

I believe if we would amend the law so that every three years a Member of Congress could appoint a cadet to West Point from his district that there would be no further trouble in keeping the classes up to the maximum. I want to say that so far as my own district is concerned I never have any trouble. There are always young men in my district asking to be sent to West Point, and most of them are well qualified, physically and mentally. I have no doubt that is true in regard to most of the other districts of the country. The trouble is that some Members of Congress appoint young men in whom they take a personal interest, or as a matter of favor, and many of these young men are not qualified. They have not studied long enough, and they do not take the trouble to go to preparatory schools. That is the trouble. And that trouble can be easily obviated; but at the same time I want to say again that I concur most heartily with the suggestion made by my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] that the law be amended so that Members of Congress have the right to appoint cadets to West Point every three years instead of every four years. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of four enlisted men as printers, at headquarters United States Military Academy, at 50 cents each per day, $626.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to delay the consideration of this bill for the purpose of discussing a feature of the administration of the academy that is not immediately and acutely in issue, and I do want to submit a few observations, and I desire to print something in the RECORD in addition to what I am going to say, and I now ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to print in the RECORD certain documents.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to print certain documents in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the complaint of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] strikes me as very remarkable. So far from there being a lack of interest in my section of the country in regard to appointments to the Military Academy, I—and I am sure it is the experience of my colleagues—am overrun by applications whenever a vacancy occurs, and the young men in my district seem to know in advance of its occurring, so I begin to get letters from applicants——

Mr. SULZER. That is my case also.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say also, Mr. Chairman, I have never had any difficulty which the gentleman suggests with reference to the graduation of the young men whom I have sent there. All of them have graduated, and most of them, I am pleased to say, have graduated with distinction, too, at both the Military Academy and the Naval Academy. I believe there is something wrong with the Military Academy, seriously wrong, that requires attention and requires it now, and I regret to say I believe the chief source of the trouble lies within this Hall and the other Chamber of Congress. The discipline of the academy, the control of the young men who are there as cadets, has been interfered with, has been impaired in a way that threatens, according to the language of the academic board, the very existence and usefulness of the academy itself if it is not stopped.

Now, we all know that for years when young men by infraction of the rules have gotten themselves into trouble and have incurred the penalties thereof and have been dismissed, they immediately hotfooted it to Washington, where, exercising "pull," they have persuaded Congress or the President to set aside the findings of the academic board, the one competent body in all the world best qualified to pass upon the question at issue. Within the last year and a half there have been a number of dismissals from the Military Academy—at least, recommendations by the academic board for dismissal. Unless that board reverses itself, unless it withdraws its recommendations for dismissals and suggests leniency in lieu of the penalties that the law imposes, they must be dismissed. The report sent to the House recently, known as "Document No. 1455," gives in detail a history of these cases at the academy since January 1, 1908, where some young men were dismissed for deficiency in study and some for hazing, and it also shows unfailingly and without exception that immediately after conviction they and their friends asked that Congress and the Executive should have the laws of the Government set aside and to have these young men who had been guilty of breaches of discipline replaced in the academy.

In a letter dated West Point, January 4, 1909, of Lieut. Col. Robert L. Howze, commandant of the cadets, the situation is set forth in clear and strong language, and I commend the reading of it to every Member of this House who wants to see the academy maintained at a high state of efficiency.

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES CORPS OF CADETS,
West Point, N. Y., January 4, 1909.

Respectfully returned to the adjutant, United States Military Academy, recommending that this application be disapproved.

Whenever at any time this cadet had more demerits than an average of 18 per month he was duly notified. He had free access to the books which exhibit the number of demerits cadets have, provided he was not serving special punishment. In that case it would have been a simple matter for him to have prevailed upon a classmate to get the information; further, he could have gotten the information by applying directly to this office.

The facts are that at the end of October he did not have a monthly average of 18 demerits, but during November, the last month of the six-month period, he committed offenses which resulted in his receiving some 41 demerits. It is evident that during this last month he deliberately and purposely disregarded the regulations in every way that he possibly could, going so far as to commit an intentional breach of confinement, for which he was awarded two months' special confinement and 10 demerits. This cadet has been not only indifferent to the observance of the regulations, but he has shown a thorough disregard of them, increasing in these respects as he has advanced in his cadetship.

The total number of demerits recorded against this cadet was 123. His case was carefully considered by a board of officers, which called upon him and weighed every claim and statement he had to make concerning the demerits recorded against him, and after giving him the benefit of all doubt recommended that 8 demerits be removed, which recommendation was approved. All but one member of the board voted upon the merits of this cadet's case without knowing the number of demerits involved. The board acted conscientiously, guarding well the cadet's interests, and at the same time the interests of the academy; if it erred at all it was distinctly on the side of leniency toward the cadet. The limit of demerits which a cadet may get during the six months is 108. This limit is sufficiently large for any cadet who desires and tries at all to keep within it—in fact, there was a distinct liberality shown in fixing this high limit.

The regulations concerning discipline have with but few modifications been enforced since the beginning of the academy; without the proper enforcements of these regulations the ends intended would not be accomplished; it would not be a fit place for the training of young men in the observance of discipline and the military regulations, and the good men of the country would not want their sons trained here. The aim of the institution would miss its mark. Fortunately, from the beginning and up to the present time when a cadet has without any doubt so violated the rules and regulations as to have received a number of demerits in excess of the authorized allowance he has invariably been discharged, and, I think, never reinstated or even turned back to another class.

The strict enforcement of these regulations is the main sustaining principle upon which the good name and reputation of the academy depend, and there should under no circumstances be any divergence therefrom. The fact that this is a military academy should not be lost sight of, and it is my fixed opinion that a young man, while in the atmosphere which surrounds him here, who so disregards the requirements of discipline and is declared deficient therein can rarely, if ever, make an efficient and capable officer, fitted for the serious responsibilities which will be imposed upon him. There are other and better young men ready to take his place, and certainly they should be given a chance to do so.

Should cadets who have been declared deficient in conduct be returned the effects on discipline would be seriously felt, and the respect which cadets should and at present do have for the authorities here would be very much lowered. Under no circumstances should cadets so discharged be reinstated.

ROBERT L. HOWZE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Army, Commandant of Cadets.

Observe that Colonel Howze says that "from the beginning" when a cadet has been clearly guilty and the academic board advised dismissal, he has been invariably discharged; that is, mark you, up to the present time.

The President saw fit on the 4th of January to write to the Secretary of War that in his judgment the penalties imposed upon these young men were unnecessarily severe, and he hoped the academic board would be reconvened in order to reconsider its action so far as it relates to these young men:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 4, 1909.

There are five young men who have been recommended for dismissal by the academic board at West Point for what seems to me insufficient reasons. They are Cadets ———, ———, ———, ———, and ———.

Can not the academic board be reconvened to consider again its action, so far as relates to these men? It seems to me that the needs of the service can be met by some arrangement less than discharge. I think it would be an entirely needless hardship to turn these boys out. If necessary, let them each go back one year.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The WAR DEPARTMENT.

Of course, a suggestion or intimation of what the Executive desires always has the effect of a command among military officers. The board was immediately convened again, and upon January 9 they submitted this letter:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY,
West Point, N. Y., January 9, 1909.

The academic board of the United States Military Academy, having before it the autograph letter of the President of the United States of January 4, 1909, concerning the cases of Cadets ——— and ———, of the first class, ——— and ———, of the third class, deficient in discipline, and Cadet ———, of the third class, deficient in mathematics and drawing, desires to submit for his consideration the following presentation of the principles which have guided it in these and similar cases, and of the particular circumstances attending each of the cases under advisement.

In a great military school of the importance and high standing of this institution, the board conceives that one of its chief functions is the disciplinary training it confers and its efficiency as a character-forming mechanism. These attributes, which above all others go to the development of an efficient officer whose duties concern the command, the guidance, the well-being, and even the lives of those under him, and upon whom the country relies in time of emergency for the exhibition of the highest qualities of mind and character, are essentially matters of discipline, of self-control, of a sense of responsibility, and of conformity to law and authority.

These qualities are acquired only by habit and under an impartial enforcement of the regulations and orders which govern their daily duties. This disciplinary influence is progressive and cumulative and should, before the student is intrusted with command, have been assimilated and should have been productive of results sufficient to justify the authorities in certifying that he has qualified for the responsibility of command as an officer of the United States Army. Failure to show this acquirement on the part of the individual becomes increasingly reprehensible and indicative of incapacity for responsibility in proportion to the length of the period of probation.

During the first year of cadet service every leniency is shown in the consideration of the disciplinary shortcomings of the novice, and he is given abundant opportunity to adjust himself to the conditions of military service and requirements. During the second year the responsibilities are increased, the novitiate has been passed, and the cadet is familiar with the obligations and regulations and the necessity of conforming thereto. From that time forward ignorance of the requirements of his environment are no longer to be pleaded in extenuation. Whatever breaches of discipline are committed are done with a full knowledge of their character and the consequences involved. By the time the cadet has attained the dignity of a first class man (corresponding to that of senior in college) not only has he become experienced in the exactions of the military life, but he has attained maturity of mind and of body; he is about to assume command and its responsibility. Furthermore, in the administration of discipline by cadet officers, as a cadet advances in class rank he is reported with much less frequency for trifling violations of discipline.

When a first class man, therefore, receives so many reports as to endanger his status it indicates a very high degree of carelessness and indifference to regulations.

Prior to this year, since 1884, but one first class man has been deficient in conduct.

In this connection, the board observes the fact that these cadets are no longer boys, but have attained the age of manhood. The actual ages of the four individuals now deficient in discipline are as follows: Cadets ——— and ———, first class, are, respectively, 22 years 11 months and 23 years 5 months of age. Cadets ——— and ———, third class, are, respectively, 23 years 1 month and 22 years 5 months of age. Cadet ——— is not in the same category, but is deficient in two studies, and his case will be referred to subsequently.

It has has been urged in reference to the deficiency of these cadets in conduct that they have exceeded the limit by only a few demerits. In the first place, the limit of demerits fixed by the regulations of the Secretary of War is exceedingly liberal, and no cadet at any time, with reasonable attention to his duties, need come anywhere near the danger limit. The limit is made thus liberal for the purpose of affording no excuse to those who exceed it. The same plea could be urged in extenuation of a slight excess of any limit whatever, no matter how liberal it might be. To show that this plea is not valid in these cases, the board wishes to state the fact that the average number of demerits of the other cadets in the first class was 32, Cadets ——— and ——— having received, respectively, 118 and 123. Their final showing of 109 and 115, respectively, was due to the fact that a special board of officers was appointed to consider their deficiencies; to examine the nature of each report given; to afford the individuals opportunity to protest or explain in any case as to the justice or validity of the report; and to remove whatever reports in its judgment could be overlooked by a lenient construction of the circumstances under which they were given. This board cited the cadets before it, listened to any special explanation they had to give, and finally removed a certain number of reports in each case without knowledge of the number of demerits attaching to each report. This resulted in leaving Cadet ——— still deficient, with 109 demerits, and Cadet ——— also deficient, with 115.

In the case of Cadets ——— and ———, of the third class, the same process was put into operation by the board, with the result of leaving these men deficient, with 111 and 109 demerits, respectively.

In the third class the average number of demerits for the other members of that class was 56. It will be observed, therefore, that in the case of the first class men Cadet ——— had over three times the average number of demerits of his classmates, and Cadet ——— nearly four times that number. Cadets ——— and ——— had about twice as many as the average of their classmates.

Offenses against discipline are divided into seven classes, for each of which a fixed number of demerits is given. Cadets are stimulated to observe the regulations by dividing them into three grades according to conduct, each grade being given certain privileges. In the first class the first grade requires that a cadet shall obtain less than 18 demerits in six months; the second grade less than 42; and the third grade includes those who exceed the latter limit. In the third class these limits are 24 and 54, respectively. As showing how readily excessive demerits may be avoided, it can be stated that about 75 per cent of each class is habitually in the two upper grades.

It has been the practice of the academic board, therefore, to regard a deficiency in conduct as final, and as one of the most satisfactory proofs that can be secured of the unfitness of an individual for the military career. Deficiency in conduct is a clear evidence, after a certain period of probation, of a want of a proper sense of responsibility and subordination, which in the cases of the two first class men under consideration led to flagrant and overt acts against discipline. They could not have been ignorant of the fact that they had received many reports and were in more or less danger of deficiency. As long ago as last August the superintendent took occasion to publish a special order to the corps of cadets warning all of the necessity of the exercise of extreme care in regard to their conduct. In spite of and in defiance of these facts these cadets deliberately committed an offense carrying the maximum number of demerits.

As stated above, the case of Cadet ——— is one of deficiency in studies and not in conduct. He stood at the bottom of the cadets, deficient in mathematics and drawing, after final examination for proficiency.

The academic board, with a long and intimate experience of the disciplinary methods of this institution, and the effects upon the cadets of unusual leniency, respectfully asks an earnest consideration of the very serious effect upon the morale of a body of young men who are being educated to high standards of conduct and of honor in seeing the disciplinary standards of the institution set aside in spite of the warnings of experience and the admonitions of their superior officers. If the young gentlemen of the corps feel that upon every occasion when they have brought upon themselves the penalties of failure, and when, after the administration of the institution has conscientiously sat in judgment upon their status, a reversal can be obtained by an appeal to higher authorities, the administrative authority of the institution is brought into contempt and the powerful influences which an impartial operation of the governing mechanism of military education should bring about is nullified.

The board finds a growing tendency on the part of all those who, from one cause or another, have failed to come up to the standards of this institution to endeavor to secure by a presentation of their case and an appeal to the sympathies of friends in authority a reversal of judgment in their favor. The board believes that it is of the highest importance, in order that the standards and traditions of this institution may be maintained, that the hands of the academic authorities should be upheld. The academic board, far from being austere or harsh in its action upon cases of deficiency, either in conduct or studies, endeavors on the contrary to be most lenient, and acts only after long deliberation and careful inquiry into all the conditions surrounding each individual case.

If, after a consideration of this statement, the President is still of the opinion that leniency should be exercised in these cases, the board, in deference to the judgment and wishes of the President of the United States, recommends with reluctance that Cadets ——— and ——— be suspended without pay and allowance until January 1, 1910, and at that time turned back to join the then first class; that Cadets ——— and ——— be suspended without pay and allowances until August 28, 1909, and at that time turned back to join the then third class; that Cadet ——— be turned back to join the present fourth class immediately.

H. L. SCOTT,
Colonel, United States Army, Superintendent,
President Academic Board.
J. S. HERRON,
Captain, Second Cavalry, Adjutant,
Secretary Academic Board.

The judgment of the academic board was not swayed; they were still convinced that the law ought to be enforced. They say so in that letter, which I earnestly commend to the consideration of every Member of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They earnestly state that the discipline of the academy, the existence of the academy, the usefulness of it, is seriously imperiled by the unwillingness of those in authority, those high up in authority, as they say, to permit the orderly, ordinary execution of the laws which we have passed, and the enforcement of the regulations made under those laws.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the academy is big enough. I believe that opportunities ought to be left to the cadets of high schools, to the graduates of colleges, and to the graduates from our national guard to get commissions in the army. I do not believe in making too small and select a circle from which the officers of the United States Army are to be drawn. I believe the experience of the country shows that in the past we have secured from civil life some of the most efficient military men ever known in history in this or any other country. I believe the academy is big enough; and if Members will exercise due diligence in sending to the academy young men who are fit morally, physically, and mentally, we will graduate as many officers from that academy as the Government will need plus those secured from civil life.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this debate is all out of order and has been proceeding by unanimous consent; but I did not like to raise the point of order against members of the committee, and I will now ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of one sergeant of engineers, acting first sergeant, $108.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa a question in reference to these enlisted men to which this extra pay is granted. Are they from the Regular Army, or are they cadets detailed?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are from the Regular Army. The establishment at West Point is distinct from the Regular Army in this, that it is almost a permanent force there. They have more married men there. They take the older class of enlisted men, and a great many men are enlisted in order to get this extra pay. They provide quarters for married enlisted men at West Point, which is not done elsewhere. It is part of the Regular Army that are not ordered away, except in the cavalry and infantry.

Mr. POLLARD. Are they men who have been in the service a long period and transferred when they are incapacitated for other service?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all. They are entirely capacitated for work. The theory of the Government is to discourage married enlisted men in the army at large; but where a good soldier is married he is transferred to West Point. That is, he can be transferred there.

Mr. POLLARD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for pay of Military Academy band, field musicians, general army service, cavalry detachment, artillery detachment, enlisted men on detached service, and extra pay of enlisted men on special duty at the Military Academy, $188,415.33.

Provided, That the extra pay provided by the preceding paragraphs shall not be paid to any enlisted man who receives extra-duty pay under existing laws or army regulations.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say a few words for the soldiers and the sailors of the Union, for the bravest men on land and sea that ever faced a foe, for those heroic men who saved the Republic from destruction during the darkest hour in all our history. They need no eulogy. The glorious Union is their everlasting monument. For ages yet to come their achievements will be sung in song and story.

Nearly fifty years have passed since the close of the great civil war—a conflict unparalleled in the annals of time. More than two-thirds of the soldiers and the sailors who participated in that tremendous struggle have been gathered to the fathers, and those that remain will soon cross the "great divide" to join their comrades on "fame's eternal camping ground." During the few years they will be with us on earth I believe it is the duty of the Government to care for those in poverty and distress and to see to it that none lack the necessaries of life. The Government owes the volunteers for the Union a debt of gratitude it can never pay, and gratitude to these men should be the fairest flower that blossoms in the great heart of our reunited country. Our soldiers and our sailors should be generously treated by the Government they did so much to preserve. That is the least we can do for them in their declining years. Those that are incapacitated and dependent should be liberally pensioned, and their widows and orphans should be the wards of the Republic. As Lincoln said, the Nation should care for those who have borne the battle and for their widows and orphans, so that none shall be left in want and destitution.

I am now, always have been, and always will be the friend of the soldiers and the sailors of the Union. I am proud of the fact that I am called the "old soldiers' champion;" and I want to say again what I have frequently said on the floor of this House, that in Congress or out of Congress, the men who saved the Union can always depend on me to do all in my power to see to it that they get their just rights and the thanks of a grateful Republic.

For several years these brave old veterans have been trying to enact a law known as the "volunteer retired list bill." I have done all in my power to aid them in their struggle. This year after a hard fight I succeeded in reporting a bill favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs. My report is now before the Congress, and the bill is slumbering on the calendar of the House, and will sleep there, I am sorry to say, until this Congress adjourns on March 4. The fault is not mine. I would make the bill a law to-day if I could. For reasons unnecessary for me to express at this time that bill can not pass this Congress. However, I indulge the hope that some bill along similar lines will pass the next Congress and become a law. With that end in view I shall, just as soon as the extraordinary session of the Congress convenes, on the 15th day of next March, reintroduce the bill I have carefully prepared, and which I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28337) to create in the War and Navy Departments, respectively, a roll to be known as the "Volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with pay surviving officers who served in the Volunteer Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the civil war, and who are not now on the retired list, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That upon written application to the Secretary of War, or to the Secretary of the Navy, and subject to the conditions and requirements hereinafter contained, the name of each surviving officer who served in the Volunteer Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the civil war, shall be entered on a roll to be known as the "Volunteer officers' retired list." Each person so entered shall have served with credit as an officer in said Volunteer Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the civil war, and shall have been honorably discharged, and shall not have been retired; said application to be accompanied with proof of identity of the applicant, and both the application and proof to be under oath.

SEC. 2. That each applicant whose name shall be entered upon said list shall be entered as of the highest mustered rank held by him while serving in said Volunteer Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, and when so entered on said list he shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as follows: From the time that he attains the age of 64 years, $50 per month; from the time he attains the age of 70 years, $75 per month; and from the time he attains the age of 76 years, $100 per month during the remaining period of his natural life, such pay to begin on the date of filing his said application with the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That this act shall not apply to any officer while serving as an official or employee of the United States or any state or municipal government or whose income from any source exceeds $1,200 per annum.

SEC. 3. That each person who shall receive pay under this act shall thereby relinquish all his right and claim to pension from the United States after the date of filing said application, and any payment of such pension made to him covering a period subsequent to the filing of his said application shall be deducted from the amount due him on the first payment or payments under this act. The pay allowed by this act shall not be subject or liable to any attachment, levy, lien, or detention under any process whatever, and persons whose names are placed upon said roll shall not constitute any part of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect immediatly.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, that bill speaks for itself. It is just and honest and fair and square. No liberty-loving citizen should object to it. I believe it meets with the approval of the soldiers and sailors of the Union—of those that are left of the Grand Army of the Republic—and I shall do everything in my power to make it a law before the Sixty-first Congress shall adjourn on the 4th of March, 1911, and to this end I invoke the aid of every friend of the soldiers and sailors of our country.

Sir, every sentiment of my heart impels me to say that the surviving volunteer officers who served with credit during the civil war are entitled to receive honors and emoluments equal to those which have been bestowed upon any officers who have served in defense of the country. It must be recognized that in time of war reliance has been had upon volunteers to bear the heat and burden of the conflict, and that it has always been, and will no doubt be to the end, the policy of the Government to maintain a small Regular Army. The civil war involved the perpetuity of the Union. The Union was preserved and the national authority maintained at the end of the greatest war of the world, in which more than two millions of volunteers marched and fought under the triumphant banner of their country.

A great reunited people now owe their repose and peace at home, their phenomenal progress and prosperity, their commercial success, and their influence abroad to the preservation of the Union. I invite particular attention to the fact that this proposed legislation has received the approval of a very large number of prominent and influential men in various parts of the country. The petitions of these citizens are now in the hands of the military committees of the two Houses. Public opinion favors this legislation, and the legislatures of the States of Illinois, Ohio, New York, Michigan, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and Kansas, by unanimous votes, have passed resolutions indorsing it, and requesting the Senators and Representatives from these States to vote for the enactment of a volunteer retired list law. The bill should have been passed and enacted into law long ere this. Patriotism commands it. Gratitude demands it. Let us do our duty and pass the bill.

And now, Mr. Chairman, that is all I care to say at this time in connection with this matter, but ere I take my seat I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, several letters from distinguished volunteer army officers in favor of this legislation. These letters are similar to dozens I am receiving weekly from all over the country, and they speak eloquently for justice to the soldiers and sailors of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

The letters follow:

235 WEST ONE HUNDRED AND SECOND STREET,
New York, February 22, 1909.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SULZER: Through the courtesy of my old comrade, our esteemed mutual friend, Colonel Lowry, I have a copy of your bill to create a volunteer retired list, and as a party in interest I sincerely thank you for your wise, patriotic, and energetic efforts in that direction. While this bill does not make the same allowance for the surviving officers of the civil war that had been so deservedly extended to those of the Revolution by the acts of 1828 and 1832, granting them full pay during life, if the Government of the country that we fought to protect through all the perils of a terrible war, without counting any risk of life or financial sacrifice, is not willing or can not afford to do us justice, we must be grateful for what we can get and be content with the thought that "half a loaf is better than none," but we want that half loaf now, while we are alive to eat it. I was wounded nine times in battle and know whereof I speak.

The question of other necessary large appropriations should, in my opinion, not be allowed to cause delay, for the Government had to issue bonds to raise funds to prosecute the war and it can do so now to help those who had volunteered their lives in her service.

Gen. Edwin L. Hayes, who is in his ninety-first year, called to see me last Friday. He has a brilliant war record, but is physically feeble and financially needy. I read him your bill, and he answered:

"Please thank Mr. SULZER for me, but tell him, for God's sake, to have the bill passed at this session, for I do not expect to live until the next."

There are hundreds of similar cases that should not be suffered to plead in vain to the heart of our great Nation. Private soldiers, on an average, now receive as much in pensions as they received pay during the civil war, while officers do not receive one-tenth of their former pay.

Although it takes private soldiers to make generals and win battles, it required good officers and hard, persistent work to convert the raw material into the brave, efficient soldiers that won the battles of the civil war.

You are known throughout the land as the "soldier's friend," and can you not add one more golden link to the long chain of noble deeds for which we owe you love and gratitude and have your bill enacted into law at this session of Congress?

With esteem and best wishes,
Very truly, yours,
SAML. K. SCHWENK.

PHILLIPSBURG, N. J., November 30, 1908.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, Esq.,
New York City,

DEAR SIR: I have been told that you are drawing up a bill having for its object the placing of the ex-officers of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who served during the late civil war on the retired list and treated in every respect with the same honors and considerations shown to the regular officers who served in that war.

In one of the bills introduced last winter for the army it made it obligatory to have served eighteen months. Another bill made the time limit one year.

I have for years been a medical examiner—United States pension surgeon—and to secure a pension ninety days' service is required. In your bill I would suggest as a time limit six months or nine months, as it is not fair to exact a year or eighteen months for those who went and did their duty and stayed in until the end of the war. They should be entitled to be placed on the retired list, as it was not their fault that the war was over and they mustered out. If in your bill you exact a six months' service, that would be all right.

A second suggestion is this: In one of the bills of last winter the officer must have resigned or been honorably discharged on or before July 15, 1865. This is not right, for the Government could not disband so large an army and navy in so short a time. I was in the navy and not discharged until August 10, 1865, and others on my ship and some I know of not until September and later. At this point I would suggest that to be placed on the retired list they must have entered the service on April 15, 1861, and resigned or been honorably discharged prior to October 1, 1865, or December 31, 1865.

A third suggestion—as to being retired on the rank one grade higher than the highest grade attained in the service. This is the rule in the navy, I know, and I believe the same applies to the army. All officers, as a mark of honor, especial honor of the Regular Navy, on being retired and who served for any length of time in the civil war are retired one rank higher than the highest in which they served. No other naval officers who are placed on the retired list of the navy—and I think the army—are given this extra rank on retirement. It is a special mark of appreciation and honor, intended only for the regular officers who served in that war.

Now, if regular officers are given this special mark of appreciation and honor, should not volunteers on their being retired be treated with the same consideration and respect and have equal honors with the regulars for their (the volunteers) service in the same war?

I would suggest, therefore, when drawing your bill, that you incorporate in it this special honor, making, as I presume you intend to, that the volunteer shall be in every respect on the same footing and with equal consideration and respect and with the same honors accorded to the regulars. I have had all the papers from the Navy Department relating to naval officers' retirement, and know just what I am writing about. I ask and hope that you will give my suggestions your careful consideration, and hope you may decide to incorporate them in your new bill. I am, sir,

Very truly, yours,
J. A. PETRIE, M. D.

New York City, February 22, 1909.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have just been reading a copy of your bill to authorize placing on the retired list certain surviving officers of the United States Volunteer Army. I wish to thank you for your tireless labor in our behalf, and assure you that I am firmly impressed with the justice of this proposed measure and believe that the passage of such a worthy and righteous act should be secured soon as possible. I know many worthy surviving officers who are earnestly interested in the enactment of such a bill; some that are not able to work, and others who can not find employment and are living on charity and slowly starving. May God help you in this good work.

Very sincerely, yours.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, M. C.

MY DEAR MR. SULZER: Your favor of the 16th, together with the copies of the volunteer officers' bill, came duly to hand. I have seen quite a number of the ex-officers, and all of them approve of the bill, without an exception, and will cheerfully aid you to the best of their ability in making it a law. I want to say that we all know that you are our consistent friend and fully appreciate your efforts in our behalf, and thank you most cordially for the same. Wishing you success in every direction, and with kindest wishes and best regards,

I am, very truly, yours,

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
Congressman from New York.

HONORABLE SIR: From Col. F. A. Battey, of Chicago, Ill., I learned that you had introduced a new bill to Congress in the interest of the civil-war officers.

As vice-president of the twelfth congressional district of Illinois, I extend to you the thanks of the civil-war officers in this congressional district, and hope that your bill will become law.

Respectfully,

J. AUGUST SMITH,

Mr. SULZER. It is at present impossible to give the number of colonels, lieutenant-colonels, majors, captains, and lieutenants of volunteers during the civil war who are living, but it is suggested the proportion as above would be about the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one clerk to the adjutant, $1,500.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against lines 1 and 2, on page 13. I am advised that that is an increase of salary.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is an increase of $300 a year. The academy urged us to increase it to $1,800, on account of the long service and special fitness of this clerk. We compromised by making it the same salary as the other clerks of his grade.

Mr. MACON. How many increases have you made in this bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Very few; and this is one of them. When you come to civilian employees, like engineers and other skilled labor, we had to increase them on account of the increased work put upon them. I believe this is the only increase in the salary of a clerk. They tried to get the salary of this clerk raised last year, but the committee did not believe they could do it then. As a matter of justice in connection with his work, under the evidence, we believed he ought to have the $1,500. As I say, the department urged us to increase it to $1,800.

Mr. SULZER. In reply to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] I desire to say that this clerk is one of the most efficient and competent clerks at West Point. He is doing a great work, and the pay he is getting is very inadequate for the work he is doing. In my judgment, instead of getting $1,500 a year, he is entitled to at least $1,800 a year. The officers at West Point requested that he be paid $1,800 a year, because he is worth it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should like to refer my friend to page 211 of the estimates.

Mr. MACON. One minute, if the gentleman will excuse me, while I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] a question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. MACON. I notice on page 14, line 7, an increase of the salary of an engineer from $1,500 to $1,800. Can the same be said about the engineer, that he is so necessary and so efficient——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. When we reach that, the gentleman can raise the point.

Mr. MACON. I was inquiring of the gentleman from New York, who was insisting that this clerk was so efficient that it was absolutely necessary to increase his salary, if the same could be said about this engineer whose salary has also been increased?

Mr. SULZER. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that the comments I made with reference to this clerk will apply with equal force to the engineer. He is being paid entirely too little for the work he is doing.

Mr. MACON. Now I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman will look on page 211 of the Estimate he will find this note:

An increase of $600 is asked for, and is deemed proper for the reason that this clerk has recently been appointed chief clerk of the adjutant's office, and the rate of pay is recommended that he may receive a salary commensurate with the duties and responsibilities of his position. He has been employed as a clerk in the adjutant's office since 1872, and has earned the promotion which has been bestowed upon him.

They promoted him to chief clerk, increasing his duties; but in any event the office of adjutant is always of enough importance for the clerk to get as much salary as the clerks for the other departments.

Mr. MACON. Can the gentleman give me some idea of the total increases of salaries in this bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would not call an increase to an engineer or plumber an increase of salary.

Mr. MACON. This is an increase from $1,500 to $1,800. I call that an increase of $300.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is an increase of $300 for this one office.

Mr. MACON. But the salary of this engineer has also been increased from $1,500 to $1,800.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think that $300 is more than made up by dispensing with another officer there, which I can explain when I reach it. Of course I would not want to talk offhand about all these matters; and when we reach it I will try to give the gentleman the information.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman give me some idea of the total amount carried in the bill as increases of salaries?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should think $2,000. We have been very parsimonious in the preparation of this bill.

Mr. MACON. That is all. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one draftsman in department of civil and military engineering, $1,000.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 14, page 14, by inserting, after the word "thousand," the words "two hundred," so that it will read "$1,200."

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 14, line 14, after the words "thousand," the words "two hundred," so that it will read "$1,200."

Mr. KAHN. That is the salary that is being paid at the present time to this inspector. It was a mistake of the copyist.

Mr. MACON. And there is no increase?

Mr. KAHN. No increase at all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, to civilians employed at Military Academy, $77,058.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask to correct the total in line 10 by adding $200 to the total.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 10, after the word "thousand," insert the words "two hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total pay of Military Academy, $627,153.33.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now I move that the total be amended to correspond with the $200 added.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the total will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintaining the children's school, the Superintendent of the Military Academy being authorized to employ the necessary teachers, $3,520.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to get some information as to what is meant by this children's school.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Congress established a children's school at West Point. It is largely for enlisted men's children. There are, as I understand, over 200 children there now; my friend from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] can perhaps state better about that, as he has just been there.

Mr. SLAYDEN. There are more than that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Before that they were compelled to go to Highland Falls, and the people there protested against their being sent there, and Congress, after fighting over it several years, finally established this school. This is a continuation of the same work started a year ago.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And this school is for children of the employees of the academy?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. For anybody who is on the academy grounds.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary alterations to frame building on the recently purchased "Dassouri" property to convert into quarters for gardener's house (submitted), $1,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in line 5, page 30, I move to strike out the word "submitted."

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 5, page 30, strike out the word "submitted" in parentheses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total buildings and grounds, $1,724,035.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this bill is about to be concluded, and before it is I want to congratulate the chairman for bringing in and getting through a bill with the apparent approval of the entire House, and on the skill which he has manifested in steering it through. I also want—because I am afraid I shall not have another occasion, and no one else would think of it—to take a little credit to myself for one feature of the bill.

Gentlemen will have observed that the item to pay the cost of the committee referred to as the "Board of Visitors" is $1,000. In the bill last passed it was $2,000, and previous to that it was $3,500 a year. The actual expenses incurred by the visitors to the academy on the occasion of the last visit a few weeks ago was something under $500. This very item, in my judgment, is now twice as large as it need be.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman inform us how many times the Board of Visitors make a trip to West Point?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps I know what the gentleman has in mind, and if I am not correct he can set me right. The law contemplates one visit a year by the Board of Visitors. But the present board passed a resolution, or on a motion, which is not law, however, agreed to adjourn to meet again in June. Under what conditions they will go there I do not know.

Mr. PARKER. I do not understand it so with respect to the call of the chairman, and we expect to hold a meeting next Wednesday to determine on that question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The report shows that the motion was to adjourn and to assemble again at the academy in June. I speak from memory, but think I am right.

Mr. PARKER. The record is to assemble at the call of the chairman.

Mr. MANN. It is admitted they have adjourned to meet again and go to West Point again?

Mr. PARKER. No; it is not.

Mr. MANN. Is it contemplated that this Board of Visitors shall make two trips to West Point instead of one?

Mr. PARKER. I shall propose at the next meeting—and of course this is not yet arranged—that not more than three or five of the committee shall attend in June in order to act as a visiting board at that time.

Mr. MANN. Does that limitation of numbers include the wives?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, as this is all going on in my time I presume I have a right to ask a question. It makes no difference how many gentlemen go to the academy in June, as they will perhaps go at their own expense, the work of the Congress being done. I see no public reason why a second visit should be made. This discussion brings up the point of when visitors should go to the academy. I have my views about that, and other gentlemen have different views. My own impression is that they ought to go during the working season. I do not believe they ought to go there when the academy is on parade—that is, if they go for the information of Congress.

Mr. MANN. In other words, the gentleman thinks they ought to go to investigate and not to attend a hop.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is it exactly. That is the distinction, and the gentleman has drawn it very clearly and sharply. If they go in June they have a better time. Then the grass is green and the sun is shining, and there are a great many agreeable visitors there, and it is an exceedingly pleasant occasion; but the argument that they would go there and see the classes and go into the recitation rooms, and so forth, has no influence on my mind, because, with all due respect to the attainments of the Members of Congress, I doubt if one in five would know what was going on anyway if he got into one of the classrooms. I do not believe that the people who make the argument are impressed by it. They seek to justify the visit in June in order to have a good time.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if he has noted the language of the superintendent in his report in regard to this question? I notice here that he says he is opposed to the Congressmen composing this Board of Visitors, that he prefers distinguished visitors. In other words, that he does not believe that the common, garden variety of Congressmen are really distinguished visitors. As the gentleman is on that board, I would like to ask him if he has read the report?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have no personal resentment because of the language of the superintendent, with reference to the character of the board, but I do object to his recommendation for this reason: Congress, after having considered it for a long time, amended the statutes. Before there was an opportunity to try what would be done under that new law, before there was an opportunity to test it, the Superintendent of the Military Academy, learned and trained in the law, I dare say, recommended that the old policy be returned to. He set his judgment up against that of the entire Congress and advised us to repeal a law that had commended itself to the judgment of both Houses before it could be put in operation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Was not the reason for that, that he used to be consulted about who would be appointed, and thus have a chance to appoint some of his friends, and that now he is not?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I can not answer that question. Those were places that went to the administration, and as I have never been inside the fold I can not say. But he did recommend before it had been tried that a law of Congress enacted without opposition should be repealed. I think it almost approaches impertinence, though not meant to be so, of course. In view of what has actually been done, in view of the entirely satisfactory working of the law, in view of the manifest economy, it ought to be continued, and I believe that it ought to be strengthened. Whether the Board of Visitors should be reduced, as suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], is a question for Congress to determine. I wrote the amendment originally, and I provided for exactly the number now suggested by my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], but it was subsequently increased in the other body. I think a smaller subcommittee would do as well and it would cost less.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is this superintendent absolutely necessary to the service at the Military Academy?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I hardly think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if, in his judgment, the visit of the committee at that time interfered with the academy work, as also intimated by the superintendent?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; my colleague from New Jersey has just answered "not a bit," and I entirely indorse what he says. On the contrary, we dispatched the business promptly and satisfactorily, and came back with a better understanding of what the needs of the academy were with reference to this bill than if we had had the superintendent down here. He would have made two trips, mileage and expenses each time, and possibly have had an officer with him. That also has been saved.

Mr. ANTHONY. I also failed to hear the gentleman's reply to my former question upon the difference between distinguished citizens and Congressmen.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid, now, that a mere Member of Congress will never satisfy the taste of gentlemen who have been so used to "distinguished society." I fear that distinguished society is preferred to economy and mere usefulness. The old style Board of Visitors wrote solemn reports that were published at considerable expense but never read. They were ornamental and distinguished but not useful, and never impressed the Congress.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all that part of the bill commencing with line 24, on page 30, down to and including line 15, page 31, be stricken out without reading. I will say that the Congress has agreed on an exact provision and it is simply a waste of time to read the provision, so I ask unanimous consent that it may be stricken out.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, before the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is put I want to say just a word. It is well known that recently the Congress passed a bill, which is now a law, to accept the substantial gift of Mrs. Russell Sage of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, and that the same be made a part of the military reservation at West Point. When this legislation was under consideration I thought that, on account of the great value of the donation, the least the Congress could do would be to record a vote of thanks to Mrs. Sage. For some reason this was not done. I for one think that omission was a mistake. Mrs. Sage is to-day one of the noblest women in all the world. She is the grandest example in our land of what a rich woman with noble impulses can accomplish for good. She is doing a most commendable and beneficent work along charitable and humanitarian lines. She is entitled not only to the thanks of the Congress for the gift to the Government of Constitution Island, but, in my opinion, she is entitled to the thanks of every true American for the great and the grand and the glorious work she is doing for humanity. God bless Mrs. Sage! God spare her life to do good for many, many years to come! [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, just one word before I move that the committee rise, and that is in reference to the Board of Visitors' business, which has been under discussion here. I want to say this for the new plan, that we have never yet had such information or such valuable information as we had in the preparation of this bill this year as a result of Members of Congress going to West Point and discharging the duties for which they were sent there in place of discharging the duties of great social occasions. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STERLING, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 28059) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy, and had directed him to report the bill with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any one of the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RIVERS AND HARBORS BILL.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 28243) to provide for the repair, maintenance, and preservation of public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether there is to be general debate on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not inform the gentleman.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would state that it is the earnest desire of the committee that the bill be passed this evening.

Mr. KEIFER. If this be so, it is the earnest desire of a good many Members around me that we should pass the bill after we have given it some proper consideration, and if we can not get it we will have to insist on staying here all night before we will agree to pass this bill.

If we can not get that, we will have to insist on sitting here all night before we will agree to pass this bill. If we can have a fair amount of debate to-night, I shall make no unreasonable objection.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would state that a bill from the committee of which my colleague is a member—the sundry civil bill—is to be considered, as I am informed, on Monday; so that if this bill is disposed of, it will have to be disposed of to-day or else take its chances at a later time.

Mr. KEIFER. I will be willing to consider this bill, but we are not willing to take it and pass it in its present state without full consideration; and we can not more than give the gentleman notice that we shall use every means we have to prevent its passage until we have a discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Can not we agree upon some time, I will ask the gentleman from Ohio, with the permission of the Chair?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I have heard from none who desires time in favor of the bill, nor from others opposed to the bill, except from one or two Members who desire to put amendments on the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not desire to say a word upon the bill myself, but the easiest way is to give these men some time.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that general debate close in one hour.

Mr. KEIFER. Two hours.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest a compromise between the two; take an hour and a half.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that it is the object to pass this bill as it is presented. The House may have power to do it, but we want to have some discussion on this matter.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How much time does my colleague desire?

Mr. KEIFER. I have just seen the bill this afternoon. I should be satisfied entirely with an hour myself. I do not want to be factious.

Mr. SULZER. How would you like to have it on the 5th of March? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. You might as well have it on the 5th of March as insist now.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to the bill being considered in a proper way, but I have no idea that any Member here has read the bill, unless it be a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I doubt whether they have all read it. Therefore I think we ought to have some proper consideration in a matter which is carrying in appropriation an amount vastly greater, although it is a mere survey, than the old river and harbor bills carried. We ought to consider it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request for unanimous consent so that there be two hours of general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that there be two hours of general debate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 28243, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to report the bill.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio (during the reading of the bill). I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GILHAMS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman objects.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask that the reading be suspended for a moment. I should like to inquire if any members of the committee desire to discuss this bill, or any special paragraph of it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks if Members desire to discuss the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall want to ask some questions in the five-minute debate.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. On any particular project?

Mr. FITZGERALD. On one or two items in the bill.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Would not the gentleman take the opportunity in the discussion that would be provided under a motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I might want to reserve some points of order and make them. I am not joining in any obstructive tactics.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I want to know if there is anyone who wants to discuss this bill under the five-minute rule? There is but one answer.

Mr. KEIFER. I am trying to make the second answer.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the situation is this: Two members of this committee have desired that a survey for canals, which would be entirely out of place in this bill, should be included in the measure. They were very properly rejected, not only because they do not belong here, but because we have a dozen others quite as meritorious that we felt compelled to turn down. I question whether we should detain this committee and the House here merely to meet such a situation as that if there is no one else who desires to discuss this bill on its merits. Here is a bill that has certain provisions, and it stands or falls on its merits. Now, it seems to me there is no desire for any discussion except for the purpose of obstruction, by reason of disappointment, which has no rational or just basis.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I ought to be allowed to reply. A moment ago I was called out of the door by a gentleman who desired to have a word with me, and in my absence the gentleman in charge of this bill thought he would get the unanimous consent of this committee and defeat the opposition that I have set up to his bill.

The gentleman in charge of this bill says that the measure that I am interested in has no place on the bill. There are three or four just such provisions in this bill, one of which looks to an improvement which, if made, would cost $1,000,000,000, while mine, which is not in this bill, and more meritorious, would only cost about $20,000,000 or $25,000,000. Now, I am not mistaken. I asked simply for a survey. The gentleman turned it down, and in the presence of this committee says that that has no place as a survey on this river and harbor bill, which is little else than a survey bill, with literally hundreds of survey propositions in it.

The committee has put in the bill a provision for a survey of a ship canal paralleling the Atlantic Ocean from Boston, Mass., practically to Key West, Fla., two thousand and more miles, I understand, a project which, if carried out, if the improvement were made, would cost a billion dollars. What I wanted to have considered by the House the gentleman thinks should not be considered, and that is a survey for a ship canal between Lake Erie and the Ohio River.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this method of doing business is conducive either to good order or good humor. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GILHAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GILHAMS. I would like to make a statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have called for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 28243, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House pass the bill (H. R. 28243) to provide for the repair, maintenance, and preservation of public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with the two amendments which I will send to the Clerk's desk, and that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the rules be suspended, that the further reading of the bill H. R. 28243 be dispensed with, and that the House do pass the bill with the following amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 20, strike out the period after the word "eleven," insert a colon, and add the following:

"Provided, That the said dam shall immediately upon its completion become the property of the United States, and that the grantees under the said act of May 1, 1906, shall operate and maintain the other works authorized by the said act in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams having navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906, so far as the provisions are applicable."

On page 43, after the word "yard," in line 6, insert:

"Channel across Newport News middle-ground bar, with a view to obtaining a suitable depth and width between Old Point and Newport News."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. KEIFER. I demand a second on this motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the gentleman from Ohio demanding a second, although I made the demand, if I may have a little time.

Mr. KEIFER. I will give you all the time I have to spare.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois. Is the gentleman from Illinois opposed to the bill?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. I am opposed to part of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman is not opposed to the bill, I think I ought to be recognized. I will give the gentleman from Illinois half my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. At this time, is it permissible to offer an amendment that is germane to this bill and that has already been favorably reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

The SPEAKER. It is not, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Then I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to offer as an amendment at this time a bill that has this morning been favorably reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It is true this bill has been reported, but we have reported it as a separate measure, and I should object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to a second being considered as ordered?

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I ask for the previous question.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no previous question when you move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum is made. Is there objection to ordering a second?

Mr. KEIFER. There is until we find out whether there is a quorum.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. Until we find out whether there is a quorum, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BURTON, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KEIFER, will take their places as tellers.

The House divided, and the tellers reported that there were 117 ayes and 2 noes.

The SPEAKER. It appears to the Chair, after inquiry and examination of the House, that no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, the Clerk will call the roll, and as many as are in favor of ordering a second will, as their names are called, answer "aye," and those opposed "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 223, nays 7, answered "present" 12, not voting 143, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Upon this vote the yeas are 223, the nays 7, present 12, a quorum. A second is ordered. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to twenty minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time. If no one cares to discuss this question, I move the previous question——

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I have witnessed the anxiety of the gentleman to keep the floor and say that nobody wished to speak, and now he tries to move the previous question, a thing entirely out of order. It is the second time, but I happened to be in the room this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] whether he intends to use his time all in one speech at the close or whether he has resigned all of his time now. That is the usual courtesy when we have such motions.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I regret that my colleague takes such an unhappy view of this situation. I can not answer that question at this time. It depends upon the demands that are made upon me by the House as to what I shall do and what points require answer.

Mr. KEIFER. I supposed I had the right to ask the usual question. That is a courtesy among people here. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to call attention to one provision of the bill for a purpose which I will endeavor to make clear. Recently there was introduced into the House, on January 26, a bill authorizing the appointment of a waterways commission. That bill was properly referred, under the rules of the House, to the committee which had jurisdiction of the subject, which was the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That bill has been receiving consideration by that committee. In the pending bill before the House is a provision contained providing for the appointment of a waterways commission. It would have been subject to a point of order if the bill had been considered in Committee of the Whole. It was not my purpose to make a point of order upon the provision, but to call attention to the fact that by the usurpation of jurisdiction by the Rivers and Harbors Committee they were not entitled, when it came to the appointment of that commission, to insist that the commission should be appointed from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The committee which had jurisdiction of the subject was the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. An item is reported, as I say, in the river and harbor bill, an item over which the Rivers and Harbors Committee has no jurisdiction, and about which it has no right to report. I insist that, while under no circumstances would I be a member of the commission, the members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee have an equal right to appointment on the commission with the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and that the same is true of the Committee on Appropriations, which will have to find the money; and the Committee on Ways and Means, which will have to find a way for raising the money; and I might say the same is equally true of any Member of the House, because, by the usurpation of jurisdiction, the committee obtains no title to the naming of the commission.

And I say this with perfect frankness, knowing well, although the distinguished gentleman now at the head of the Rivers and Harbors Committee is soon to be a great gain to the body at the other end of the Capitol [applause] and a great loss to this, that I assume that if this commission shall be appointed during the life of this Congress, regardless of where his activities shall be in the future, the commission will not lose the benefit of his personality, and that in any event that distinguished gentleman will be a member of that committee. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Ohio, in charge of the bill, does not wish to consume some of his time, I yield two minutes' time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILHAMS].

Mr. GILHAMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to make a statement in order to set my position with this House right. The gentleman from Ohio made the statement that I was trying to retard the progress of the passage of the bill because I failed to get my canal proposition upon this bill. I am sorry to see that he feels that way, and I want to say to the House that my only purpose was to secure time and an opportunity that I might offer an amendment to the bill while it was being considered, and I am very sorry at this time that the bill has been taken from the Committee of the Whole House and we are undertaking to pass it under suspension of the rules, because this will give me no opportunity to do the thing which I very much desired.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, no other gentlemen now desiring time, I will occupy a little myself. We are all aware that about three months' time has been devoted, as is claimed by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], in the preparation of this bill. It has come in here late in the session and was only printed last night. It required almost the exclusive attention of that distinguished gentleman and his committee three months to prepare and comprehend it, and he now asks us to-day to be so much wiser than he as to comprehend it inside of two hours, without even being allowed time to read it. That is not all. Under the motion to suspend the rules, it means that the House of Representatives shall vote to pass the bill without its ever being read at the Clerk's desk. We are to know its contents without having read the bill or being allowed to hear it read. The motion to suspend the rules is to pass the bill without its being read. No Member off of that committee, I guess not a single man of this House, has ever read connectedly a single section of the bill——

Mr. MANN. Oh, there are plenty of us who have read it.

Mr. KEIFER. There are not half a dozen in the House outside of the committee who have looked at it until this evening. Now, what does it mean? I remember that during an earlier service of mine in this Congress the country arraigned both parties for passing a river and harbor bill containing an appropriation amounting to $8,000,000. This is only a survey bill and contemplates expenditures running into many millions and most likely hundreds of millions of dollars. It provides for surveys, much of it at a cost worked out through the War Department, but it proposes in addition to this cost to appropriate for surveys, so far as I have looked at it, over $9,000,000, to be immediately available. To be more accurate, one of the bills appropriates $8,185,750; section 2, $500,000; section 3, $600,000; and section 13, $600,000; in all, $9,885,75. This does not include other smaller sums appropriated nor the $50,000 appropriated to commence the junket provided for in section 7 of the bill. Some of us wanted an appropriation of $25,000, and it is said that it is not germane to the bill, but along comes a waterways association and said to the chairman and his committee, "give us a survey to parallel the Atlantic Ocean, running down along the coast from Boston to New York, thence to Baltimore, thence down to the Carolinas, down to St. Augustine or the St. Johns River, Florida, then fellowing down the coast with a maximum depth of canal of 6 feet, as that line seems to be planned, until you reach water that will go out to Key West," and that is germane to this bill and appears in it under the heading, "Intra-Coastal Waterways." That is not all. That is called sometimes an "extra coastal waterway." Then, we get in the bill a so-called "inland waterway" to be surveyed from the Mississippi River through Louisiana and Texas to Bayou Teche and on through Louisiana and Texas to Point Isabel, and thence to the Rio Grande. This is practically to parallel the Gulf of Mexico. That is to be surveyed, as the bill provides, and there are still others of like character.

There is another through or across Florida over to New Orleans and Pensacola Bay along the Gulf of Mexico from St. Georges Sound, Florida, to the Mississippi River, at New Orleans. Another for a "continuous inland waterway across the State of Florida," and still others paralleling sea or ocean navigation. They are along the coast, waterways in each case, with a channel depth of 12 feet. They are deep waterways—ship canals. This whole land, Mr. Speaker, has been alive with interest in inland deep waterways and it has been resounding in oratory in the last year, especially on the importance of deep interior waterways, and this bill contains no provision for even the survey of one such as I have described paralleling salt water somewhere over which navigation is now ample.

What I want, and what the great deep waterway congresses and associations have been demanding, is water transportation through the interior of this country, where the surplus agricultural and manufactured products are produced.

The canal I propose to have built is to connect the waters of the Great Lakes and the Ohio River, and thus link the interior water transportation of the Lakes and the Gulf of Mexico, and this at comparatively small cost.

I have recently—February 2—discussed here at some length the importance, practicability, and necessity for a ship canal over the Miami and Erie Canal from Lake Erie to the Ohio River—Toledo to Cincinnati.

I believe the gentleman [Mr. BURTON of Ohio] in charge of this bill was cheered when he delivered his speech before the great Waterways Congress here, and then he comes in here and opposes all the plans of that congress, and the plans of associations organized for a like purpose. Some men say we want a waterways commission. For what purpose? Of making suggestions at the end of two or three years? What suggestions? That water may be used for navigation? Why, we supposed we knew that when we were younger than some of us are. Make suggestions? Why? These suggestions came from the Father of his Country long ago, more than one hundred years ago, and Jefferson followed him with the suggestion for the very ship canal that I wanted to test the judgment of the House with reference to its being built. The great governor of New York, De Witt Clinton, paid a visit to Ohio about eighty-five years ago to make an investigation when he was one of the commission that was building the Erie Canal in New York. And he made a report on it, and others, great engineers, have made reports recommending the improvement I advocate. We have had plenty of surveys. We do not want suggestions, especially from a congressional committee proposed to be created by section 7 of this bill.

What we want is plans and specifications if we find these waterways are practicable. We do not want mere surveys. We want inland water transportation; and I have simply asked that this House should be allowed to consider whether or not it would be practicable to connect the waters of the Great Lakes from Lake Erie to the Ohio River by a canal with a depth of water greater than the Welland Canal—14 feet—that now carries ocean vessels to and from the Lakes.

Some man put the question and said: "What do you mean? Do you want only 15 feet of water? Why, a vessel that draws 18 feet will not go through it." I thought that question was a foolish one at first; but I found that they did go through just such canals, and they rushed them right through by the use of lighters, as is daily now done by the Welland and other such canals.

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. If this bill is passed as it now stands, would not the constitutional prohibition deny to any Member of this House the right to take an office such as provided in this bill which is created during his term?

Mr. KEIFER. That ought to; but I suppose it will not. [Great laughter.]

The bill, section 7, I see, expressly makes Members of this Sixtieth Congress eligible for appointment on the commission.

What I mean to say, Mr. Speaker, is that a vessel goes through one of these canals like that about to be constructed across the State of New York, with 12 feet of water, but they have lighters for the purpose and take off a part of the freight when necessary. Part of the cargo is taken off the ship and put upon the lighters, which are then towed by the ship through the canal, and then reloaded on the ship when it can sail off to the lake or to the ocean. It has been done frequently, and that has been the plan for effectively using the majority of the ship canals in this country and in Europe for more than half a century.

But I have said enough to emphasize my opposition to passing a bill of this kind that provides for surveys alone that are to cost much over $9,000,000. Many of them were surveyed long before my colleague from Ohio was born and long before even I was born myself, and yet we are to have surveys of them over and over again and a commission of Congressmen to make suggestions to us as to our duty. Otter Creek is to be resurveyed, I see by the bill. I think it is about the fourteenth time in the history of the country it has been surveyed; but the Miami and Erie Canal is not worthy of it, the gentleman thinks. I ask the question, Is not the improvement of the Miami and Erie Canal of the character of the proposed ship canal—proposed by the bill to have surveyed—to parallel the ocean or the Gulf? If this House could vote upon a proposition as to whether we were to tie together for navigable purposes the waters of the Great Lakes and the Ohio River and the Mississippi and the Gulf, I am certain they would vote to do it if it should be found upon survey to be practicable.

Now, I have said enough and done enough simply to emphasize my opposition to the methods adopted to prevent the possibility of getting a vote at this session of Congress upon a proposition so important, so worthy, and so easy to be tested as to its practicability. The proposition was to expend $25,000 to make a survey with plans and specifications. The proposition is to spend but a small sum, $25,000, for this purpose. This is a small sum proposed to be expended for a congressional commission. A bill was introduced a few days since for the purpose of having a waterway commission. It was to expend in the coming three years about $500,000, which would be sufficient to survey twenty such propositions as I favor; and then we would know exactly whether they were each practicable. The bill we are now considering may not require that much to be spent. I look upon a waterway commission as a polite way of saying we will have a junket over the country and no deep waterways. I believe this bill allows them to extend the junket to Europe; and then, in the meantime, needed improvements in the United States that should go on must stand still. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have sometimes listened to arguments and attacks even to which I did not think it was necessary to make reply. I have never known so notable an instance in which it was unnecessary to make reply as in the case of my colleague, notwithstanding his magnificent earnestness. [Great laughter.] I ask for a vote.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BURTON of Ohio; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KEIFER) there were—ayes 216, noes 17.

Accordingly, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 28245), and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate on the bill be closed in ten minutes, five minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and five minutes by myself.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be some time allowed for general debate on this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many million dollars does the bill propose to appropriate?

Mr. SULZER. There are several gentlemen over here who desire time. We should have at least one hour on a side.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say that the time of the session is becoming short. There will be ample opportunity for the consideration and discussion of the various provisions as they are reached in the reading of the bill. This has been the practice for many years in the consideration of the sundry civil bill at the short sessions of Congress. The bill is a large one. General debate that does not pertain to the provisions of the bill will be of no benefit whatever so far as giving the House information is concerned. For that reason I trust that we may close general debate with a short statement, on each side, respecting the general provisions of the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman how many million dollars this bill proposes to appropriate?

Mr. TAWNEY. A little over $137,000,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many different subjects are treated by the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is impossible for me to answer. I do not know.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is impossible for me to give unanimous consent, then, to close debate in ten minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 28245) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, with Mr. WATSON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the sundry civil appropriation bill as reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations carries, in round numbers, $137,000,000.

This sum is made up by a great variety of items and appropriations. There are, however, three principal appropriations recommended in the bill that equal more than one-half of the total amount that the bill carries. The sum of $23,000,000 is recommended for continuing the work of constructing the Panama Canal. Nineteen million dollars, in round numbers, is appropriated for carrying on river and harbor work now under contract and previously authorized by law. There is also the sum of $18,000,000 recommended by this bill for the purpose of carrying on the work of constructing public buildings authorized and now under contract, or authorized and which will be under contract during the next fiscal year.

These three items in the aggregate amount to a little over $72,000,000 of the $137,000,000 which the bill carries. The remaining amount is made up of various appropriations of different sizes, which it is not necessary at this time to state in detail.

Every paragraph in the bill carrying an appropriation will be read, and I propose, Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, as has been the custom in the past, to allow most liberal time for consideration of each specific item; and I therefore prefer not to make any further general statement regarding the bill.

Every Member in this House knows that the appropriations carried in the sundry civil bill are expended in every congressional district in the United States and in all our island possessions. It would therefore require a great deal more time than is ordinarily allowed for general debate on appropriation bills to cover the entire bill at this time in a general statement.

I desire also to make this important statement, that the amount carried in the bill is almost $27,000,000 less than the amount estimated for sundry civil expenditures.

I will yield to the gentleman from New York ten minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like, Mr. Chairman, to be recognized in my own right. I suggest that the gentleman from Minnesota let me be recognized in my own right. It will not affect what the gentleman wants to accomplish. I have had but one request for time on this side. One gentleman desires an hour on Monday. He is unable to proceed to-day. No one else has made any request for time in general debate. In what I shall say I can complete my remarks in five or ten minutes.

It would be very desirable if the gentleman from Minnesota would either arrange that an hour could be had on Monday, or give assurance that when he brings in the general deficiency bill the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] will be assured of one hour's time in general debate.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that it will be impossible to give positive assurance as to how much time will be devoted to general debate on the general deficiency bill. The bill has not been prepared yet, although the subcommittee expects to get to work on it to-morrow, and have it completed in season to follow the sundry civil, if possible. There are a great many conference reports that will have to be considered during the two remaining days of the session. There has but one appropriation bill passed both Houses, and become a law, and that is the urgent deficiency bill. Therefore, all of the regular twelve appropriation bills must either pass one House or the other, and be agreed to in conference, and the conference reports be agreed to. It will therefore be manifest to every Member of the House, that I can not at this time give assurance for time.

If there is an opportunity for general debate on the general deficiency bill, I shall have no objection to granting one hour's time on each side. I have had no request for general debate on this side on this bill. In view of the importance of the bill, the great variety of subjects that it covers, and the aggregate amount of appropriations, I insist on getting it to the other side of the legislative department of the Government as soon as possible, that they may consider it there. I hope we can get along without any general debate. I can only make the statement to the gentleman from New York that if there is opportunity for general debate on the general deficiency bill, I shall have no objection to allowing an hour on each side. I speak of the vast amount of business that the House has to consider and pass upon before the close of the session, which may possibly cut off any opportunity for general debate hereafter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course the condition is somewhat different now than it would be at a session of Congress similar to this. We will convene again on the 15th of March, and there is no pressing necessity to hurry the disposition of the appropriation bills in order to have them passed before the 4th of March. It would be much better to take ample time to consider them thoroughly and properly, even if it necessitates the use of some of the time that will surely hang on our hands during the next session. The position that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] is in is so peculiar that I had hoped that the suggestion that he use time would come from that side of the House instead of him asking for time. He made a speech here, which I do not characterize in any way; but a number of gentlemen on that side of the House have since felt called upon to speak as the result of the speech of the gentleman from Illinois. They have all asked, or insisted, or demanded, that he make another speech. I am simply asking now that an arrangement be made that will give him an opportunity to make the speech that has been insisted upon by the Members on that side of the House. Whatever the little inconvenience to which it might put the House, I am sure that that side of the House will do everything possible to permit him to do that which they have been insisting that he should do.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that his intimation that there will be plenty of time for the consideration of appropriation bills in the extra session of Congress to be called, applies with greater force to the time that will be available to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] in which to make his speech, rather than to have us delay public business now for that purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think not, for this reason: Some one has intimated to me that some things stated by the gentleman referred in some way to the present Executive. I wish to say that so far as I am concerned any criticism of the present Executive which I have to make I desire to make before he leaves office, and everybody on this side of the House has the same desire, whatever may be the disposition on that side of the House. For that reason I hope that if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] has anything to say that may be considered or construed as a criticism of the present occupant of the White House, in justice to all parties, he be given the opportunity before the expiration of this session of Congress. Perhaps the gentleman will agree to permit the gentleman from Illinois to occupy an hour on Monday.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that my understanding is that the gentleman from Illinois has already occupied between two and three hours on the same subject on which he again desires to address the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I so understand; but it is a subject that is almost inexhaustible, and he could well occupy much more time on the same subject with benefit to the country.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not do that. I want to say a few words on the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the gentleman to say that he did not desire to say anything on the bill at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I said "a few words."

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible in any reasonable time to make any review of the provisions of this bill. They cover every department of the Government and every conceivable subject for which money is appropriated for the Government. There are many items in the bill which will properly be discussed and debated in the House and some of them which will justify criticisms of the methods of the present administration. In my judgment it will be more conducive to the proper disposition of these subjects to reserve what may be said until the various items are reached. Some of these items will not be agreed to, in my judgment, with the consent of the great majority of this side of the House. I simply wish this side of the House to know that there are many matters in the bill impossible to discuss now in the few moments given by the gentleman from Minnesota, although I should be pleased to do so could I have the time. I, however, hope to give to the committee, and particularly to the Members on this side of the House, such information as will enable them to vote intelligently on the various items as they are reached in the consideration of the bill.

If the gentleman from Minnesota will not permit any further time of course we are powerless, but I do hope that after further reflection he will consent to permit this discussion, which his own side has been so insistent should be continued, to be completed as early as possible, by allowing it to proceed on Monday.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WATSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the appeal of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the sundry civil bill be closed in two hours, one hour to be under the control of the gentleman from New York and one hour under the control of myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and hereby are, authorized to cancel their signatures to the enrolled bill H. R. 25155, "An act to amend an act approved July

1, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,'" and that the said bill be reenrolled with the insertion of the words "third paragraph of the" after the words "That the," in the first line after the enacting words of said bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what this does.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There was a mistake made in this bill. Section 7 of the organic act of July 1, 1902, contained four or five paragraphs. This bill was intended to amend only paragraph 3 of that section, but the words "third paragraph of the" were omitted, and therefore, if the bill were enacted in that form, it would in effect repeal all of that section except paragraph 3. It was a mistake, that is all, and this resolution carries out what was intended by the original bill when it was passed.

Mr. GARRETT. This resolution simply causes the act to be enrolled as it passed?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It causes it to be reenrolled so that it will amend paragraph 3, and thus carry out the intent of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. Was that a mistake made in the enrolling room or a mistake made in the bill as it passed?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It was a mistake in the bill as it passed.

Mr. GARRETT. And not in the enrolling room.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And not in the enrolling room. This is a concurrent resolution and was drawn after consultation with the Speaker's clerk, Mr. Hinds; in fact he drew the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

So the resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16269. An act authorizing the extension of Ninth street NW.;

H. R. 17303. An act authorizing the extension of Girard street NW. from its western terminus to Fifteenth street NW.;

H. R. 27425. An act to provide for the parole of juvenile offenders committed to the National Training School for Boys, Washington, D. C., and for other purposes;

H. R. 12678. An act for the widening of Twentieth street NW., District of Columbia;

H. R. 16747. An act to amend an act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act for the opening of Mills avenue NE. from Rhode Island avenue to Twenty-fourth street;"

H. R. 19762. An act to reimburse the postmaster at Sandborn, Ind.;

H. R. 23699. An act to grant to John T. Rivett privilege to make commutation of his homestead entry;

H. R. 25149. An act to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways, District of Columbia;

H. R. 26472. An act to provide for the extension of Rittenhouse street, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 24152. An act for the widening and extension of Massachusetts avenue SE., from its present terminus near Fortieth street SE., to Bowen road;

H. R. 17171. An act for the relief of Benjamin F. Curry;

H. R. 23864. An act authorizing the widening and extension of Minnesota avenue SE. from its present terminus near Pensylvania avenue SE. to the Sheriff road;

H. R. 21019. An act to reimburse Agnes M. Harrison, postmaster at Wheeler, Miss., for loss of money-order remittance;

H. R. 4307. An act for the relief of E. J. Reed;

H. R. 3844. An act for the relief of E. L. Simpson;

H. R. 24833. An act to declare and enforce the forfeiture provided by section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States;"

H. R. 26466. An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Burlington, Iowa;

H. R. 18600. An act for the relief of John M. Hill;

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess until five minutes to 12 to-morrow, or 11.55.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, is not to-morrow set aside for eulogies?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. It is a legislative day and we could recess until to-morrow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if we recess the legislative day of to-morrow will not be Sunday.

The SPEAKER. We can make Sunday a legislative day, as the House has already done by unanimous consent, and we can recess until 11.55.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. If we take this recess, to what hour would it be?

The SPEAKER. To 11.55.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thought it was 2 o'clock when we were to have these eulogies.

Mr. MANN. One order is set for 2 o'clock and one order for 12 o'clock.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The question I want to ask is this: When we meet tomorrow morning, without any limitation being put on the House, can not it enter into any kind of legislation that it wants to?

Mr. KEIFER. They do not do that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How do you know?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the order:

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, by unanimous consent, ordered that there be a session of the House at 12 m. Sunday, February 21, for the delivery of eulogies on the life, character, and public services of the late Mr. WILEY.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Unless the House adjourn before 12 o'clock to-morrow, could that be done under that order?

The SPEAKER. How is that?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unless to-morrow the House adjourn at the expiration of this recess that is now suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota, could the House operate under the order read by the Chair?

The SPEAKER. It could meet under a recess clearly——

Mr. SHERLEY. Could it? We will not be meeting on Sunday; we will be meeting on the legislative day of last Monday.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion I will ask unanimous consent that nothing be considered to-morrow except eulogies and a motion to take a recess until the following day.

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion the Chair will designate Representative SMITH of Iowa to act as Speaker pro tempore to-morrow.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 21, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Mr. SMITH of Iowa, as Speaker pro tempore.

The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, in whom we live and move and have our being; we would pour out the oblations of our hearts in gratitude and praise to Thee, the dispenser of all good gifts, and hallow Thy name in a faithful and unselfish devotion to Thee and our fellow-men, and thus prove ourselves worthy of all the gifts Thou hast bestowed upon us. We thank Thee for that spirit down deep in the hearts of men which recognizes and appreciates the nobility of soul in their fellows, which displays itself in a faithful service to the public weal, for this special service to-day, sacred to the memory of men who have conspicuously served their country in the Congress of the United States, and passed on to their reward. Grant, oh most merciful Father, that their example may serve as beacon lights to guide us and those who shall come after us to high and noble living. Comfort the friends, colleagues, and families of the departed, and help them to look forward with bright anticipations to that larger life beyond the grave, where there shall be no more parting, and where God shall wipe all tears from all faces, and where peace and happiness shall reign forever. In Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of Monday, February 15, was read and approved.

DEATH OF HON. DANIEL L. D. GRANGER.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolutions, which I send to the Clerk's desk, in regard to the death of my recent colleague, Hon. DANIEL L. D. GRANGER.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

House resolution 582.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tribute to the memory of the Hon. DANIEL L. D. GRANGER, late a Member of this House from the State of Rhode Island.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, upon the passage of the resolutions, in view of the fact that the present Congress is so near its close and Members can not have an opportunity for a special occasion, I will ask unanimous consent that Members desiring to do so may have leave to print remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public services of Mr. GRANGER during the remainder of the present session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that Members may have leave to print remarks with reference to the life, character, and public services of the late Mr. GRANGER during the remainder of the session. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

EULOGIES ON HON. ARIOSTO A. WILEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This hour has been set apart for exercises in memory of the life, character, and public services of the Hon. ARIOSTO A. WILEY, and the Clerk will read the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That there be a session of the House at 12 m. Sunday, February 21, for the delivery of eulogies on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. ARIOSTO A. WILEY, late a Member of this House from Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 583.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ARIOSTO APPLING WILEY, late a Member of this House from the State of Alabama, which occurred at Hot Springs, Va., June 17, 1908.

Resolved, That the business of the House is now suspended that opportunity may be given to pay tribute to his memory.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public service, the House at the conclusion of the memorial exercises of the day shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] will take the chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, we will all agree that the greatest pleasure that comes to us from a membership in the House of Representatives springs from the strong, warm friendships that we form among our associates, and that there is no sadder experience that confronts us as Members of this body than when we are called upon to mourn the loss of one of our comrades.

ARIOSTO A. WILEY was a friend of many years standing; I knew him well long before he was elected to Congress, and I share with the others who knew him in feeling deeply the great loss that has come to us. It is impossible for any of us to pay a just tribute to our silent and absent friend; we can only admire some of his many good deeds and leading characteristics. One side of his life reveals the soldier, another gives us a view of him as an able and strong lawyer, and when we look into the fading light of the past, we love and admire him most for the warm and generous characteristics that bound him to us as a friend. His life work speaks more eloquently for him than the words of his former colleagues here; we can only say that we will ever remember and cherish the charm of manner, the warmth of heart, the honesty of character of his true life as long as time shall last for us.

Some of our comrades pass to the great beyond, and when they are gone there is little left to say except "Amen. There are others who fill our hearts and minds with tender memories and sweet remembrances of the days that are dead that can never come back to us, and our souls revolt against the bitter decree that has snapped asunder the ties of friendship that bound our earthly destinies together.
